1. Begin your ſtrictneſs at the right end, in entering the ſtrait gate by a ſound converſion, Luke xiii. 24. Unconverted ſtrict folk their caſe is moſt hopeleſs, Mat. xxi. 31, 32. Solomon gives the reaſon, Prov. xxvi. 12. Seeſt thou a man wiſe in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

2. Set before your eyes the true rule of ſtrictneſs, namely, the law of God and the example of Chriſt. The conſtitutions of churches, opinions, practices, and examples of parties, getting the room of theſe, have in all ages bred much ſpurious ſtrictneſs. But ‘to the law and to the teſtimony: if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them,’ Iſa. viii. 20. If we be Chriſtians, let Chriſt's example be our rule.

3. Put on the bands of true ſtrictneſs, being impreſſed habitually with the authority of God on your conſciences, and the conſtraining love of Chriſt in your hearts. Theſe are the ſtraitening bands of God's making, Exod. xx. 2. I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage.

4. Be well apprized of the matter of true ſtrictneſs. It lies only in things wherein God has bound us up, not in things wherein we bind up ourſelves without his authority. And ye may know it by theſe two marks.

(1.) It bears hard on the natural inclination and luſts of the heart. Theſe find themſelves ſtraitened by the band, Matth. v. 29. If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, &c. Whereas ſpurious ſtrictneſs is agreeable to theſe, and feeds and nouriſhes them. So the former is difficult, the latter is eaſy to the natural man. What an eaſy thing is it to maintain a ſtrict opinion, to ſeparate from a church, when there is no hazard? But to maintain a ſtrict practice in the ſubſtantial duties of religion, to ſeparate from the unregenerate carnal world in one's ſtate and frame of life, is not eaſy.

(2.) It is a promoter of ſanctification of the ſoul, and makes one a better man, advancing the ſtrength of grace, and conformity to the image of God in the whole man, Rom. xiv. 17. What the better were the Phariſees that they would not eat with unwaſhen hands, nor go near publicans and ſinners? How much more may ſtrictneſs be known to be trifling and ſpurious, that has a native tendency to bring leanneſs on the ſoul?

5. laſtly, Be ſtrict in the faith and a holy life. And,

(1.) Let every truth be dear to you, ſticking to it on all hazards, without giving up with it, Prov. xxiii. 23. Buy the truth, and ſell it not. For none of the truths of God, but are more precious than all we have to loſe for them. But it is a weakneſs to think, that there is no keeping of the truth without breaking of the peace with them that differ, Rom. xiv. 14. compared with ver. 3. Phil. iii. 15, 16. while the foundation truths remain for the bond of it.

(2.) Be ſtrict in enquiring into ſin and duty in particular caſes, habitually, Prov. iii. 6. Ye profeſs to take Chriſt for your leader; then conſult him in all things, that ye may know what he calls you to by his word and providence. That is a ſtrict man that obſerves the motions of the pillar of cloud and fire, and its reſts, that he may move thereby or reſt.

(3.) Act in all things by a religious principle, Col. iii. 17. 1 Cor. x. 31. Since the law of God is a perfect rule, it cannot but reach all human actions; either by particular precepts, or general ones, ſuch as Phil. iv. 8. and theſe reaching temporal as well as ſpiritual matters. It is true ſtrictneſs then to act ſo.

(4.) Never conſider for your practice, whether a thing be but a little ſin or a great one. If it be but a ſin at all, avoid it, tamper not with it, 1 Theſſ. v. 22. Abſtain from all appearance of evil, Jude ver. 23. Hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh. Be it never ſo little, it will leave a great ſtain on the ſoul; which, if not purged by the blood of Chriſt, will drown it in perdition. And little ſins make way for greater.

(5.) In doubtful practices, wherein ye are not clear, chuſe always the ſide ſafeſt for the conſcience, whatever there be to draw you to the other. If there is a caſe where ye are not ſure, whether the doing of ſuch a thing is ſinful or not; are ye ſure there will be no ſin in forbearing it? Then let it alone, Rom. xiv. 5. 23.

(6.) Be ſtrict obſervers of your duty to God, in all the inſtances thereof required in the firſt table. Do not make light of dropping a duty now and then, as prayer in ſecret, or in your family, a ſermon, &c. The caſe and loſs of Thomas deſerves conſideration here, John xx. 24, 25. But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didy- mus, was not with them when Jeſus came. The other diſciples therefore ſaid unto him, We have ſeen the Lord. But he ſaid unto them, Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe. If providence bars you from it, it is not you that drop it, but God ceaſeth to require it.

(7.) Be pointed and nice in your duty to man, in all the inſtances thereof required in the ſecond table. Remember the flaw in the Phariſees ſtrictneſs, Matth. xxiii. 23. Walk preciſely by the rules of juſtice towards others; being readier to quit a halfpenny to them, than to keep two pennies off them, as ye would rather abide a ſtreſs by cold, than take a burning coal in your boſom. Be juſt and faithful in your buſineſs, whatever it is, as knowing, that whatever is gained by unfaithfully done buſineſs, is unjuſtly got, and ſtolen with you. Stick preciſely to truth, hate and deſpiſe lying. Looſe talkers, that have not a ſtrict regard to truth in common life, whatever regard they pretend to divine truths, are and ſhall have their part with the abominable, Rev. xxi. 8. More particularly,

(8.) Be conſcientiouſly ſtrict in the duties of your relations, as knowing your relational ſtations are thoſe wherein God has ſet you for the time, to take trial of you. If you are a parent or child, a huſband or wife, a maſter or ſervant, cloſely live up to the duty of your relation; and let your ſtrictneſs be of a piece, and let not a But fall in your relation: a very good man or woman, but a tyrannical huſband, &c. And where undutifulneſs of your relatives mar the exerciſe of ſofter principles, learn to act by a principle of juſtice and reaſon.

(9.) Have a ſtrict and awful regard to the character of ſuperiority that God has given to any over you; for that ſuperiority is a piece of the divine image. It is looſeneſs of conſcience, not true ſtrictneſs, that takes away all ſenſe of that, and allows no regard to them that bear it, unleſs their perſonal character be winning; that is in effect, they will regard them for their own ſake, but not for God's ſake, Jude verſe 8. 1 Pet. ii. 18.

(10.) Be the ſame in ſecret as in public. Let your ſtrictneſs take place where no eye ſees but God's, as well as where the world's eye is on you: for if it be of the right ſtamp, it will be ſo, Acts xxiv. 16. For the law and conſcience are the ſame, and God is the ſame in ſecret as before men; and if you are not the ſame, you are ſtrict only to be noticed by men.

(11.) laſtly, Be ſtrict obſervers of your own heart, as well as your life, Prov. iv. 23. 'Keep thy heart with all 'diligence: for out of it are the iſſues of life.' If ye be never ſo ſtrict in the outward man, it will be lothſome hypocriſy, if the inner man is not watched, Matth. xxiii. 27, 28. Rom. ii. 29.

Thus ordering your life, ye will be perſons of Chriſtian ſtrictneſs, whom Chriſt will own, and which he will approve at the laſt day, when the looſeneſs of the world, and their ſpurious ſtrictneſs, will both appear naught.

Doct. V. laſt. Few of mankind find the ſtrait gate, and narrow way leading to life.

In diſcourſing this ſubject, I ſhall,

I. Explain the doctrine.

II. Confirm it.

III. Give the reaſons of it.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. To explain this point, we ſhall, 1. Conſider few their finding the ſtrait gate and narrow way. 2. Shew in what reſpects they are few.

Firſt, We ſhall conſider few their finding the ſtrait gate and narrow way. And it may be taken up as importing theſe things following.

1. All are naturally off from it, Rom. iii. 23. Mankind was carried off from it in Adam, even all of them to a man, verſ. 12. And man's natural ſtate is a ſtate of wandering, wandering on the mountains of vanity, in the wilderneſs, like loſt ſheep, ſtraying paſſengers; and behold the end of that their courſe, Prov. xxi. 16. The man that wandereth out of the way of underſtanding, ſhall remain in the congregation of the dead.

2. It is not eaſily found out by any, 1 Pet. iv. 18. In all caſes the beſt things are hardeſt to reach; ſo while the wide gate and broad way are fallen on with all eaſe, the ſtrait gate and narrow way are a darned road that one cannot eaſily light on. We are ſo liable to paſſions, prejudices, and miſapprehenſions about it, it is ſo far above our natural capacities, that there is no finding it out without the Spirit of Chriſt point it out to us effectually.

3. It is but few that diſcover it, ſo as on good grounds to be able to ſay, This is it. There are ſo many falſe gates and ways, that ſeem to be it, but are not, that they are rare perſons who are not deceived by one or other of them.

4. Few enter by the ſtrait gate, and travel the narrow way, though there is no other paſſage for ſinners unto life. It is a gate and way but little frequented. It is not many that are brought within ſight of them; but of theſe many draw back, and but few enter and go on. There are but few regenerate perſons, ſound converts, truly holy ones, in the world. The moſt part go in the way of ſin, few in the way of holy obedience, walking in Chriſt, in the way of God's commandments.

5. laſtly, Howbeit there are ſome that do enter by that gate, and travel that way. In the worſt of times there are always ſome ſound converts, truly holy in the world, and will be to the end, Matth. xvi. 18. When their number is compleated, few as they are, the world will be at an end.

Secondly, In what reſpects are they few?

1. They are not few abſolutely, or conſidered in themſelves. If we conſider the general aſſembly of them, Heb. xii. 23. them that have, do, and ſhall find it, they are a goodly company. They are a great multitude, ſo great that they paſs all human numbering, Rev. vii. 9. They are ſo many, that they are like the ſtars, innumerable, Gen. xv. 5. compared with Gal. iii. 29. The ſhed blood of a Saviour ſprings up in an innumerable iſſue.

They are upon the way but by parcels; being like an army who began their march at the founding of the march, (Gen. iii. 15.) to the heavenly city, have continued it all along ſince that time to this day, and will continue it yet for a time, viz. to the end of the world. It is now four thouſand years and more, ſince the van, the firſt generation, ended their march, and were ſettled in the city, the righteous Abel being the firſt man that entered it; and ſince that time all along the following have been entering in their order. There is a part of that hoſt now upon the way advancing to the city; but the rear is not as yet begun to move. They that are upon the way at a time, are in different nations and parts of the earth; they in the ſame country are often but few of them together upon one ſpot. Hence ſpeaking what they ſee and feel, their mouths are filled with ſuch complaints of ſolitude as theſe, Pſal. xii. 1. Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaſeth: for the faithful faileth from among the children of men. Mic. vii. 1. Wo is me, for I am as when they have gathered the ſummer fruits, as the grape gleanings of the vintage. But ſtay till the whole hoſt have finiſhed their march, and appear in one body in the heavenly city; they will be there ſuch a vaſt multitude as no man can number, but the man Chriſt their captain; whoſe underſtanding is infinite, becauſe he is God.

Let not the fewneſs of them that find it, fright any from it, becauſe they cannot think of being ſolitary, wanting much company. For it is but for a little by the way that they will be tried with ſolitarineſs. They that live godly in the lonelieſt ſhiel, ſhall ere long be for ever in a glorious throng, where they will have glorious company.

2. They are nevertheleſs few comparatively, in compariſon with thoſe that entering by the wide gate, go the broad way. Though conſidered by themſelves, they are a great multitude; yet compared with them in number, they fall ſhort of them. The regenerate are few in compariſon with the unregenerate, ſound converts with the unconverted, the truly holy with the unholy, ſaints with ſinners, thoſe that find the ſtrait gate with thoſe entering the wide gate.

II. To confirm this heavy truth, we ſhall take a twofold view, to clear it. 1. A view of the ſcripture-account of this matter. 2. A view of the world.

Firſt, We ſhall take a view of the ſcripture-account of this matter.

1. Our Lord expreſly tells us, that of the many called, few are choſen, Matth. xx. 16. and xxii. 14. Now, all thoſe that enter the ſtrait gate, and are on the narrow way, are choſen, Rev. xvii. 14. Faith is the faith of God's elect, Tit. i. 1. and they only are brought unto holy obedience, 1 Pet. i. 2. All the elect are called, Rom. viii. 30. But all the called externally by the goſpel, are not elect or choſen: on the contrary, many are called that way, and but a few choſen: ſo that of thoſe to whom the goſpel-call comes, there are but few choſen, and brought in by the ſtrait gate to the narrow way; the multitude of them ſtill wander. And then many are not even externally called.

2. Chriſt's flock is of thoſe, who, entering by the ſtrait gate, go the narrow way, following him, John x. 27. Cant. i. 8. But his flock is a very little one, viz. in compariſon with the devil's drove, Luke xii. 32. 'Fear 'not, little flock; for it is your father's good pleaſure 'to give you the kingdom.' In vain will one pretend to reſtrict that to the diſciples or believers then preſent; ſince it agrees to all his to the end of the world, verſ. 35. to 40. His children are comparatively ſo few in the world, that they are for ſigns and wonders, Iſa. viii. 18. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord have given me, are for ſigns, and for wonders in Iſrael. A certain evidence, that they are very rare. And that this is meant of Chriſt, is clear from Heb. ii. 13. Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me. Iſrael was a typical people, choſen out of the world, few in compariſon of the reſt of the world; and Chriſt's flock are his Iſrael.

3. The ſcripture repreſents them under ſuch terms as reſpect a greater multitude from whom they are diſtinguiſhed. They are the firſt-born, Heb. xii. 23. And how few the firſt-born are in compariſon of other children, every body knows, being but one of each family, even of the moſt numerous families: The firſt fruits, Rev. xiv. 4. James i. 18. But how ſmall are theſe in compariſon with the whole harveſt? So the ſcripture account ſtates them but few.

Secondly, Let us take a view of the world. In whatever period we caſt our eye on it, we will find that ſtill the broad way men were the multitude, the other the few.

1. The generation before the flood was ſuch. Good men were rare in it, but evil men abounded exceedingly. What a character have they? Gen. vi. 11, 12. 'The earth alſo was corrupt before God; and the earth 'was filled with violence. And God looked upon the 'earth, and behold, it was corrupt; for all fleſh had 'corrupted his way upon the earth.' And the flood ſweeping all away but eight perſons, clears it demonſtratively, that there were very few, if any, godly among them. The apoſtle calls them the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet. ii. 5.

2. From the flood to the calling of Abraham, how few were good men! That mighty apoſtaſy headed by Nimrod, who with his followers built the tower of Babel, demonſtrates this, Gen. xi. they being ſuch a vaſt company, that they were divided into many nations with the confuſion of their languages: while the original holy tongue remained with the race of Shem, that had no hand in that rebellion againſt heaven; as it did alſo, I think, with the Canaanites that were engaged in it. But then even Shem's race was fearfully degenerate when Abraham was called, Joſh. xxiv. 2.

3. From Abraham to Moſes, what a doleful caſe was the world in, ſunk in idolatry and profanity! I will by no means ſay, that in theſe days there was no true religion or godlineſs, but in Abraham's family. Melchizedec, Iſhmael, &c. were good men: but certainly they were few in theſe days; ten could not be found in Sodom. In Jacob's family itſelf Rachel had ſtolen her father's images, Jacob had occaſion to purge his houſe of ſtrange gods. How low was religion ſunk even with them, while they were in Egypt? See Ezek. xx. 6, 7, 8. Rom. v. 13.

4. From Moſes to Chriſt, or from the erecting of the Jewiſh church, and all along under the law, till the ſetting up of the goſpel-kingdom among the Gentiles, by the apoſtles, making the New-Teſtament church, there was the ſame face of affairs in the world. The ceremonial law was the hedge of the church, ſeparating her from all other ſocieties, and encloſing her among the Jews, and the few proſelytes that came to her from among the nations. The reſt of the nations in the world at that time were ſunk in idolatry, ignorant of the true God, and the acceptable way of worſhipping him, Acts xiv. 15, 16. And what a figure made the Jewiſh church generally during that time, at every turn going off to idolatry, profanity ſpreading, formality prevailing, may be learned from their prophets, whom from time to time they murdered, till at length they murdered the Lord of glory, Matth. xxiii. 31, 32. Acts vii. 52. How few was the number of the truly godly even among them in all ages? What a heavy life had Moſes among them? David complains, Pſal. xii. 1. 'Help, Lord, for the 'godly man ceaſeth; for the faithful fail from among 'the children of men.' Iſa. i. 9. 'Except the Lord of 'hoſts had left unto us a very ſmall remnant, we ſhould 'have been as Sodom, and we ſhould have been like 'unto Gomorrah.' Jer. ix. 2. 'Oh that I had in the 'wilderneſs a lodging-place of wayfaring men, that I 'might leave my people, and go from them; for they 'be all adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men.' Mic. vii. 1. 'Wo is me, for I am as when they have 'gathered the ſummer fruits, as the grape-gleanings of 'the vintage: there is no cluſter to eat; my ſoul de'ſired the firſt ripe fruit.'

5. From the ſetting up of the New-Teſtament church till the grand apoſtaſy under Antichriſt, the narrow way was ſtill trode by few in compariſon; as is evident from the accounts we have in the New-Teſtament, the perſecutions every where raiſed againſt the apoſtles, and the ſtate of the churches quickly after their erection, as Corinth, Galatia, and the ſeven churches in Aſia. For the firſt three hundred years, Paganiſm continued the national eſtabliſhed religion in the empire, and Chriſtians were treated as ſlaughter-ſheep. When peace was reſtored, and Chriſtianity was eſtabliſhed by law, damnable hereſies broke in among them, and particularly Ariaiſm overſpread all; and the apoſtaſy went on, till it iſſued in the darkneſs and apoſtaſy under Antichriſt.

6. During the time of the reign of Antichriſt, until the reformation, a thick darkneſs overſpread the Chriſtian world. It ſo prevailed, that all the world wondered after the beaſt, Rev. xiii. 3. that is, the Chriſtian, and particularly the European world. Thoſe on the narrow way were ſo few, that they are repreſented by two witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, Rev. xi. 3.

7. Laſtly, From the reformation to this day, is the laſt period the world has yet ſeen, and that we account our own times; which, howſoever they have increaſed the number of the godly, beyond what they were before the reformation, yet afford but a melancholy view of the fewneſs of them on the narrow way. For,

1. There is not a third part of the world that profeſſes Chriſtianity at this day! ſo that were they all godly that are baptized, and profeſs the name of Chriſt, they would be but few. Nay, it is reckoned, that dividing the world into thirty parts, nineteen of theſe are inhabited by Pagans, who know not the true God; ſix by Jews and Mahometans, who reject Chriſt, not acknowledging him the Saviour of the world. So five only of thirty remain profeſſing Chriſtianity.

2. Of theſe five, two are reckoned of the communion of the Greek church, who have a very miſerable face of Chriſtianity among them; denying the ſouls of the faithful departed to be admitted to the beatific viſion till after the reſurrection; praying for the dead; admitting children at ſeven years of age to the ſacrament of the ſupper, thinking they then begin to ſin; adorning their churches with pictures; miniſters and people ſunk in groſs ignorance. The other remaining three parts are divided between the Popiſh and the Proteſtant churches, the former being idolaters and Antichriſtian.

3. laſtly, In the Proteſtant churches there are but few that appear to be on the narrow way, in compariſon with thoſe therein on the broad way. There are multitudes that are, according to the ſcripture, to be caſt out of that happy number; ſuch as,

1. Groſs heretics, ſunk in fundamental errors, denying the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, his ſatisfaction, his Godhead, blaſpheming the Trinity. Of which ſort not a few are to be found in Proteſtant churches; not to mention the Deiſts, who regard neither Chriſt nor Antichriſt, rejecting the Bible and the goſpel by the lump. Theſe ſurely are none of the number, Gal. v. 19, 20, 21. 'Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe; Adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, ſtrife, ſeditions, hereſies, envyings, murders, drunkenneſs, revellings, and ſuch like; of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God.' Jude ver. 4. 'For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of God unto laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.'

2. The groſsly ignorant. What ſwarms of theſe are to be found in the churches, who have no tolerable meaſure of the fundamental principles? We may, by obſerving how many ſuch are among thoſe on whom pains are taken to inſtruct them, gueſs how they abound in countries and congregations where no tolerable care is taken of that matter. So that the bulk of people in many places are careleſs about and quite rude in theſe things. Now, it is a people of no underſtanding: therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour, Iſa. xxvii. 11.

3. The profane, who are openly vitious in their lives, walking in the broad way with a witneſs. Theſe every where abound, having nothing of Chriſtianity but the name, are a public nuiſance to ſociety, and therefore a ſcandal to the Chriſtian profeſſion; which has no doubt contributed to the bringing of Chriſtianity under contempt, Gal v. 19. 20. forecited.

4. Mere moraliſts, who lead a civil life in the world, as good neighbours in ſociety, but worſhip not God, if it is not in the public congregations, and have not ſo much as a form of godlineſs. Theſe alſo muſt be caſt out, Matth. v. 20. Except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.

5. laſtly, Naughty profeſſors of religion; ſuch as,

1. Thoſe who are a ſcandal to a profeſſion, by their habitual courſe of untenderneſs of life. They will talk of religion, but in their walk there is nothing of it to be ſeen. They will go about religious duties, but then their tongues, hands, and feet go at random all the reſt of their time, as if they did theſe to get leave to walk licentiouſly; as was the caſe with the whore, Prov. vii. 14, 15. 'I have peace offerings with me: this day have I paid my vows. Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to ſeek thy face, and I have found thee.'

2. They who, though they are regular in the bulk of their way, yet vent their naughtineſs in ſome one or other ſcandalous practice, hanging about them, ſuch as injuſtice, lying, evil-ſpeaking, intolerable pride and ſelf-conceit, deceitfulneſs, &c. This makes ſuch ſecret diſguſts among profeſſors, alienating their affections, Mat. v. 19.

3. Thoſe who are as blameleſs in the outward man, as human frailty permits; yet ſtill retain ſome idol or idols of jealouſy in the heart, and never come to a ſincere compliance with the whole will of God revealed to them, Pſal lxvi. 18. and cxix. 6.

4. laſtly, Unexperienced profeſſors, ſtrangers to the work of grace on the hearts, and the life of God on their ſouls; who have no experience of converting, regenerating grace; and no acquaintance with the life of faith, the ſpiritual combat, and communion with God in duties, John iii. 3. 2 Tim. iii. 5.

Caſt out theſe, how few do remain! So it is evident as the light, that few of mankind find the ſtrait gate and narrow way leading to life.

III. I ſhall give the reaſons of the point: or, whence it is that few find the ſtrait gate and narrow way. It ariſeth from,

1. The natural blindneſs of mens minds, Eph. iv. 17, 18. They cannot diſcern it in its heavenly excellency, beauty and glory, 1 Cor. ii. 14. They hear of it, and are pointed to it, but their eyes are held that they cannot ſee it nor find it, as the Sodomites about the walls of Lot's houſe. And till the eyes of one's underſtanding are opened by the Spirit, he will never take it up: and that is the privilege of few, Iſa. liii. 1. Human learning, wit, and ſenſe, avail not here.

2. The perverſeneſs of mens wills, John v. 40. Men naturally have a liſtleſſneſs for it: they care not for it, therefore they do not find it. Nay, they have an averſion to it, their hearts are ſet againſt it, Rom. viii. 7. And till the will be renewed, they will never come on the narrow way. A day of power, the mercy of few, is neceſſary to bring them to it, Pſal. cx. 3. And when the Spirit is at work with them for that end, they ſtruggle againſt it like a hooked fiſh in the water.

3. The natural bent, propenſity, and attachment to the broad way. That is the way of mens own hearts, as the way of water is to go down, not up the brae: ſo that let them alone, they would never chooſe, deſire, nor ſeek another, Iſa lvii. 17. and in the depth of ſovereign wiſdom the multitude is let alone; they get their will with a vengeance. They will have head, Job xxi. 14. and get it, Hoſ. iv. 17.

4. Satan is buſy to keep them off from it, 1 Pet. v. 8. He is the great ſeducer, who bewilders ſinners, leading them into by-ways, according to their different tempers and diſpoſitions. He repreſents the narrow way in frightful colours, the broad way as pleaſant and ſafe; ſo fills them with prejudices againſt the former, and in favour of the latter. And if at any time a ſinner is like to enter the ſtrait gate into the narrow way, he doubles his diligence, and plies him cloſely to keep him off from it.

5. laſtly, Ill example falling in with natural inclination, carries all headlong before it, Mat. xviii. 7. There is ſome good example too in the world; but then it goes againſt the ſtream of the natural inclination, and ſo proves ineffectual. But ill example going with the ſtream, eaſily prevails: men are apt to promiſe themſelves peace in an evil way, on which they ſee others going, and enjoying peace too.

Use 1. of Information. Hence learn,

1. Moſt of mankind then muſt periſh, ſince there is no getting to life but through the ſtrait gate and narrow way, which few find. Proud men, from a conceit of their own excellency, cannot admit this, that God will caſt away the moſt part; but the fallen angels were of greater excellency of nature than man; yet he caſts them all away, ſaves none of them. They ſee not the conſiſtency of it with his mercy; but mercy muſt be regulate with juſtice, otherwiſe it is a ſoftneſs unbecoming the Judge of all the earth; and mercy will have its triumph in ſaving ſome, even all that take the way for it conſiſtent with juſtice. They ſay, that then Adam will be more prevalent to ruin, than Chriſt to ſave; but it is more to ſave one ſinner, than to ruin thouſands, yea a world.

2. Saints then muſt needs be a ſingular kind of perſons in the world, having a way of their own different from that the multitude go in; for they are few that find the narrow way. This cannot miſs to make them look like an odd ſort of folk, fantaſtic and humorous in the eyes of the world, Iſ. viii. 18. 1 Pet. i. 4. And whoſo cannot digeſt that character from the world's hand, but muſt needs, for preſerving their reputation, conform to the world, and the way in vogue with the multitude, are not fit for heaven. They are the fearful, Rev. xxi. 8. deniers of Chriſt, Matth. x. 33. as aſhamed of him, Mark viii. 38.

3. No wonder the intereſts of religion be low in the world: it has few cordial followers. Truth falls in the ſtreets, and holineſs of heart and life is rare: both are unfaſhionable, the guiſe of the world lies contrary to both; for few find the narrow way. That religion is greatly run down, ſometimes perſecuted, always mocked and maligned, cannot miſs, while the ſtate of matters is ſuch, that few find the narrow way.

4. laſtly, Then certainly it is not eaſy to be a Chriſtian, to fall on the ſtrait gate and narrow way. The unconcernedneſs and careleſſneſs of men about religion, as if they could hardly go wrong in that matter, is unaccountable. Can it rationally be thought an eaſy thing to hit that mark which the moſt part miſs? to find that way which but few of mankind do find? But that fond conceit of the eaſineſs of finding it, is one great reaſon why ſo few find it.

Use 2. of Exhortation. And,

1*ſt*, Let all conſider well and examine what way it is they are on. Aſk yourſelves, Am I on the broad way, or on the narrow? and endeavour to be clear as to that concerning point.

Mot. 1. This is a point of the utmoſt concern to you; death and life hang upon it. If ye are on the broad way, you are on the road to deſtruction; if on the narrow way, on the road to life. And will ye be careleſs as to ſuch a weighty point? will ye not do your own ſouls the juſtice to conſider of it?

Mot. 2. It is certain ye were once on the broad way, Eph. ii. 3. The only queſtion competent here, is, Whether ye are brought off from it into the narrow way or not? If ye never ſaw yourſelves on it, it is a ſad token ye are on it ſtill, though ye perceive it not, Rev. iii. 17, 18. Though your eyes have been opened to ſee yourſelves on it, and your danger in it, it is a queſtion for all that, Whether ye are brought off it or not?

Mot. 3. The moſt part are on the broad way, few have found the narrow one. Ye have the more need to conſider which of them ye are on. If many had found, few miſſed the narrow way; yet ſince there are any who miſs it, the matter being of ſuch weight, might oblige you to put it to the trial as to yourſelves: much more ought ye to put it to the trial, when there are ſo few that find the narrow way, and ſo many miſs it.

Mot. 4. There are many ways taken for the narrow way, that is not it; and ſelf-deceiving is rife in the world, Prov. xxi. 2. and none more confident than the fool, chap. xii. 15. Therefore try your way, ere ye truſt it.

Mot. 5. laſtly, It will be a fearful diſappointment the careleſs ſinner will meet with at laſt, a frightful awakening the ſleepy thoughtleſs ſinner will get, falling into deſtruction at the end of his way, Matth. xxv. 11, 12. 'Afterward came alſo the other virgins, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he anſwered and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not.' Iſa. l. 11. 'Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compaſs yourſelves about with ſparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the ſparks that ye have kindled: this ſhall ye have of mine hand; ye ſhall lie down in ſorrow.' Awaken therefore in time, and conſider your way ere it be too late.

After what has been ſaid on both the ways, I will only add two things.

1. If ye are on the narrow way, ye have entered by the ſtrait gate of converſion to God, Matth. xviii. 3: ye have felt the bitterneſs of ſin, and therein the bitterneſs of death; have been brought freely away out of yourſelves to Chriſt by faith, and through him unto God by a ſincere repentance.

2. If ye are on the narrow way, ye feel the narrowneſs of it, yet are reſolute not to leave it, but go through with it; and ſo your life is a continued ſtruggle, Phil. iii. 14. The commands of God are your rule, the example of Chriſt your pattern, the will of God the reaſon of your walk, the honouring of God the end and deſign of your life, and the Chriſt of God the fountain of your ſtrength for the way.

2*dly*, Ye who are not yet on the narrow way, ſet yourſelves to find it; uſe your utmoſt endeavours to get at it by the ſtrait gate, for otherwiſe there is no reaching it. And,

1. Be not eaſy without, but ſeek to experience a work of ſound converſion on your ſouls. Pray for it, hear the word for it, and muſe on your own caſe for it, admitting conviction and cheriſhing it; labouring to get ſuch a ſight of Chriſt in his glory and beauty, as may lead you to thorough repentaece.

2. Set yourſelves for a life of holy obedience, following the footſteps of Chriſt himſelf, and the footſteps of the flock. Apply yourſelves to the way of mortification, dying to the creature and to ſin daily; to the way of newneſs of life, living to God in oppoſition to the creature, to righteouſneſs in oppoſition to ſin.

3*dly*, laſtly, Ye who are on the narrow way,

1. Bleſs God for it, and be thankful, that while he reveals it to few, he has revealed it to you: that ye are among the few, and not among the many.

2. Walk circumſpectly. Satan will be laying ſnares for you, that ye may ſtumble and fall, and if poſſible, to get you off from it. The fewer are on it, the world notices them the more, ready to improve their wrong ſteps to the diſhonour of the way. The greater will your ſin be, if ye walk not worthy of ſuch a rare privilege.

3. Walk on reſolutely, however narrow and ſtraitning the way be to you; for it leads to life: and the broad way, however eaſy, to death and deſtruction.

The DUTY and ADVANTAGE of cleaving to the LORD and his WAY, in a declining Time.

A SERMON preached on a day of ſolemn faſting and humiliation, at Ettrick, June 14, 1722.

Gen. vi. 9.

Noah was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations.

IN the two preceding verſes we have the deſtruction of the old world determined, verſe 7. and the preſervation of Noah ſecured, verſe 8. When that generation for their ſins was to be ſwept away by a deluge, Noah is God's favourite, ſafety and protection from the common ſtroke is determined for him. Hereupon a queſtion natively ariſeth, O what ſort of a man was Noah, who was ſo highly favoured? It is anſwered in the words of the text, Noah was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations. Wherein we have,

1. Noah's character: he was perfect: not legally, but evangelically. He was a man of integrity, downright for God; not following the wiſdom and way of the world, but ſtudying in all things to approve himſelf to God. This character of his is raiſed, from the conſideration of the time wherein he lived, He was perfect in his generations; in the generation before the flood, and the generation after it. The former was a generation of general corruption, verſ. 12. wherein the ſpeat of wickedneſs and apoſtaſy ran ſo high, that it carried all before it; yet even in ſuch a time Noah kept his feet, and made his way againſt the ſtream, though he was very ſingular. This is the man that finds favour with God in a day of wrath againſt the generation, that is ſafe while others are ſwept away in the anger of God.

2. How Noah came to reach ſuch a character: He was a juſt man. It refers not to his life; for the perfection or integrity aſcribed to him comprehends all in that point; but to his ſtate: he was a juſtified man, juſtified before God by faith in the promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. For ſo runs the original, Noah a juſt man was perfect, &c. Noah held by the righteouſneſs of faith for himſelf, and preached it to others, as we learn from Heb. xi. 7. 'By faith Noah being warned of God of things 'not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to 'the ſaving of his houſe; by the which he condemned 'the world, and became heir of the righteouſneſs which 'is by faith,' 2 Pet. ii. 5. 'God ſpared not the old 'world, but ſaved Noah the eighth perſon, a preacher 'of righteouſneſs, bringing in the flood upon the world 'of the ungodly.' And not only ſo, but he taught and practiſed the righteouſneſs of a holy life, while that generation, ſlighting the faith of the promiſe, and going off from the doctrine of free grace therein held forth, to acceptance by works, after the example of Cain, Gen. iv. 5. ran into all immorality, and caſting off of good works, in their practice, till they were ſwept off the earth for their looſe lives: which is the native conſequent of legality. There were others, I doubt not, beſides Noah, juſtified perſons in that generation, and holy too; at leaſt Methuſelah, who died in the year of the deluge, and Shem, Noah's ſon; but this is added concerning Noah, that he was a juſt man, to ſhew that he could not have attained that excellency in his generation, but that he was juſtified by faith; the promiſe being the only channel of the conveyance of grace.

Two doctrines are deducible from the words.

DOCT. I. In the moſt declining generation, wherein ſin and wickedneſs come to the greateſt height, God has ſtill ſome, though few, that retain their integrity, and cleave to him and his ways.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Evince the truth of the point.

II. Shew how it is that the declining of a generation comes to be ſo very general, that ſo very few are left retaining their integrity.

III. Why ſome, though few, are ſtill left retaining their integrity in ſuch a generation.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall evince the truth of this, That in the moſt declining generation, wherein ſin and wickedneſs come to the greateſt height, God has ſtill ſome, though few, that retain their integrity, and cleave to him and his ways. It has been found ſo in all ages of the church. In the old world there was a Noah; in Sodom a Lot; among the children of Iſrael in Egypt a Moſes, who all retained their integrity, and cleaved to the Lord and his ways. Of Moſes it is ſaid, Heb. xi. 24, 25, 26. that 'when he was come to years, he refuſed to be called the 'ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; chuſing rather to ſuffer 'affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the 'pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon; eſteeming the reproach 'of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures in Egypt: 'for he had reſpect unto the recompence of the reward.' There was a Caleb and Joſhua in the generation in the wilderneſs; in Elijah's days ſeven thouſand; in Iſaiah's days a ſmall remnant, Iſa. i. 9. and likewiſe a remnant in Jeremiah's days, Jer. xv. 11. In the Jewiſh apoſtaſy under Antiochus, there were ſome that were tortured for the cauſe of God, and refuſed to accept of deliverance on ſinful terms, Heb. xi. 35. When Chriſt came into the world, there were ſome waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael; and when the Jewiſh nation was ruined at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, there was a remnant according to the election of grace. In the grand apoſtaſy under the New-Teſtament, there were ſtill two witneſſes left, Rev. xi.

II. How is it that the declining of a generation comes to be ſo very general, that ſo very few are left retaining their integrity, that they may be for ſigns and wonders in the day wherein they live.

1. The corruption of human nature is the ſpring-head of it, Gen. vi. 5. 'And God ſaw that the wickedneſs 'of man was great in the earth, and that every imagi'nation of the thoughts of his heart was only evil con'tinually.' In the moſt favourable times for religion, in the moſt advantageous circumſtances men can be poſted in, man's nature has ſtill a ſtrong bias to the wrong ſide: therefore no wonder, that whatever ſet a church or people get at ſometimes towards religion, they do through time decline and go all wrong, according to the natural bias.

2. No due care taken for the religious education of thoſe who are ſpringing up, doth notably advance it. When religion falls low among parents, and thoſe in the place of parents having the training up of youth among their hands; it can hardly miſs to ſink among the children and youth: ſo that if the one be bad, the other muſt needs be worſe, but where ſovereign grace interpoſes, and hinders the native effect of the neglect and ill example. And here is one of the manifeſt cauſes of the declining of religion in our day, in families, in pariſhes and in the miniſtry, alas! too. The ſignal corrupting of youth was one of the cauſes of the apoſtaſy of the generation in Noah's days; Gen. vi. 2. 'The ſons of 'God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were fair; 'and they took them wives of all which they choſe.'

3. Corruption of manners thus prevailing, every one ſerves to corrupt another, till the leaven has well nigh gone through the whole lump, Gen. vi. 12. And God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt: for all fleſh had corrupted his way. In a time of declining, ſin and wickedneſs is like a ball of ſnow rolled among ſnow, that ſtill grows bigger, one piece of ſnow licking up another; or like the water, the farther from the head the greater it grows, by the brooks that join it in its courſe. And dreadful execution is thus made three ways.

(1.) In all times there are ſome of no principles, that have no tincture of religion; but in reſpect of religion are like a ſheet of white paper. Theſe readily take on the firſt bad impreſſions, and ly a ready prey to evil counſel, and pernicious example. By this means thouſands are ruined by their falling into ill hands, and in an evil time; who might have got another caſt, if the ſtream of wickedneſs had not run ſo high in their day.

(2.) There are others who have a very ſlender gripe of religion. They have good meanings and inclinations; but alas! the evil day comes upon them ere they are rooted; and ſo the wind of an apoſtatizing time blowing hard, their fruit and leaf is blown off, and at length they are blown up by the root with it, and go cleverly away with the ſtream.

(3.) Many that have the root of the matter in them, they fall aſleep, and let down their watch, and they are carried off their feet too: and ſo, though they get their ſouls for a prey, they loſe the honour and advantage of retaining their integrity in their generation. Thus it is ſaid of ſome of the Lord's people, Pſal. xcix. 8. 'Thou 'waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt 'vengeance of their inventions.' So Moſes and Aaron, for their provocation at Meribah, died in the wilderneſs, with the generation that had been a ſnare to them; and good Eli, for the little care he had of the young prieſts, to train them up rightly for his Maſter's work, never ſaw the captive ark return into Iſrael.

4. When a generation is thus poſting on in the road of apoſtaſy from God unto ruin, the Lord uſually takes home many of his own out from among them, Iſa. lvii. 1, 2. 'The righteous periſheth, and no man layeth it 'to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none con'ſidering that the righteous is taken away from evil to 'come. He ſhall enter into peace: they ſhall reſt in 'their beds, each one walking in his uprightneſs.' The good Lamech, Noah's father, died five years before the flood; and his good grandfather Methuſelah died in the very year it came on. Joſiah was taken away a little before the Babyloniſh captivity; Luther a little before the wars in Germany began; holy Rutherford died the very day before the act reſciſſory was paſſed 1661; and a great man of God in this church was taken away from among us in May 1720. Matters being thus, the declining goes on the faſter, the pillars being removed.

5. The declining humour by theſe means at length ſo prevails, that it makes its way over all oppoſition, and gets the maſtery, ſo as it carries all before it, like a flood. And at this height of it three things are remarkable.

(1.) Iniquity comes to be eſtabliſhed by a law. Thus ſome are ſaid to 'decree unrighteous decrees, and write 'grievouſneſs which they have preſcribed,' Iſa. x. 1. The ſin of the generation which began privately to ſet up its head, ſpreads, and is by degrees brought into reputation, till at length it turns truth and holineſs out of their ſeat, and ſits down in their place: and good is called evil, and evil good, Iſa. v. 20. And then all are not only allured, but commanded to entertain it: and in ſuch circumſtances the apoſtaſy of the generation cannot miſs to make a mighty progreſs, like Ephraim, Hoſ. v. 11. 'Ephraim is oppreſſed and broken in judgment: be'cauſe he willingly walked after the commandment.'

(2.) Shame is caſt on the way of God. Thus our Lord ſays, that ſome are 'aſhamed of him and his words 'in an adulterous and ſinful generation,' Mark viii. 38. And that ſhame drives many into the net. Then men muſt riſk either their conſcience, or credit and reputation; and muſt either be falſe to God, or fools in the eyes of the generation. No doubt Noah, when he was building his ark, and the reſt were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, would even be a laughing-ſtock to them. This is a mighty engine for corrupting of men. Many whom blows would not drive from their religion, are ſhamed out of it by an apoſtate generation pouring contempt on it.

(3.) The ſtream of the generation's favour runs all on the ſide of the declining. True ſeriouſneſs and tenderneſs ſerves only to make men overlooked, oppoſed, contemned, and deſpiſed; while ſuch as can go with the multitude, are in honour and eſtimation, Pſal. xii. throughout. The Prophet Jeremiah takes notice, chap. xii. 1. that the way of the wicked proſpers, and that they are all happy that deal very treacherouſly.

6. laſtly, What puts the cape-ſtone on the courſe of a generation's defection from God, and readily fills the cup to the brim, is perſecution of the way of God, and of any that will dare to retain their integrity. This is the native end of a declining courſe, and is readily found alſo to be the full ſea-mark, which when they come to, God calls them to an account for their apoſtaſy. Lot was long vexed in Sodom, at length they made an attack upon his houſe; and then their ruin came on. The Jews had a long day of declining, at length they crucified Chriſt; and inſtead of embracing the goſpel, they perſecuted the apoſtles; and ſo wrath came on them to the uttermoſt.

III. Why are ſome, though few, ſtill left retaining their integrity, in ſuch a generation?

1. Becauſe of God's faithfulneſs in his promiſe, Mat. xvi. 18. 'Upon this rock will I build my church, and 'the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it.' The gates of hell may attack the church, and carry on their victory very far, but cannot prevail over her entirely. The floods may overflow her even to the neck, but ſhall never go quite over her head, and ſo utterly carry her away. Chriſt is ever in the midſt of her; and, though his attendants that cleave to him may be very few, there will always be ſome.

2. Becauſe God will not leave himſelf without a witneſs in an apoſtatizing generation. While the Antichriſtian apoſtaſy was going on, God would have his witneſſes againſt them maintained, Rev. xi. 3. Such a witneſs for God was Noah againſt the old world, and by his practice as well as his preaching condemned them, Heb. xi. 7. And this is the character of all thoſe who in a declining day cleave to the Lord and his way, Iſa. xliii. 10. Ye are my witneſſes, ſaith the Lord, Prov. xxviii. 4. They that forſake the law, praiſe the wicked: but ſuch as keep the law, contend with them. Therefore he bears them up for their work.

3. Becauſe therein the power of his grace appears moſt illuſtriouſly. That the Lord preſerved a Noah in the old world deluged with wickedneſs, before it was overflown with water; and a Lot in Sodom, where all were ſo very vile, was a ſort of miracle of grace, as the keeping of a candle burning in an ocean, where the waters are round about to extinguiſh it. There is an emphaſis in that, Rev. iii. 4. 'Thou haſt a few names, 'even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments.' There are ſome times when in ſome places people can hardly miſs to ſeem good, if they be not really ſo: but ſome times there are again, wherein it is extremely hard to get the road kept in the practice of religion, the ſtream runs ſo againſt it.

4. laſtly, The Lord preſerves them for a ſeed to better days. What ſhould have come of the new world, if Noah had not been perfect in his generation? But he ſerved to carry the principles, and practice of religion into the generation after the flood. And as long as God has a church in the world, be the times never ſo bad, there will ſtill be ſome to cauſe the name of Chriſt to be remembered in all generations, according to that promiſe, Iſ. vi. 13. But yet in it ſhall be a tenth, and it ſhall return, &c.

Uſe 1. Whatever encouragement ſuch have, that turn their back on the way of religion and ſeriouſneſs, and take a ſinful latitude to themſelves from the multitude going their way, there is a witneſs againſt them ſtill left, that will riſe up in judgment againſt them, and condemn them. This was the caſe in Noah's days, Heb. xi. 7. 'By faith Noah being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith.' Though iniquity is become faſhionable, and the ſtream of it overflows all its banks in our days; there are ſtill ſome, who for ten thouſand worlds would not take the ſinful liberty to themſelves that others take. And their way and practice writes death on theirs.

2. However bad the days are, let none pretend it cannot be better with them, becauſe their lot is caſt in ſuch an evil day. The ſpeat of wickedneſs never ran ſo high yet, as to carry all before it without exception. But there are ſome, who, if religion will do eaſily for them, will follow it; but they have no heart to ſtrive againſt the ſtream. Such are not for heaven, eſpecially in a declining day.

3. Be exhorted not to conform yourſelves to the ways of the declining generation wherein our lot is caſt; but be among the few who cleave to him and keep his way. It is hard, yet it is poſſible. Noah was perfect in his generation: it will be our ſin and ruin, if we be not ſo in ours. Awaken, and beſtir yourſelves to ſee to your ſtate, that ye be righteous by faith; and ſee to your life and converſation, that ye walk with God, as Noah did. And for direction take this other doctrine.

Doct. II. God takes ſpecial notice of them for good, who in a declining generation retain their integrity and keep right, cleaving to him and his way in the face of a generation departing faſt from him.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. What this rare attainment is, this perfection in ſuch a generation; or, How men keep right, like Noah in ſuch a generation.

II. What are the advantages of this courſe, in which the Lord takes ſpecial notice for good, of thoſe who follow it in a declining day.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. The firſt thing is to ſhew what this rare attainment, is, this perfection in ſuch a generation; or, How men keep right, like Noah, in ſuch a generation. It is then to be,

1. Sincere, and not a hypocrite. Sincerity is goſpel-perfection; and where it is wanting, nothing is accepted, as is clear from the caſe of Amaziah, who did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart, 2 Chron. xxv. 2. and where this ſincerity is, the man is accepted notwithſtanding of many imperfections, as is clear from the caſe of Aſa, who though the high places were not taken away, yet his heart was perfect before the Lord, chap. xv. 17. Noah was a ſincere ſoul, elſe he had not got ſuch a noble character. Hypocriſy will never carry out before the Lord; a form of godlineſs will be no ſufficient preſervative in ſuch a generation, wherein the maſk is taken off many faces, and the thoughts of many hearts made manifeſt.

2. Downright for God, without going aſide to the ways of carnal wiſdom. The apoſtle gives us an excellent notion of it from his own practice, 2 Cor. i. 12. 'For our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world.' The man conſiders what is the good and acceptable will of the Lord: and that diſcovered he follows it in ſimplicity, without conſulting with fleſh and blood; reckoning it his greateſt wiſdom to cleave to the Lord's way, and that his greateſt wiſdom lies in diſcerning the ſteps of the great Leader before him. Other wiſdom will be a falſe light.

3. Tender in one's private walk and converſation, as under the eye of the all ſeeing God. This David could ſay from his own experience, Pſal. xviii. 23. 'I was upright before him, and I kept myſelf from mine iniquity.' Men will in vain pretend to be perfect in their generation, by keeping a fair outſide in public, while in the mean time they make no conſcience of the ſecret life of a Chriſtian, which the world cannot be witneſs to. Thoſe that truly keep right in ſuch a day, ſet themſelves above all to keep their own hearts, and to mortify their own luſts, and to keep up communion with God in duties; and do not ſatisfy themſelves with a parcel of outward performances.

4. Watchful againſt ſnares and temptations, that one be not led away with them. The perfect man has his eyes in his head to diſcern his hazard; and his ſoul cries within him, 'Lead us not unto temptation.' And he labours to ſtand at a diſtance from ſin: And, (1.) From the ſin with which he is moſt eaſily led aſide, Pſal. xviii. 23. Heb. xii. 1. (2.) From the ſnares and ſins of the time wherein he lives. He ſees the ſnares of that ſort many, as they always are in a declining time; and it is his buſineſs to keep his garments clean, Rev. iii. 4. Whatever his ſtation is in the world, he will never think himſelf out of hazard of being led aſide into ſinful courſes while all fleſh have corrupted their way.

5. Proof againſt ill example, which is the great engine of Satan for carrying on apoſtaſy in ſuch a day and generation. So was Noah in the old world, and Lot in Sodom. They who ſet God before them as they ought, while he bids them ſtand, though all the world ſhould be moving forward, will not dare to follow. Ill example is the ruin of many in ſuch a day. Hence ſaith our Lord, Matth. xxiv. 12. 'Becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold.'

6. A mourner for the ſins of others. Hence we read of ſome that ſighed and cried for all the abominations that were done in the midſt of Jeruſalem, Ezek. ix. 4. And righteous Lot, while dwelling in Sodom, in ſeeing and hearing, vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day, with the unlawful deeds of that people, 2 Pet. ii. 8. Such a one will not think himſelf unconcerned in the ſins of the generation wherein he lives. He ſees God is diſhonoured, his wrath is provoked, the ſouls of the ſinners are thereby put in the utmoſt hazard, and his own ſoul is in hazard of being held conſenting thereto. So love to God, to his neighbour and to himſelf, kindles in his ſoul a real grief and ſorrow for the ſins of the generation.

7. An oppoſer of the ſinful courſes of the day and generation, wherein he lives, as he hath acceſs. Hence is that exhortation, Eph. v. 11. 'Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them.' It is not enough to ſtand off from them ourſelves; but we ought to witneſs againſt ſin in others, to reprove, admoniſh, and exhort ſinners to take heed of the God provoking courſes. The Lord in ſuch a time ſaith, Who is on my ſide? And we are to take part with God againſt a ſinful, backſliding, and whoriſh generation.

8. laſtly, In a word, It is to be rowing againſt the ſtream of iniquity, and endeavouring to draw the nearer God that others are going far from him; to be beſt when others are at the worſt; to be the more earneſt, ſerious and active in real religion, the more low we ſee it falling in our day.

This may afford us matter of lamentation, ſhewing there are few perfect in our generation. (1.) Moſt part are under viſible blemiſhes in their outward converſation. (2.) They that are otherwiſe, are aſleep; they are not active for God: if they be not carried away with the ſtream, they do not oppoſe it neither.

II. The ſecond thing is, to ſhew, What are the advantages of this courſe, in which the Lord takes ſpecial notice for good, of thoſe who follow it in a declining day.

1. Sweet peace of conſcience in keeping of the Lord's way, while others are diſregarding it. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 2 Cor. i. 12. 'Our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world.' Though it is hard to row againſt the ſtream of an apoſtatizing generation, and may expoſe one to much trouble; yet there is a quietneſs within, a certain ſatisfaction that ariſeth from reflecting upon, that one is in the way of duty, and through grace gets it kept. And this will be of great value with thoſe who by experience have learned, that inward peace is preferable to peace with all the world, and is to be bought at any rate, ſold at none. Hence ſaith Job, chap. xxvii. 6. 'My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go; my heart ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live.'

2. Communion with God, and acceſs to him in duties. Hence ſaith our Lord, John xiv. 21. 'He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifeſt myſelf to him.' As the endeavour to keep right in ſuch a day, gives the upright ſoul many errands to God, and obliges him to be looking much to the Lord, whence muſt come his help; ſo the Lord even allows the ſoul acceſs to him in ſuch a caſe in a ſpecial manner, Rev. xi. 4. and though no works of theirs, but the blood of Jeſus only is the ground of their confidence before the Lord, yet uprightneſs for God removes the impediments which hinder the ſoul's confidence. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 John iii. 21. 'Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God.' If any have communion with God in ſuch a day, it ſhall be they. Hence ſaith the prophet, Micah ii. 7. 'O thou that art named the houſe of Jacob, is the Spirit of the Lord ſtraitned? are theſe his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly?'

3. A ſweet allowance of furniture, ſtrength, and ſupport, for the duty called for, Prov. x. 29. 'The way of the Lord is ſtrength to the upright.' Sometimes the Lord calls his people to the field of battle; and unbelief ſays, it will not do, for they are naked and unarmed; but the call being clear, they that would keep right in an evil day, muſt venture forward at their Lord's back, though naked, leaving it on him by faith to provide them weapons when and where he will, 1 Sam. ii. 4. And then they are provided in the field of battle, if not before. Hence ſaith our Lord, Matth. x. 19. 'When they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given you in that ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak.' And whoever uprightly venture thus to ſwim againſt the ſtream, they may aſſure themſelves the Lord will be the lifter up of their head.

4. Seaſonable providential appearances for them. God has a watchful eye for good over them who keep his way, and he will protect them in it, while he has uſe for them that way, Pſal. cxxi. 2, 3. 'My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth. He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee, will not ſlumber.' They that would carry uprightly in a declining time, muſt lay their account to run a riſk; but it ever remains a truth, Prov. x. 9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely. And whoever do uprightly appear for God in an evil day, ſooner or later God will appear for them, with a favourable caſt of his hand, Prov. xvi. 7. 'When a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.' Lot was a witneſs againſt Sodom's wickedneſs; and at length they make a furious attack on him and his houſe, but God ſeaſonably interpoſeth for his reſcue, Gen. xix. 9, 10, 11. Jeremiah in the road of duty was in hazard of death, but the princes reſcue him, eſpecially Ahikam, Jer. xxvi. Samuel witneſſeth againſt Iſrael their bent for a king; but there was no diverting them; the ſpeat ran ſo high, that he could not ſtem it: bnt God joined his teſtimony from heaven againſt the people's courſe by thunder and rain, which left a conviction in their breaſts, ſo that 'they greatly feared the Lord and Samuel,' 1 Sam. xii. 18.

5. laſtly, Special favour in a ſuffering time, when the Lord ariſeth to plead his controverſy with the ſinful generation. Hence ſaith the prophet Habakkuk, chap. iii. 16. When I heard, my belly trembled: my lips quivered at the voice: rottenneſs entered into my bones, and I trembled in myſelf, that I might reſt in the day of trouble. The beſt ſecurity againſt a time of ſuffering, is uprightneſs for God in a ſinning declining time.

(1.) Sometimes they are ſo ſeen to in a time of common calamity, that they are freed from trouble, as if they dwelt alone, or had a Goſhen to live in, while darkneſs is over all the land. Hence ſaith the Lord, Ezek. ix. 4. Go through the midſt of the city, through 'the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a mark upon the foreheads of the men that ſigh, and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midſt thereof:' an alluſion to the Iſraelites in Egypt. Noah had an ark when the old world was deſtroyed; Lot was ſaved when Sodom was burnt up. God can hide whom he will, when the world is in the greateſt confuſion.

(2.) A mitigation of trouble, when they meet with it in a ſuffering time. Though they may drink of the cup of common calamity, it ſhall be of the brim, not of the bottom; there ſhall be much ſweet mixture in it, Jer. xv. 11. The Lord ſaid, Verily it ſhall be well with thy remnant, verily I will cauſe the enemy to intreat thee well in the time of evil, and in the time of affliction. The rod ſhall be to them but the rod of a man, a weak man, that lays on but a ſlender ſtroke.

3. They ſhall be ſafe from the ſting of trouble: they will have eaſe within, though trouble without, Hab. iii. 10. forecited. Their ſtanding at a diſtance from the provocations that brought on the ſtroke, will afford much ſweet peace, while others find themſelves taken in the ſnares their own hands have made.

(4.) They lie faireſt to be preſerved from the temptations of a ſuffering time, and to be carried cleanly through. Hence is that promiſe, Rev. iii. 10. 'Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, I alſo will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which ſhall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth.' The Lord in his juſt judgment, for the ſins of a backſliding generation, often brings ſuch a trial as does not only expoſe men to ſuffering, but to ſinning, and renouncing the religion that is left them. And it is too likely that may come to be the trial of this generation: but they that now retain their integrity, are faireſt to be preſerved in ſuch a day.

(5.) laſtly, Let the worſt come to the worſt in the matter of trouble, it ſhall be well with them. Joſiah had a promiſe of dying in peace, 2 Kings xxii. 20, yet he died in battle: but the promiſe ſtood firm; for die as they will, they die in peace who die within the covenant of peace. The grave is one of God's hiding-places for his people.

Uſe. I exhort you to be perfect in this generation, to be perſons of integrity, downright for God, rowing againſt the ſtream of this ſinful generation. And in order to that,

1. Purge your converſation from the groſs pollutions of the outward man. It is the character of ‘the man who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord,’ that ‘he hath clean hands, and a pure heart; hath not lift up his ſoul unto vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully,’ Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. Be blameleſs in your walk before the world, ſtanding at a diſtance from the profanity of the generation. It is true, that is not enough; but, alas! wickedneſs is at ſuch a height in the generation, that there are few whoſe outward converſation is not ſtained with curſing, ſwearing, banning, drunkenneſs, deceitfulneſs in their dealings, lying, profanation of the Sabbath, &c. Sure, whoever they be that are perfect in this generation, it is not the like of theſe.

2. Be Chriſtians indeed, in the inner man. Such an one is deſcribed, Rom. ii. 28, 29. ‘For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh. But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly: and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men but of God.’ For real religion is under a deep decay: and as profanity is devouring the ſouls of ſome, woful formality is preying on the ſouls of others. The virgins are generally ſlumbering and ſleeping, and the life of religion is much gone. O ſtrive to be among the few names which have not defiled their garments, Rev. iii. 4. And here I would recommend three things to you.

(1.) Study to be experimental Chriſtians, Pſal. xxxiv. 8. ‘O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good: bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him.’ Experimental religion is much worn out in our day. Men ſatisfy themſelves with dry ſapleſs notions of religion in their heads, while they labour not to find the power of truth on their ſouls: and hence it comes to paſs, that truth itſelf is a-going ſo faſt. See the promiſe, John viii. 32. And ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free.

(2.) Be exerciſed Chriſtians, like Paul, Acts xxiv. 16. Herein do I exerciſe myſelf (ſays he) to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward men: exerciſed about your ſoul's caſe, carefully obſerving whether ye be going back, or coming forward; looking to the ills of your hearts, your pride, paſſion, untenderneſs, &c. and ſetting yourſelves to mortify theſe; exerciſed to know what is ſin and duty in particular caſes; to notice the Lord's comings or goings with reſpect to your ſouls.

(3.) Lively and active Chriſtians. The prophet complains, that it was otherwiſe in his time, Iſa. lxiv. 7. ‘There is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee: for thou haſt hide thy face from us, and haſt conſumed us, becauſe of our iniquities.’ In public, and in private and ſecret duties, ſtir up yourſelves to get near God; to get the ſavour of religion on your ſpirits; and ſtrive againſt deadneſs, formality, and ſpiritual numbneſs, that has ſeized on moſt of the generation.

3. Be of a public ſpirit. That is a ſpirit ſunk ſore in this generation; in place of which is come a deteſtable neutrality, indifferency, ſelfiſhneſs, and worldlineſs, Phil. ii. 21. For all ſeek their own, not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt's. Be ye concerned for the public honour of God, for the ark of God, for Zion in all her diſtreſſes. Let your hearts ſay as Pſal. cxxxvii. 5, 6. ‘If I forget thee, O Jeruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jeruſalem above my chief joy.’ They that are not with Chriſt in ſuch a caſe are againſt him.

4. Be of a goſpel ſpirit, having high thoughts of the free grace of God, and deep impreſſions of the nothingneſs of man, and all that he can do, Gal. vi. 14. God forbid (ſays the apoſtle) that I ſhould glory, ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. Learn and hold faſt goſpel principles in your heads; keep up a goſpel-frame in your hearts; and have a goſpel-practice in your walk. Learn the art of living by faith, believing the promiſe, and on the credit of the promiſe going out in duty. Let love conſtrain you to obedience, and be ſtrict and tender in the whole of your walk, and ſo adorn the profeſſion of the goſpel.

5. Be accurate obſervers of your duty to God, whom the generation we live in has much caſt behind their back. Be conſcientious in the duties of godlineſs, frequent and fervent. Keep your hearts for him; worſhip him reverently, converſe much with his word; give yourſelves to prayer; let him have the morning as well as the evening ſacrifice in ſecret and in your families; name his dreadful and holy name as little as you can in common converſation, and never mention it but with awe on your ſpirits; ſanctify his day, and let alone diſcourſing of your worldly buſineſs before and betwixt ſermons, at home or at the kirk.

6. Be nice obſervers of juſtice and truth in your dealings with men; for both theſe are rare to a marvel in this generation, as they were of old. See Iſa. lix. 13, 14, 15. Micah vii. 1. &c. O Sirs, do not go with the ſtream of the generation. Know, that God is a God of juſtice and truth, and his ſoul lothes the unjuſt and deceitful man. A little gained or kept back by injuſtice, may bring a blaſting curſe on all you have, and may make it melt yet like ſnow before the ſun. Make not the way of the multitude the ſtandard of juſtice in your dealings: but ‘to the law and to the teſtimony: if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them.’ Eſpecially I recommend to you, and, as the meſſenger of God, do bind it this day on your conſciences, ‘All things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them: for this is the law and the prophets,’ Matth. vii. 12. Lie not; but be ye tender of ſpeaking truth, as ye would be tender of your ſouls. That is the character of the Lord's people, Iſa. lxiii. 8. Children that will not lie. Be ſlaves to your word; if it ſhould be to your loſs, do not break your promiſes. This is the character of a citizen of Zion, Pſal. xv. 4. He ſweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. And in a ſpecial manner do not venture to break your promiſes, and alter your bargains with the pooreſt ſort to their loſs: Prov. xxii. 22. ‘Rob not the poor becauſe he is poor: neither oppreſs the afflicted in the gate.’

7. Oppoſe and ſet yourſelves againſt ſin and wickedneſs in others, as ye have acceſs; and ſo endeavour to ſtem the tide of the apoſtaſy of the generation: Eph. v. 11. Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. Appear on the Lord's ſide, as witneſſes for him, and his ways of truth and holineſs: and diſcountenance and bear teſtimony againſt the diſhonour you ſee done to his bleſſed name. Strengthen the weak in hazard to be led away; admoniſh and warn thoſe before whom temptations are laid; and ſhew yourſelves adverſaries to all ſinful courſes. Hence are thoſe exhortations, 1 Theſſ. v. 14. ‘We exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble minded, ſupport the weak, be patient towards all men.’ Jude verſ. 22, 23. ‘Of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference: and others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh.’ If ye be Chriſt's diſciples, ye are the ſalt of the earth, Matth. v. 13. to reſiſt putrefaction.

8. Do your endeavour to get a right ſet in the young generation, who are in great hazard at this day. It ſhould be the work of all that fear God, to be concerned for poſterity, after the example of David, Pſal. xlv. 17. ‘I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore ſhall the people praiſe thee for ever and ever;’ and therefore to give good example and precept in their families, as did Abraham, Gen. xviii. 19. ‘For I know him, that he will command his children, and his houſehold after him, and they ſhall

'keep the way of the Lord, to do juſtice and judgment:' and to be uſeful to all others of the younger ſort, as they have opportunity, to recommend the way of the Lord to them, and to ſet them at odds with the ſinful courſes of the day. The hope of future times lies in them; and what will become of the land, and of the work of God, his cauſe and intereſt in it, if they be bred up in the ways of the preſent apoſtaſy of the generation?

When we look to the riſing generation at this day, they are viſibly declining, generally corrupt in their manners, and worſe than their fathers; however, in a few years, church, and ſtate, and country will be in their hands. This is a weighty conſideration for all who are concerned for religion. I would therefore drop a few words to thoſe of the younger ſort of both ſexes.

1. While you are entering on the ſtage of the world at this time, you muſt either act the part of witneſſes for God againſt the ſinful courſes of the day, or enter into the conſpiracy of the generation againſt God. Ye cannot be neutral, however ye may think to be ſo, Matth. xii. 30. 'He that is not with me, (ſaith Chriſt,) is againſt 'me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth 'abroad.' Therefore conſider well which to chuſe, and reſolve to ſiſt yourſelves forthwith on Chriſt's ſide. Say as Joſhua, chap. xxiv. 15. 'And if it ſeem evil unto 'you to ſerve the Lord, chuſe you this day whom you 'will ſerve, whether the gods which your fathers ſerved, 'that were on the other ſide of the flood, or the gods of 'the Amorites, in whoſe land ye dwell: but as for me 'and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord.'

2. Know that this land is married to the Lord in ſolemn covenants to reform what is amiſs, and to preſerve the reformation in doctrine, worſhip, diſcipline, and government, and to oppoſe whatſoever is contrary to ſound godlineſs. And ſince that time there have been ſpeats of defection and apoſtaſy from God. But among our fathers were found witneſſes for God, who, at the expence of all that was dear to them in the world, and even of their own lives, tranſmitted the teſtimony for truth and holineſs unto us. It lies upon your own conſciences to take it up, and maintain it; for ye muſt be anſwerable to God for it in your ſtations: and wo, wo will be to that generation in whoſe hand it falls. This was expreſsly enjoined to, and ſtrongly inculcated upon the Jewiſh church, as ye may ſee from Pſal. lxxviii. 5, 6, 7. 'For he eſtabliſhed a teſtimony in Jacob, and appoint'ed a law in Iſrael, when he commanded our fathers 'that they ſhould make them known to their children. 'That the generation to come might know them, even 'the children which ſhould be born: who ſhould a'riſe, and declare them to their children. That they 'might ſet their hope in God, and not forget the works 'of God; but keep his commandments.'

3. The ſpeat of irreligion, neglect and contempt of ſeriouſneſs, runs ſo high among the young generation of this day, that ye are in great hazard of being carried away with it; and can hardly miſs to be ſo, if ye do not look well to yourſelves. Therefore take theſe advices.

(1.) Begin the world as ye would deſire to end it, Eccleſ. xii. 1. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them. Though ye be young now, ye muſt be old, and go the way of all fleſh then, if not before. It is pity to ſtand at a diſtance from religion and ſeriouſneſs while ye are young, ſince ye know the day will come when ye will need it, and ye know not how ſoon.

(2.) Give an obedient ear to good advice for your ſouls. Nature is corrupt, youth is headſtrong, raw, and unexperienced; there is much need for to be pliable to the counſels of thoſe concerned for your ſpiritual welfare, Prov. v. 11, 12. leſt thou mourn at the laſt, when thy fleſh and thy body are conſumed; and ſay, How have I hated inſtruction, and my heart deſpiſed reproof? A few years may come to let you ſee the folly of the way of wilfulneſs.

(3.) Take heed to your company, 1 Cor. xv. 33. 'Be 'not deceived; Evil communications corrupt good 'manners.' Ill company has been the ruin of many, and is ſo at this day. And many have fallen into ſuch company in their youth, as has given them an ill ſet, that has ſtuck to them all their days; or led them into ſuch courſes, as have ſoon ruined them.

(4.) Obſerve carefully and improve what ye ſee befalling young people as well as others. You ſee there are of that ſort carried off to eternity in the middle of their days; and is it not reaſonable you ſhould timely ſee to your own ſtate, in caſe it be your lot too? You ſee what wretched ſnares the folly of youth betrays many into; and be ye therefore on your guard. Take heed of ſad examples ſet before you, leſt ye become examples to others.

(5.) Study to learn the leſſon of the vanity of the world, Eccleſ. i. 2. What is youth, ſtrength, beauty, wealth, &c. but fair fading flowers, that laſt not, but are quickly gone? Ceaſe your towering imaginations, your flouriſhing hopes of worldly contents, your big promiſes to yourſelves of what fine things you may reach; theſe will but make your diſappointments the more cutting.

(6.) Conſecrate yourſelves to the Lord; and let Chriſt Jeſus, the plant of renown, the chief among ten thouſands, have your hearts and affections while ye are young, Prov. xxiii. 26. 'My ſon, (ſays the Lord,) give 'me thine heart, and let thine eyes obſerve my ways.' Lay hold of him in the covenant of grace, and knit unto him by faith, and ſo lay your meaſures for your welfare in time and eternity.

(7.) Carry yourſelves tenderly and religiouſly, being holy in the whole of your converſation: Heb. xii. 14. 'Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which 'no man ſhall ſee the Lord.' Whatever be your ſtation in the world, be conſcientious in the duties of it, looking on the all-ſeeing God as the party with whom ye have chiefly to do. And particularly be modeſt in your garb, ſpeech, and behaviour; that Satan may not carry on his triumph at the rate he has often done in this place, to the diſhonour of God, reproach of religion, and the ruin of ſouls.

(8.) laſtly, Eye God ſeriouſly, and walk by his counſel, in your ſettlement in the world, Prov. iii. 6. 'In 'all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy 'paths.' Lay your matters before the Lord in prayer, and, in dependance on him for light, weigh them in the balance of ſanctified reaſon, according to the general directions of the word; and walk as the Lord is pleaſed to diſcover his mind. Eſpecially in your marriages acknowledge God, and walk by his direction. The neglect of this in the old world, was one of the ſprings of that wickedneſs that brought on the flood: and that ſpring is faſt running at this day, carrying on the apoſtaſy of the generation.

I ſhall give you the following Motives to preſs you to be perfect in this generation, as you have been exhorted. Conſider,

1. It will be a great diſcovery of your ſincerity, and unfeigned love to the Lord and the way of holineſs. 'Noah was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations.' A declining time is a trying time, and the naughtineſs of many is thereby diſcovered; it is a ſifting time, and there is much refuſe appears. In times wherein religion and ſeriouſneſs are in vogue, as ſometimes they have been, many put on the maſk of religion that have nothing of it in reality: and then the time turns, and wickedneſs goes with open mouth; ſo men caſt off their maſk, and appear in their own colours, and then appears who have it in reality, 1 Cor. xi. 19. 'For there muſt 'be hereſies among you, that they which are approved, 'may be made manifeſt among you.'

2. It is a noble, heaven like diſpoſition, to be perfect in ſuch a generation; to cleave to Chriſt, when the generation is ſo generally turning their back on him, John vi. 66, 67, 68. It ſpeaks a man to have a rooted principle in him for God and his way, and not to be carried by the mean motives of the world's applauſe, eaſe, &c. towards religion, but out of conſcience towards God.

3. It will glorify God very much; and that is the great buſineſs we have to do in the world, agreeable to what is ſaid, 1 Cor. x. 31. ‘Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.’ compare Matth. v. 6. ‘Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.’ This will be a teſtimony for God againſt a ſinful generation, the keeping up of a ſtandard for him, while ſo many ſtandards are diſplayed againſt him: Prov. xxviii. 4. ‘They that forſake the law, praiſe the wicked; but ſuch as keep the law, contend with them.’ Alas! what ſhould come of his declarative glory, if there be none to ſhew a reſpect to his commands?

4. It is the beſt ſervice ye can do for the generation, like David, who ‘ſerved his own generation by the will of God,’ Acts xiii. 36. No man is born for himſelf: every man is obliged to ſeek the good of mankind, and particularly to lay himſelf out for the good of the generation wherein he lives. Now, there is a twofold good to be done the generation this way. (1.) It is a proper mean to keep them back from the way of ſin, and to gain them to the way of the Lord. Example has a powerful influence. Hence is that exhortation, 1 Pet. iii. 1. ‘Ye wives, be in ſubjection to your own huſbands, that if any obey not the word, they alſo may without the word be won by the converſation of the wives.’ And if one ſoul can be gained that way, from the way of ſin, how deſirable is it? (2.) It is a proper mean to keep off wrath; it is the bearing up of the pillars of a land, Pſal. lxxv. 3. If there had been but ten righteous men in Sodom, the Lord would have ſpared it for their ſakes.

5. Suppoſe it ſhould not be effectual to ſtop the career of any in their ſin, yet it would leave a conviction of ſin in their conſciences. Hence the apoſtle exhorts the Philippians, chap. ii. 15, 16. to ‘be blameleſs and harmleſs, the ſons of God, without rebuke, in the mids of a crooked and perverſe nation; among whom (ſays he) ye ſhine as lights in the world: holding forth the word of life: that I may rejoice in the day of Chriſt, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain.’ A holy tender converſation, though wicked mens corruptions riſe againſt it, yet their conſciences approve of it: and while they are running down the godly man for it, yet in their conſciences they have a ſecret honour for him.

6. It is a debt ye owe to poſterity. Hence ſays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. xlv. 17. I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations: therefore ſhall the people praiſe thee for ever and ever. The keeping of the way of God in a declining generation, is a tranſmitting of the teſtimony for God to theſe yet uuborn: and the going the way of the multitude, is a betraying of them, as it were a conſpiring to take the light out of the room they are coming into, that they may have nothing elſe but darkneſs.

7. It is an honourable thing. It is to be a witneſs for God; and this is one of the characters of his people, Iſ. xliii. 10. ‘Ye are my witneſſes, ſaith the Lord.’ Behold the honourer of God ſhall be honoured, when thoſe that deſpiſe him ſhall be lightly eſteemed,’ 1 Sam. ii. 30. Prov. x. 7. ‘The memory of the juſt is bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot.’ How ſavoury is the name of Noah, Lot, Caleb, and Joſhua, at this day, while the name of the old world, Sodom, &c. is held in diſgrace?

8. It is the beſt courſe ye can take to be ſafe in the evil day, when the Lord calls the generation to an account. A ſinning time will be followed with a ſuffering time; and it is good to prepare for it in time. They quite miſtake their meaſures, who go off the Lord's way for ſafety, Prov. x. 9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely: but he that perverteth his ways, ſhall be known.

9. laſtly, It will be moſt comfortable in a dying hour: as it was to the good king Hezekiah, when he ſaid, ‘Remember now, O Lord, I beſeech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight,’ Iſa. xxxviii. 3. Sinful going with a multitude, coming in remembrance on a death bed, makes bitter reflections: whereas that is ſweet, which is mentioned, 2 Cor. i. 12. ‘Our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God we have had our converſation in the world.’

I ſhall conclude all with the following directions.

Direct. 1. See in the firſt place, to be juſt by faith in Jeſus Chriſt. Where the ſoul has not the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt, there can be no righteouſneſs of a holy life. For the unjuſtified man is under the curſe; he wants the root of good works, viz. faith. But the ſoul furniſhed with faith, is furniſhed for holy walking.

2. Make the word of God your rule, and not mens. All men are liars, Rom. iii. 4. It is dangerous for one to be ſatisfied with a thing, juſt becauſe men are ſo. Moſt men, good men, will not be a ſafe ſtandard in a declining time.

3. Labour for holy courage in the Lord's way; men are in hazard of being aſhamed of Chriſt in a ſinful time. There is need of a brow to face the daring wickedneſs of ſuch a generation.

4. Labour to be reſolute for God, and a good conſcience, Eph. vi. 15. They that would row againſt the ſtream, muſt be reſolute, like Joſhua, chap. xxiv. 15. who, whatever others ſhould do, reſolved, with his houſe, to ſerve the Lord.

5. Let not the world's account of ſingularity have weight with you. They will be apt to ‘think it ſtrange that you run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you,’ 1 Pet. iv. 4. But do not regard their opinions or cenſures. Many comply with ſinful courſes, becauſe they cannot away with being ſingular. But better be alone in God's way, than out of it with all the world. God's people can hardly miſs to be a world's wonder ſometimes, as was the caſe with Joſhua, and his fellows, Zech. iii. 8. ‘Hear now, O Joſhua the high prieſt, thou and thy fellows that ſit before thee: for they are men wondered at.’

6. laſtly, Keep eternity much in view: 2 Cor. iv. 18. ‘Look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen; for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal.’ This is an excellent help to get right through an evil world. He that conſiders, he knows not how ſoon he may ſtep out of the world into eternity, will take heed to his ſteps, that he ſtep not wrong in a declining day.

Therefore let the example of Noah, who was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations, and walked with God, have a due influence upon you to move you to follow his ſteps.

Perilous Times in the Last Days.

A SERMON preached at Etterick, November 14, 1731. a Faſt-day appointed by the Synod of Merſe and Teviotdale.

2 Tim. iii. 1.

This know alſo that in the laſt days perilous times ſhall come.

IN theſe words we have three things.

1. The notification of an event as future; perilous times ſhall come. Not that there are any times in themſelves perilous, or unlucky days, as the ſuperſtitious imagine: but they are perilous in reſpect of the evil that is a-going in them among men, verſe 2. &c. The word properly ſignifies difficult: times wherein it will be hard for people to keep their feet, to know how to carry themſelves, to keep out of danger, and keep a good conſcience: and theſe are perilous times.

Of theſe it is ſaid, they ſhall come, Gr. ſhall be on. They will be on men in the courſe of providence, to try what metal they are of; as darkneſs comes on after light, and adverſity after proſperity, in their turn.

2. The time of that event; in the laſt days. Theſe are, in ſcripture-ſtyle, the days of the Meſſias, the days of the goſpel, even that whole period, according to Acts ii. 17. 'And it ſhall come paſs in the laſt days, (ſaith God,) 'I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh: and your 'ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy, and your young 'men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream 'dreams.' Heb. i. 1, 2. 'God who at ſundry times, 'and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken 'unto us by his Son.' It is an Old-Teſtament expreſſion, which ſounds the laſt of the days; and days being uſed abſolutely, theſe days are the days of the world, running from the creation to the end. Now, the days of the goſpel are the laſt part of theſe days, the concluding period of time. In theſe laſt days are ſeveral particular periods; the firſt of which was the laſt time of the Jewiſh ſtate, beginning from the time of our Saviour, to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and more periods followed, and ſome are yet to come; but from the time of our Saviour to the end of the world, is the laſt days.

3. The notice to be taken of that event: This know alſo; or rather Now know this, be informed of this, conſider it duly, and lay it to heart, that being forewarned, ye may be armed againſt the perilous times.

Doct. As the days of the goſpel are the laſt days, ſo men ſhould know there are in the courſe of providence difficult and perilous times that come on in theſe days.

In diſcourſing this doctrine we ſhall conſider,

I. The days of the goſpel as the laſt days.

II. The difficult and perilous times that come on in goſpel-days.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the days of the goſpel as the laſt days. And ſo we may take them up in a threefold view.

1. As the laſt days of the world, the latter end of time. With relation to them that oath is made, Rev. x. 6. 'That there ſhould be time no longer.' The world has laſted long now, it muſt have an end: and the laſt part of its time is begun, and far on. The morning and forenoon of the world are over: it is afternoon with it now, and drawing towards the evening.

2. As the days of the laſt diſpenſation of grace towards the world, with which God's dealing with ſinners for reconciliation ſhall be cloſed; according to Rev. x. 7. 'In the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, the 'myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed.' There have been three diſpenſations of grace in the world; the Patriarchal diſpenſation in the firſt days; the Moſaical diſpenſation in the middle days; and now the Chriſtian diſpenſation in the laſt days. The firſt two are now off the ſtage, and ſhall never come on again: and the third now is; and after it there ſhall never be another.

3. As the beſt days of the world in reſpect of the greateſt advantages attending them. The laſt works of God are always the greateſt, as ye may ſee in the account of the creation, Gen. i.: ſo the circumſtances of the world to come, are greater than thoſe of this. The goſpel-diſpenſation far excells the other two, in clearneſs, extenſiveneſs, and efficacy, through a larger meaſure of the Spirit. One may ſay, Have there not been perilous times in all the days? Noah's times in the firſt; the Egyptian bondage, Babyloniſh captivity, Antiochus's perſecution, &c. in the middle days: what wonder there be ſo in the laſt days? So indeed we ſay now: but conſider the Old Teſtament prophecies of the laſt days, and the big expectations that behoved to be raiſed thereupon; and ye will ſee need for this caution, frequent among the apoſtles, that even in the laſt days, for as great days as they were to be, there were perilous times to be on.

Uſe of this point.

1. Take heed how ye improve the goſpel. Delay not to comply with the call thereof; for ere long an account will be required of it. The days of it are the laſt days of the world, wherein time comes to an end, and the world muſt make their account for the entertainment they have given it. Behold he cometh from heaven, 'with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey 'not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.' 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8.

2. Ye muſt be ſaved by falling in with the goſpel call and method of ſalvation, or periſh; for it is the laſt diſpenſation of grace. It is God's laſt method with a ſinful loſt world; after which they are not to expect a new one. It is the laſt ſhip going off for Immanuel's land; if ye ſlight it, ye ſhall have no more opportunity for ever: Heb. x. 26. 'For if we ſin wilfully after that 'we have received the knowledge of the truth, there 'remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins.'

3. The contempt of the goſpel is the moſt dangerous adventure ever the world made, and will have the moſt terrible iſſue; goſpel-days being the laſt and beſt; and the better are the days, the contempt will be the more dangerous. The contempt of the Patriarchal diſpenſation was puniſhed by the flood: of the Moſaical, by the Babyloniſh captivity, and other heavy plagues, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. How terrible muſt the puniſhment be of the contempt of the goſpel-diſpenſation? The deſtruction of Jeruſalem was the firſt ſwatch of it, the conflagration of the world will be the iſſue.

4. laſtly, Th[illegible] may be great and good things in days which yet are dangerous days: in the laſt days ſhall be perilous times. The beſt days that ever Judea ſaw, were in the days that went before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: the Spirit was poured out in ſuch a meaſure as never took place before nor ſince, Acts ii. 17. but there came afterwards a pouring out of wrath to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. In theſe days of ours there are great things not to be overlooked. Learning, and the art of civil management in improving of ground and manufactures, are carried to a pitch they were not at before; which ſometimes brings in mind the caſe of the Cainites, among whom arts flouriſhed while piety went to wreck, as we may read, Gen. iv. 20, 21, 22. Nay there are good things done in theſe our days, great good things, the like to which were never done before in our nation; particularly the erecting of ſchools for propagating Chriſtian knowledge in the highlands and iſlands, the erecting of the infirmary in Edinburgh. Nay, ſome glorious goſpel truths have been in our days ſet in an uncommon light. And yet for all that they are certainly moſt perilous days. Which brings me to conſider,

II. The difficult and perilous times that come on in goſpel days. Even in the days of the goſpel, in which ſometimes there are ſweet and glorious times, yet at other times there come difficult and perilous times.

We muſt enquire what makes theſe perilous times.

1ſt, An old controverſy lying over untaken up. They that are in debt, are always in danger. The Jews were a bloody generation, from generation to generation they were murderers of their prophets; that was an old debt on the head of the generation in our Saviour's time. Matth. xxiii. 31. and made their time a perilous time. for it was like a train lying within their bowels, which at laſt came to blow them up, verſe 35. So good Joſiah's days were perilous times, by reaſon of an old controverſy laid in the days of Manaſſeh his grandfather, 2 Kings xxiii. 26.

Our times are ſo, by reaſon of the iniquity of the late times, which is like that of Baal-peor, that brought a plague on the congregation of the Lord, Joſh. xxii. 17. The avowed breach of covenants made with God for reformation; the blood of the Lord's people ſhed in fields and ſcaffolds, for adhering to the oath of God; the fining, confining, impriſoning, baniſhing of them, and other barbarous uſages of them, whereby for many years theſe nations carried on a war with heaven: theſe, I ſay, are an old debt lying on the head of Scotland, England, and Ireland, for which God will purſue them, and purſue ſo as it will appear to be both for principal and intereſt during the time it has lain over. Theſe things are forgotten, or laughed at now as what we have no concern in: a ſtone is rolled to the mouth of that ſepulchre. But God will readily ariſe, if the ſtone were ſealed, and they forgot quite and clean: 1 Theſſ. v. 3. 'For 'when they ſhall ſay, Peace and ſafety; then ſudden 'deſtruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a wo'man with child; and they ſhall not eſcape.'

2dly, Error or corruption of principles ſpreading. This was foretold to happen in the latter days, 1 Tim. iv. 1. Now the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſsly, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils. Then the fountains men drink at, are poiſoned; the faith once delivered to the ſaints, is exchanged for ſtrong deluſions, to believe lyes; and many are in hazard of following their pernicious ways.

There are three dangerous engines of this kind that the gates of hell are directing this day againſt the foundation of the church built on the rock.

1. Legaliſm: an attempt againſt the grace of Chriſt, bringing in a ſcheme of religion that has no relation to Jeſus Chriſt and his Spirit, putting a virtuous life in the room of Chriſt's righteouſneſs for acceptance with God, and the exerting of natural powers in the room of the influences of his Spirit. By which means the corruption of nature, and the neceſſity of regeneration, are buried in deep ſilence; and living by faith, attending the Spirit's influences, and communion with God, are branded as Enthuſiaſm; and deſertion is accounted the production of a crazy imagination. Thus a refined Heatheniſm is palmed on us for Chriſtianity.

2. Arianiſm: an attempt againſt the perſon of Chriſt, bringing a Chriſt that is not the Father's equal, not the moſt high God, independent, and ſelf-exiſtent: but an inferior god, an arbitrary, dependent being: thus ſtriking at the foundation of our ſalvation, taking away the infinite dignity of his perſon, which gives the ſufficient value to his ſacrifice. And it is to be feared, that when Chriſt ariſeth to vindicate his own glory, it will be found that the church of Scotland has not given ſufficient teſtimony of their indignation againſt this blaſphemy.

3. Deiſm: an attempt againſt all revealed religion, caſting off the whole goſpel and Bible by the lump, with the whole way of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; leaving us nothing, but that there is a God, and that this God is to be ſerved as our reaſon directs. Such a ſtroke was not given againſt Chriſtianity in the time of Prelacy, no not in the times of Popery. Scotland may, and ſhall ſay, Alas! for the union with England; we were going to ruin before, but we have run to ruin ſince that fatal time, as to our moſt valuable concerns.

3dly, Immoralities abounding. That this is the caſe in the laſt days, ye may conſult the text and context, 'This alſo know, that in the laſt days perilous times 'ſhall come. For men ſhall be lovers of their ownſelves, 'covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, diſobedient to 'parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affec'tion, truce-breakers, falſe accuſers, incontinent, fierce, 'deſpiſers of thoſe that are good, traitors, heady, high'minded, lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God; 'having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power 'thereof.' The opening of the ſluice of impiety and wickedneſs, and the ſpreading and prevailing of ſcandalous practices, make perilous times.

If theſe make perilous times, ours are very perilous. I doubt if ever contempt of God, his goſpel, and all that is ſacred, was ever at a greater height. The firſt table and ſecond table are trampled on with a witneſs; ſo that we may ſay, Hoſ. iv. 1, 2, 3. 'Hear the word of the 'Lord, ye children of Iſrael: for the Lord hath a con'troverſy with the inhabitants of the land, becauſe there 'is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the 'land. By ſwearing, and lying, and killing, and ſteal'ing, and committing adultery, they break out, and 'blood toucheth blood. Therefore ſhall the land mourn, 'and every one that dwelleth therein ſhall languiſh, 'with the beaſts of the field, and with the fowls of hea'ven, yea, the fiſhes of the ſea alſo ſhall be taken away.' God's worſhip is contemned and ſlighted, his name abuſed and blaſphemed, and his Sabbaths profaned. Unfaithfulneſs prevails in all relations; murders, uncleanneſs, marriage-vows never more lightly treated, injuſtice and fraud in dealing, lying covetouſneſs, &c. What can be found among a people profeſſing the name of Chriſt, to bring on wrath, that is not to be found in our land at this day?

Here let us view the ſcandalous outbreakings among us. Many ſuch we ſee, opening the mouths of enemies to blaſpheme the way of God. But how few do we ſee truly humbled, but almoſt always more concerned for their own blaſted honour and reputation, than for the honour of God? And unleſs it be in thoſe things which by uſe require public ſatisfaction, people cannot endure to be touched or checked with their faults told them.

Many other things there are that make perilous times, and which make ours ſo; ſuch as, the hiding of the Lord's face, threatnings and ſymptoms of wrath; among which may be reckoned the terrible thunders by which ſo many were killed on the laſt day of July this year: the ſhock which the fruits of the earth endured in the harveſt, though providence ſeaſonably interpoſed, yet in a way that gives occaſion to ſing of mercy and judgment, and the murrain that in ſome places has appeared among the cattle.

But one thing deſerves particular notice, as rendering our time perilous, viz. the church joining with the ſtate in robbing the people of God of their juſt right to chuſe their own miniſters; and thruſting in miniſters on congregations violently and over their bellies. This is a ready way to fill the church with naughty men, to ruin religion, and quite mar the intereſt and ſucceſs of the goſpel, which are already very low.

I might here ſhew in what reſpects ſuch times are perilous, that they are perilous to the preſent and ſucceeding generations, to their ſouls and to their bodies.

And how they come in the courſe of providence to fall out by its permiſſion, viz. for proving and trying men, 1 Cor. xi. 19. 'For there muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifeſt among you.'

But I will conclude, exhorting you therefore to know and lay it to heart, that our times are perilous times, and therefore to beſtir yourſelves for your own ſafety, and be on your guard. Let the peril of the times cauſe you to join yourſelf to God in Chriſt, and keep near him; beware of worldly-mindedneſs, inſtability and wavering, pride and ſelf conceit, Rev. vii. 3. Strive againſt the ſtream, if ye would not be carried away with it.

The End of Time, and the Myſtery of God finiſhed with it.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in the Year 1732.

Rev. x. 6, 7.

And ſware—— that there ſhould be time no longer: but---the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed.

THE going out of an old year, and the coming in of a new, doth ſo natively lead to conſider the the paſſing nature of time, that they muſt be very carnal, light, and inconſiderate, to whom ſuch an event occaſions not ſerious thoughts. For while one ſees time on ſuch a run, how can one miſs the thought of its running out, or that there ſhall be time no longer? as ſaith the text.

In which we have a depoſition, or a matter declared upon oath, made by a mighty angel, Chriſt the Angel of the covenant, whoſe glory and majeſty is inconceivable, as clothed with a cloud; darkening all created glory, as the ſun doth the ſtars; and whoſe diſpenſations of providence are ſteady and pure, as pillars of fire, verſ. 1. The geſture uſed by him in ſwearing, is not laying his hand upon the book, though he had one in his hand; that is Antichriſt's way of ſwearing, but it is lifting up the hand to heaven, verſ. 5. the natural and approved geſture of an oath, as being a ſolemn invocating of God who dwelleth there. The ſcope of the depoſition is, to comfort the church againſt the heavineſs of the reign of Antichriſt brought in by the fifth trumpet, as the Turks were by the ſixth. The parts of the depoſition are two:

1. The negative part, that time ſhould be no longer; Gr. that time ſhall not be any more. Moſt interpreters underſtand this reſtrictedly, of the time of the Roman empire, or the Antichriſtian tyranny; others, abſolutely, of the world's ending, times removal for good and all, and eternity ſucceeding in its room; no more days, months, or years. This I take to be the true ſenſe. For, (1.) It is agreeable to the ſcope, being a general including the particular of the time of the reign of Antichriſt, who is not totally deſtroyed till under the ſeventh vial, that brings in the end of the world, chap. xvi. 17---21. (2.) Moſt agreeable to the word, which is preciſely time, not the time. (3.) To the circumſtances of the action noted in the context: the little book, pointing at the ſmall number of events remaining to be fulfilled; the right foot on the ſea, the left on the earth, noting his univerſal dominion, how he could make the ſea move no more, and tread away this earth, verſ. 2. then the ſeven thunders, noting ſeven other things to take place under the ſeventh trumpet, viz. the ſeven vials, which bring the world to an end. And in relation to theſe, it is ſaid time ſhould not be any more, or longer than theſe are running, verſ. 3, 4. Finally, the deſcription of the party ſworn by, viz. God, that is, Chriſt himſelf, who ſwears by himſelf; deſcribed here as living for ever, moſt appoſitely to the mentioning of the ending of time, as Creator of the world and all therein, and therefore able to bring it to an end.

Object. But to what purpoſe ſhould that be confirmed by an oath, which John knew well enough, and nobody is ignorant of? Anſw. John knew before, and ſo did others, that time and the world would have an end ſome time or other; but he knew not that it would end under the ſeventh trumpet, that it would not laſte a moment longer than that trumpet; which is the thing here aſſerted. The which leads to,

2. The poſitive part of the oath, that in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed. Some underſtand this myſtery in a reſtrained ſenſe; ſome of the end of the world, the reſurrection and general judgment: ſome of the calling of the Jews, and overthrow of Antichriſt. And theſe indeed are called myſteries, 1 Cor. xv. 51. 'Behold, I ſhew you a myſtery; We ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed,' Rom. xi. 25. 'I would not, brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſtery,—that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael, until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in,' 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. 'The myſtery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.' But no where, that I have obſerved, is any of them called the myſtery of God. Beſides, the finiſhing of the myſtery, here mentioned, plainly ſuppoſeth, that myſtery, whatever it was, to be begun, and well far on before the ſeventh trumpet, or days of the ſeventh angel; which agrees to none of theſe. Wherefore I underſtand it with others more generally, and take it to be meant of the whole of the divine management in the world, in purſuance of and according to the goſpel ſcheme and contrivance, called the myſtery of God, Col. ii. 2. This is a myſtery of many parts; therefore called the myſteries of the kingdom of God, Luke viii. 10. all which parts being myſterious, the kingdom itſelf is a myſtery, known only to believers, truly, though yet imperfectly; as ſaith our Lord, Mark iv. 11. 'Unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all theſe things are done in parables.' The myſtery of the kingdom of God. There have been many kingdoms in the world, eſpecially the four monarchies, all which are now gone; the kingdom of Antichriſt, a myſtery of iniquity, has long made a great figure, and is not yet come wholly to an end: but in the time of all theſe God had, and yet has a kingdom, which is the myſtery of God, which has long been, and yet is going on. But it will be finiſhed in bringing the work to perfection, in completing the happineſs of his people, and ruin of his enemies, at the end of time. Then Chriſt ſhall have delivered up the kingdom finiſhed, 1 Cor. xv. 24. The time of the finiſhing it is in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, which days take in all the ſeven vials. When it ſhall begin to ſound, then the finiſhing of the myſtery of God begins, the laſt period of that myſterious kingdom of God comes in: the which finiſhing is carried on by degrees, in the ſeven vials, till it is perfectly finiſhed by the laſt of them. And then time, and the myſtery of God in his kingdom in this world, end both together. Now we are within the finiſhing period.

Two doctrines may be deduced from the words.

DOCT. I. It is a matter of greateſt weight and concern to mankind, that there is a certain period ſet, and in the general revealed, at which time comes to an end, and never ſhall be any more. This is a ſworn point, and a good man will not ſwear but what is of weight: it is ſworn by the Lord himſelf, therefore it is of the greateſt weight.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall conſider,

I. This truth itſelf, That there is a period ſet at which time ſhall be no more.

II. The weight of it, and its concern to mankind.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider this truth itſelf, That there is a period ſet at which time ſhall be no more. This implies,

1. That time had a beginning. Time is the meaſure of the creature's duration by its ſeveral parts: ſo it could be of no ancienter date than the creation. It began with the world, Gen. i. 1. There was a day, a year, that was the firſt, before which there was not another. But eternity was before, and will be after time, which therefore appears at preſent like a ſmall iſland lifting up its head in the midſt of the ocean.

2. Time has run from the beginning, and is running on in an uninterrupted courſe of addition of moments, hours, days, months and years. About four thouſand years of it paſſed before the birth of Chriſt, and now is begun the one thouſand ſeven hundred and thirty ſecond year from that happy period. So there want not three hundred years now to complete the world's week of ſix thouſand years, after which many have thought the eternal Sabbath would come. But as yet time is, and the myſtery of God is not yet finiſhed, nor the treaty with ſinners broken off.

3. Time will come to an end. It has rung long, but it will run out at length. The laſt ſand in the glaſs of this world will paſs, and then its glaſs is run out, and not to be turned again. The period is ſet in the divine decree, the laſt day and hour, though no man knows them.

Now time coming to an end, the things of time go too, being ſwept away with it. So, that time ſhall be no longer, nor be any more, ſpeaks theſe following weighty things; viz. That there is a ſet period at which,

1. This preſent world ſhall be no more; theſe heavens and earth ſhall paſs away by the general conflagration, 2 Pet. iii. 10. 'The day of the Lord will come 'as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens ſhall 'paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall 'melt with fervent heat; the earth alſo, and the works 'that are therein ſhall be burnt up.' Time and they began together, and they will end together. Men are buſy now, who to get moſt of this earth: and a mighty pother is made about it, like ants in a hillock; and could they get the heavens marched too, they would no doubt incloſe ſo much of them for themſelves alſo. But then the hillocks will be ſcattered, the ſtage taken down, not a bit of earth left for their foot.

2. New years ſhall be no more. The year will come, the month, the day, hour, and minute, after which there ſhall never be another. All theſe are parts of time: ſo time being at an end, there will be no more of them. The annual motion of the ſun, and its diurnal motion about the earth, make years and days; but where are they when the heavens paſs away with a great noiſe, and the earth is burnt up? So the ſcripture frequently mentions the laſt days, as John vi. 40. Let us improve our years then for eternity, and count our days ſo as to apply our hearts to wiſdom.

3. The different ſeaſons will be no more. There will be no more ſummer and winter, ſeed-time and harveſt. They were once intermitted for a while, during the deluge: then it was ſecured there ſhould not be another intermitting of them, but withal that they ſhould end for good and all, with time, Gen. viii. 22. 'While 'the earth remaineth, ſeed time and harveſt, and cold 'and heat, and ſummer and winter, and day and night, 'ſhall not ceaſe.' There will be an eternal ſpring in heaven; but an eternal winter as it were in hell, where is gnaſhing of teeth. Now theſe ſeaſons roll about; but time ending, that revolution of ſeaſons is no more.

4. The buſineſs of this life ſhall be no more. There ſhall be no more tilling of the ground, tending of flocks, merchandizing, nor trades. All theſe belong to the faſhion of this world which paſſeth away. There are none of them without toil: but then the righteous reſt from their labours; and the wicked will have their toil of another ſort, under the burden of divine wrath. How unhappy muſt they be who have no pleaſure nor ſatisfaction in any thing elſe, ſince theſe are not to laſte!

5. The means of ſuſtaining this life ſhall be no more. There ſhall be no more eating, drinking, nor ſleeping. Theſe take up a great part of our time now, in the doing of them: and in providing for back and belly the whole time of many goes. But time being gone, the ſaints ſhall be ſupported and ſatisfied without meat or drink, and refreſhed without ſleep; and the wicked will not get a drop of water to cool their tongue, nor reſt night nor day.

6. Relations ſhall be no more. Time going diſſolves them all, as fellow travellers part when come to their journey's end. There ſhall be no more magiſtrates and ſubjects, miniſters and people, huſbands and wives, parents and children, maſters and ſervants: Job iii. 19. The ſmall and great are there, and the ſervant is free from his maſter. Only the relation betwixt Chriſt and his people as head and members, which is not of this world, ſhall remain; and ſo the relation to God as his children, Luke xx. 35, 36. who are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection. Among Adam's children, the children are ſubject to their parents, and inferiors to ſuperiors; but at the reſurrection, all the ſaints will be immediately ſubject to God, one as well as another: all the wicked being then ſubjected under him as his enemies.

7. Space for repentance ſhall be no more. Now ſinners have time to repent and turn to God, aſſured of welcome on their returning. But time once gone, as the tree is fallen, it muſt lie for ever. There ſhall be no means of grace, offers of Chriſt, nor place of repentance, Matth. xxv. 10. The time of trial is over; and they who have miſimproven it, can never be taken on a ſecond trial.

8. Tribulation and adverſity of the godly ſhall be no more. They muſt have it, cannot miſs it: but then it is in the world only, as ſaith our Lord, John xvi. 33. 'In the world ye ſhall have tribulation: but be of good 'cheer, I have overcome the world.' When time is at an end, their trials are at an end, and they ſhall have an eternal recompence, the days of their mourning are ended. They ſhall look back on their ſorrows as waters that fail; their griefs ran long, but the brook dries up, being but a winter-brook.

9. laſtly, The proſperity and comfort of the wicked (Luke xvi. 25.) ſhall be no more. Now the ſun of proſperity often ſhines on them, and the godly are ſometimes ſtumbled at it, as you will find in Pſal. lxxiii.; and they themſelves hardened by it, as appears from Eccl. viii. 11. ‘Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil.’ But ſtay till the end of time, that the web of providence be cut out, it will appear there was no cauſe for either of theſe. Whatever comforts they enjoy in time, there will be a total eclipſe of their comfort at the end of time.

II. The ſecond thing is, The weight of this truth, and its concern to mankind. That it is of weight and concern to them, appears in its being ſworn to them; which implies theſe three things.

1. That men are very heedleſs about it, and ſlow to believe it, and be impreſſed with it. The virgins would fain ſlumber and ſleep, and therefore care not for looking for the coming of the Bridegroom. Moſt men are ſo in love with the things of time, that they deſire no other ſtate of affairs. And becauſe they have no will time ſhould end, they work up themſelves to a belief, that there is little hazard of its ending; and confirm themſelves therein, from that there is no appearance of its ending; like thoſe ſcoffers who ſaid, ‘Where is the promiſe of his coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation,’ 2 Pet. iii. 4.

2. A legal intimation made to them of its ending. Whether it is believed or not, it is duly intimated, in the moſt ſolemn manner, unto all to whom the Bible comes. So they are fairly warned, and cannot pretend ignorance: and this intimation will have its weight certainly, when the thing is ſeen fulfilled.

3. That the period of time is unalterably fixed, the bounds of it ſet, beyond which it cannot go; for it is ſet by an oath. Often did the Iſraelites provoke the Lord, yet he bore with them; but at length he ſware, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt. And there was no reverſing of that. Now he has ſet the bounds of time, and confirmed it by an oath, no prayers or entreaties can prevail to carry it a ſingle hour beyond the ſet period.

The weight of the thing lies in theſe three.

1. That then that which concerns mankind's happineſs or miſery, is completed; the ſtate of probation is over, and the ſtate of recompence takes place in perfection, both as to their bodies and ſouls. Here at this turning point, the end of time, every one is brought to his utmoſt pitch, the godly of happineſs, the wicked of miſery. And what can be of greater weight?

2. That then eternity ſucceeds, the ſtate of all for ever unalterable, no end to be expected more. Whatever caſe we are now in, we know it will have an end, there will be an alteration, and we may meaſure the time of its continuance; but eternity fixes unalterably, and there is no more to meaſure by. Therefore this matter is of greateſt weight.

3. laſtly, That now or never muſt be done what is to be done for eternity. Hence our Lord ſaid, John ix. 4. I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work. Time ending, no more can be done of that nature. It is not to be expected it will begin again, that men may do what they did not while it laſted.

USE. Then be exhorted ſuitably to improve this intimation of time's ending. And,

1. Look beyond time, this world, and the ſtate of things in it; carry your views into the other world, to eternity: 2 Cor. iv. 18. ‘Look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen are eternal.’ O why ſhould we confine our view to time, which muſt end and be no more, and neglect the ſucceeding eternity, which affords a boundleſs proſpect? It would be profitably ſpent time that were ſpent in meditating on eternity, what we ſhall be there, what ſhall be our eternal lot.

2. Lift your hearts from off the things of time, and ſet them on thoſe that are eternal, Col. iii. 2. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. It is impoſſible the former ſhould be a ſuitable portion for a rational creature, that muſt be for ever; ſince they muſt end with time. It is but a ſmall portion of the things of time we can get, however eagerly we purſue. But ſuppoſe we could have them all, there is yet a period ſet, at which even in that caſe we would have nothing. How much more wiſely would we act, to ſet our hearts on things that are eternal?

3. Uſe this world paſſingly, as pilgrims and ſtrangers in it; for the faſhion of it paſſeth, 1 Cor. vii. 29, 30, 31. ‘The time is ſhort. It remaineth, that both they that have wives, be as though they had none; and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they poſſeſſed not; and they that uſe this world, as not abuſing it: for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away.’ There is no wiſdom in dipping deep therein, loading ourſelves with its thick clay. That will but retard us in our way to the better world, and occaſion ſuch a throng, as to keep us from our main work till the time for it is over and gone.

4. Let not the frowns of this world, the troubles and trials of the preſent life, make deep impreſſion on us: let us guard ourſelves againſt that, by conſidering they will not laſte. They are but clouds, that be they never ſo thick and black, will vaniſh away ere long. And if we are Chriſt's, we will ſoon have an eternal ſun-ſhine; if not, the thickeſt clouds that are here, are nothing comparable to the blackneſs and darkneſs for ever.

5. Be not lifted up with the world's ſmiles, nor value yourſelves on worldly proſperity; for time will put an end to this alſo. Time honours, wealth, and eaſe, are but like bubbles of water, that in a moment will come to nothing. Whatever differences be now among men, occaſioned by theſe outward things, they are confined within the boundaries of a few years; which being run out, the ſervant is as good as the maſter, and the poor as the rich.

6. laſtly, Improve time while it laſtes, for the ends it is given you for. And that is for,

1. Laying a good foundation for eternity, getting out of your natural ſtate into the ſtate of grace, believing on Chriſt, and repenting of ſin.

2. Living to the honour of God, endeavouring to act in your ſphere for propagating the name and kingdom of Chriſt. Hence ſaid the good king Hezekiah, Iſ. xxxviii. 19. ‘The living, the living he ſhall praiſe thee, as I do this day; the father to the children ſhall make known thy truth.’

3. laſtly, Serving your generation in uſefulneſs to mankind, ſeeking to forward the ſpiritual and temporal good of others; as David did, Acts xiii. 36. who ſerved his own generation by the will of God.

DOCT. II. As time is continued for carrying on the myſtery of God in his kingdom among men, ſo there is a period ſet, at which that myſtery will be finiſhed, and time end with it.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, we ſhall conſider,

I. The myſtery of God in his kingdom among men, generally and particularly.

II. The relation there is between the myſtery of God and time.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the myſtery of God in his kingdom among men. And in the general we ſhall ſhew, 1ſt, What the myſtery of God is:

2dly, In what reſpects the kingdom of God is a myſtery.

Firſt, We ſhall conſider what that myſtery of God is. A myſtery is a ſecret and hidden thing, hid under ſome vail or other from the eyes of beholders; which vail muſt be drawn by, ere one can ſee it. The ſcripture mentions two myſteries.

1. The myſtery of iniquity, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. ‘The myſtery of iniquity doth already work.’ And that is the kingdom of Antichriſt, Rev. xvii. 5. ‘And upon her forehead was a name written, Myſtery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth.’ That is a myſtery, hiding the greateſt iniquity under a vail of ſanctity, carrying on the deſigns of hell under pretences of Heaven's countenance, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9, 10. ‘Even him whoſe coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, in them that periſh; becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved.’ Hence, for many hundreds of years, the world wondered after the beaſt, taking Antichriſt, the great enemy of Chriſt, for his vicar and chief ſervant: though ſome now and then ſaw through this myſtery, and at the reformation the vail was taken off to ſeveral nations.

2. The myſtery of God, as in the text. And as the former is a myſtery of iniquity, this is a myſtery of godlineſs, 1 Tim. iii. 6. ‘Without controverſy, great is the myſtery of godlineſs.’ Godly in its nature and tendency. As the former is the kingdom of Antichriſt, this is the kingdom of Chriſt, the kingdom God carries on among men by Chriſt, as the devil carries on the other among them by Antichriſt. So the ſcripture manifeſtly refers this myſtery to Chriſt, 1 Tim. iii. 16. ‘Without controverſy, great is the myſtery of godlineſs; God was manifeſt in the fleſh,’ &c. Col. ii. 2.—‘To the acknowledgement of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt.’ There are myſteries of God in nature: but the great myſtery of God is in Chriſt; in whom there lies hid more of God than in a thouſand worlds, and by whom God carries on a myſterious kingdom among men, the kingdom of Chriſt, called the myſtery of the kingdom of God, Mark iv. 11. For the better underſtanding whereof,

1. Conſider, God from eternity choſe to himſelf, out of fallen mankind, a church, in the ſalvation of whom he ſhould be glorified for ever. Theſe are ‘the general aſſembly, and church of the firſt born, which are written in heaven,’ Heb. xii. 23. They were to come into the world in different ages, one generation of them after another, and to tarry an appointed time in the world, ere they ſhould be tranſported into heaven. And many of them are not yet born, nor will be in a haſte.

2. There behoved to be a divine conduct about them, for fulfilling of this purpoſe of God anent them. There were many things ſtood in the way of it. They are naturally enemies to God, and would not come to him: without ſtrength, and unable to come; but there is a bar of juſtice in their way, as ſinners, that mars their acceſs, though they were both willing and able: there are enemies to keep them back altogether, and when they do come to him, to draw them away from him again. Therefore it is God himſelf muſt take the conduct of them for that purpoſe, otherwiſe it will never be fulfilled: John vi. 44. No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him. Phil. ii. 13. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleaſure.

3. The Father has devolved this conduct of them on his Son Jeſus Chriſt, given him the kingdom among men for fulfilling this eternal purpoſe of love: Iſa. lv. 4. ‘Behold, I have given him for a witneſs to the people, a leader and commander to the people.’ God had a people in Egypt whom he minded for Canaan: he gave Moſes and Aaron the charge to bring them out, to lead them through the wilderneſs forty years, and then Joſhua to bring them in to, and ſeat them in the promiſed land. Theſe all were types of Chriſt, on whom is devolved the charge of bringing the church of the elect out of the ſtate of their ſpiritual bondage, through this world into heaven. Thus the whole power is lodged in the hand of Chriſt the Son of God, John v. 22. ‘For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son:’ and he being veſted with it by the Father, is thereby his king; i. e. ſet up by him, adminiſtering the kingdom in his name: Pſal. ii. 6. ‘Yet have I ſet my king upon my holy hill of Zion.’

4. Chriſt having received this truſt from his Father, has been under the Old-Teſtament, all along, and now is, executing it, and will continue ſo to the end of time till he has fulfilled the divine purpoſe, and finiſhed the conduct, and ſo deliver up the elect perfected. This is the kingdom of Chriſt, which alſo is the kingdom of God, becauſe given him of God, and adminiſtered for the fulfilling of the purpoſe of God. And this adminiſtration being perfected, the kingdom is delivered up finiſhed, the eternal purpoſe being fulfilled: 1 Cor. xv. 24. ‘Then cometh the end, when he ſhall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he ſhall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power.’

5. laſtly, Our Lord's management of this truſt, and his conduct in the matter, is very myſterious, but exactly according to the plan laid in the eternal decree, and given him of his father, Eph. i. 11. ‘In whom alſo we have obtained an inheritance, being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will.’ There is a myſtery of the Father's will, verſe 9. Having made known unto us the myſtery of his will, according to his good pleaſure, which he hath purpoſed in himſelf. This is the rule of his kingdom and conduct, which therefore muſt be myſterious. Therefore it is called the myſtery of God, as being a myſterious management, wherein the purpoſe of God is carried on.

Thus ye ſee, that the myſtery of God is the kingdom of Chriſt, or the conduct and managing of matters by Jeſus Chriſt, to the fulfilling of the purpoſes of God, for the complete ſalvation of the church.

Secondly, I will ſhew in what reſpects it is a myſtery, the myſtery of God; or that the kingdom of Chriſt, and his management, is a myſtery, the myſtery of God.

1. In itſelf, it is a hidden and abſtruſe thing, Rom. xi. 33. ‘O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out!’ Job xi. 7, 8, 9. ‘Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? it is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than hell, what canſt thou know? the meaſure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the ſea.’ It conſiſts of the deep things of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10. which the creature may ſtand and admire, but cannot dive into the bottom of. It appears among men indeed, but ſtill as an unfathomble deep, requiring our humble attention to it, and an entire reſignation, but not to be ſounded. God ſhewed his infinite wiſdom in the works of creation; but the work of redemption and ſalvation of a loſt world, was the maſter-piece of that wiſdom. If the former is a myſtery, how much more the latter?

2. To natural men it is an abſolute myſtery, 1 Cor. 14. For ‘the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are fooliſhneſs unto him: neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.’ They do not at all ſee into it, their eyes cannot pierce it, nor can they break the ſhell of it. They ſee its outward appearance in the world, which is very mean; and they judge of it accordingly, ſo fall into fatal miſtakes about it; preferring the vanities of the world unto the riches of that kingdom, the ſlavery of their own luſts to the ſervice of Chriſt; ſo that Chriſt is a ſtumbling-ſtone and rock of offence to them. It is true, they may think they know this myſtery of God; for they may be able to talk of it, yea to preach it. But,

(1.) Though they know the words in which the myſtery of God is revealed, they know not the thing itſelf. As one hearing a parable in his mother tongue, underſtands the grammatical ſenſe of the words, yet perceives not the hidden meaning wrapt up in them: ſo they know the words, but perceive not the heavenly things propoſed in them; Mark iv. 11.

(2.) They know not the myſtery by the Spirit's teaching: all they have of it is by human teaching: ſo their knowledge of it cannot reach into the heart of it, Jude 19. They are deſtitute of ſaving illumination; and the higheſt ſpring of their knowledge of it is fleſh and blood, improven by external objective revelation; which is not ſufficient. Internal revelation alone is ſo, Matth. xvi. 17.

(3.) They know it not by experience, which is neceſſary to give the true knowledge of it. Hence is that exhortation, 1 Pet. ii. 2, 3. As new born babes, deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if ſo be that ye have taſted that the Lord is gracious. They know the myſtery by hearſay, but never felt the power of it on their ſpirits: ſo they know no more of it, than one may know of honey or vinegar, who never taſted how ſweet the one is, and how ſour the other.

3. It is a myſtery to the godly themſelves, the real members of the kingdom of Chriſt. None in the world have ſuch knowledge of it as they, and none have ſuch a ſenſe of the myſteriouſneſs of it. Whatever they reach of it, it is ſtill a myſtery in their eyes. See how Paul ſpeaks of it, 1 Tim. iii. 16. 'Without controverſy, great is the myſtery of godlineſs,' &c. Col. iv. 3, 4. 'Withal, praying alſo for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to ſpeak the myſtery of Chriſt; that I may make it manifeſt, as I ought to ſpeak.' Hence, after all their progreſs made in it, they are ſtill to learn; they ſee many difficulties in it which they are not able to comprehend. Conſider here,

(1.) They are but initiated into this myſtery while they are here, and cannot expect a full inſight into it, till they come to glory, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Now we ſee through a glaſs, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then ſhall I know even as alſo I am known. They get as much inſight into the myſtery of Chriſt's kingdom and management as keeps them from ſtumbling at him; and all the wiſdom of the world and learning cannot give ſo much, 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. 'we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and to the Greeks, fooliſhneſs: but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God.'

(2.) What inſight into it they have, is not owing to their own penetration, but is the gift of God to them. Hence ſays our Lord, Mark iv. 11. 'Unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God,' &c. It is the Spirit's teaching, who draws by the vail, and opens the myſtery. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. ii. 10. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. And when the Spirit withdraws, they are apt to be offended at ſome pieces of his management, being ſo puzzled with them that they know not what to make of them, Pſal. lxxiii.

4. It is a myſtery even to the angels. None was able but Chriſt himſelf to open the ſealed book, or look thereon, Rev. v. 3. The angels in heaven are perfect in knowledge: but their knowledge was, and is capable of increaſe, and did receive increaſe by the more open ſetting up of the kingdom of Chriſt in the world by the goſpel, whereby many folds of the wiſdom of God in this myſtery were opened to them which they ſaw not before. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Eph. iii. 9, 10. 'And to make all men ſee, what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery, which from the beginning of the world, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jeſus Chriſt: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wiſdom of God.' And ſtill they regard it as a myſtery to be dived into, 1 Pet. i. 12.——which things the angels deſire to look into. And yet they know not the time of its finiſhing, Mark xiii. 32. 'But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven.'

5. laſtly, It will continue a myſtery to the end, as is implied in the text. There have been things in the world dark myſteries for a time, which yet have at length been fully diſcovered and underſtood. But as the divine conduct by Chriſt has been a myſtery in all generations paſt, it will be ſo in all generations to come. It will never be fully underſtood till it is completed, the web fully wrought, cut out, and laid before our eyes altogether. Then will there be a ſurpriſing beauty and harmony ſeen through the whole.

More particularly, for opening of this myſtery of God, we ſhall conſider it under a threefold view.

1ſt, As it was laid before time.

2dly, As begun and carried on in time.

3dly, As finiſhed with time.

FIRST, We ſhall conſider this myſtery as it was laid before time. It is not a device of yeſterday, a late or new contrivance; but older than men or angels, even from eternity: Eph. i. 9. 'Having made known unto us the myſtery of his will, according to his good pleaſure, which he hath purpoſed in himſelf,' compare chap. iii. 11. 'According to the eternal purpoſe which he purpoſed in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.' If we would ſee the foundation and plan of this myſtery, we muſt look back before all ages unto the depths of the eternal counſels in the breaſt of God, before the world was, now revealed to us by the goſpel. And here we may conſider, 1ſt, The ground upon which it was raiſed.

2dly, The myſtery itſelf.

Firſt, We ſhall conſider the ground upon which it was raiſed. And that was the eternal foreſight of man's fall from a ſtate of holineſs and happineſs, into a ſtate of ſin and miſery, Rom. ix. 21. This preſuppoſes a twofold purpoſe.

1. A purpoſe of creating man; Rev. iv. 11. Thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are, and were created. God from eternity happy in himſelf, while yet there was nothing in being but himſelf, purpoſed, for his own glory, to make a world, with a variety of creatures therein; and among them man, the chief of the inferior creation, capable to love, ſerve, and obey him, and to enjoy him as the reward of his obedience; liable to puniſhment in caſe of diſobedience.

2. A purpoſe of permitting man to fall, to leave him to the freedom of his own will, and not to hinder his falling away. God was not the cauſe of man's fall: for ſaith the apoſtle, James i. 13. Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But had he not permitted, nor willed not to hinder his fall, it could not have happened; Rev. iii. 7. 'Theſe things ſaith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man ſhutteth; and ſhutteth, and no man openeth.' This permiſſion taking place in time was then decreed from eternity, Eph. i. 11. 'Being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will.'

Hereupon God foreſaw the fall of man, how all mankind would be ruined in Adam by the breach of the covenant of works. And nothing being future, but all preſent, he ſaw and conſidered the whole race of mankind as loſt, ſunk as ſinners into a gulph of miſery, irremediable by any created hand whatſoever. This was the ground on which the myſtery of God was raiſed; this gave occaſion to the myſtery and plan thereof in the eternal counſel.

Secondly, The myſtery itſelf laid, in the eternal purpoſe, upon this ground. Wherein is to be obſerved,

1. The ſubject of the myſtery, the reſtoration or recovery of fallen man. This was the great buſineſs aimed to be carried on and finiſhed in the completing of it: this was the grand affair that the thoughts of God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, were from eternity ſet upon: Pſal. lxxxix. 19. Thou ſpakeſt in viſion to thy holy One, and ſaidſt, I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one choſen out of the people. Prov. viii. 31. Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, and my delights were with the ſons of men. 1 Pet. i. 2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt. A myſterious point:

(1.) Conſidering there was no ſuch deſign ſet on foot in favour of the fallen angels, though creatures of a ſuperior dignity to man. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Heb. ii. 16. 'Verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham.' Theſe veſſels of gold in the great houſe of God, fell down from their high ſtation, and were ſo cruſhed, that they became uſeleſs unleſs they were caſt anew. But God left them, and looked after them no more for ever. However, the veſſel of earth, man, falling and breaking to pieces, God purpoſed to gather up the broken ſherds, put them together again, and reſtore the earthen veſſel. Who can fathom this myſtery of his will? It is called, Tit. iii. 4. 'The kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man.' It will be the eternal admiration of elect men and angels.

(2.) The impediments that lay in the way of this reſtoration, from the holy and juſt nature of God, and the corrupt nature of man, unſurmountable by all created power. Had the project been communicated to men and angels, how to remove theſe impediments, all would have ſtood mute, as in a matter beyond their comprehenſion. Hence ſays our Lord, Iſa. lxiii. 5. 'I looked, and there was none to help: and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought ſalvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me.'

(3.) The reſtoration was deſigned into a more excellent and honourable ſtate than he fell from. Man fell in the firſt Adam, is reſtored in the ſecond Adam: but the latter is infinitely preferable to the former, 1 Cor. xv. 47. 'The firſt man is of the earth, earthy; the ſecond man is the Lord from heaven:' which neceſſarily infers the excellency and preference of men as his members, to what they were in the firſt Adam.

(4.) That there was nothing in the creature to move him to all this. No beauty remained in the fallen creature, nothing to be ſeen there but perverſeneſs and enmity againſt God, which put him out of temper for ſeeking help of God. God had no need of man, neither could he profit him. But he loved man, Tit. iii. 4. forecited. He ſo 'loved him, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life,' John iii. 16. 'When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son.' Rom. v. 10. A myſterious point, to be reſolved only into ſovereign will and pleaſure: Matth. xi. 26. 'Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.'

2. The particular objects of the myſtery, namely, the election, a ſelect company of mankind: in which are,

(1.) The head elect, the man Chriſt. He was the Father's elect one. Hence ſays JEHOVAH, Iſa. xlii. 1. 'Behold my ſervant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my ſoul delighteth;' his firſt choice, in whom the reſt were choſen. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Eph. i. 4. 'According as he hath choſen us in him, before the foundation of the world;' he to be the head, they to be the body, verſe 22, 23. 'And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all.' That election fell on Chriſt both as the Son of God, Matth. xvii. 5. 'This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, hear ye him;' and as the ſon of man, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. 'I have laid help upon one that is mighty, I have exalted one choſen out of the people;' as a member of Adam's family, as well as of the heavenly family, Luke iii. And here is a myſterious point, a clean thing to be brought out of an unclean, a holy thing made of a woman, a daughter of fallen Adam. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Gal. iv. 4. God ſent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law. Which the angel accounts for thus, Luke i. 35. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.

(2.) The body elect; that is, a ſelect number of mankind choſen out from among the reſt, and given to Chriſt for the body to be by him headed: Eph. i. 4. 'According as he hath choſen us in him, before the foundation of the world.' Theſe were of the ſame corrupt maſs with the reſt of mankind, and might have been paſſed by as well as others: but God choſe them to everlaſting life, and gave them to Chriſt in the eternal decree for his: John xvii. 6. 'I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world, thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me;' while he reprobated, rejected, or paſſed by the reſt. Here is a myſtery, an awful myſtery, which the apoſtle reſolves into the ſovereign dominion of God, Rom. ix. 21. 'Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump, to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour?' Who the perſons are, is kept ſecret, and will be all along till the end of the world, at which time that matter will be laid wide open. Now it is our buſineſs to obey the goſpel; and none can know their election, till they have believed; then it may be concluded from the fruits of it. But no man's reprobation can be known, whether by himſelf or others, in this world, except in the caſe of ſinning the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which many doubt can now be fallen into: ſo whoever pretend to give marks of it, do but diſcover their dangerous raſhneſs and inconſideration, and ſerve the intereſt of hell. Sure in this caſe 'the ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God: but thoſe things which are revealed, belong unto us, and to our children for ever.' Deut. xxix. 29.

3. The hand into which the management of the myſtery was committed. That was Chriſt the Son of God, the ſecond perſon of the glorious Trinity: John v. 22. 'For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.' Him the Father appointed king in Zion, Leader and Commander to the people, the Captain of ſalvation, to bring the deſigned ſons unto glory. He was choſen for that end, and his commiſſion deſigned him from eternity; in view of which he rejoiced before the world was, Prov. viii. 31. forecited.

A wonderful myſtery, that the King's own Son was appointed repairer of the breach betwixt God and man, the Shepherd of Iſrael to gather together the ſtray ſheep, and feed them. But leſs would not do; John iii. 16. For 'God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.' The ſlighting of Chriſt then is the ſlighting of the myſtery of God as it was laid.

4. The method of carrying on the myſtery. It was appointed to be carried on in a way ſurprizing to men and angels, viz. That the Son of God was to be incarnate, come down into our world in our nature; was to be inveſted with the office of a prieſt, and die a ſacrifice for ſin, and then enter heaven again as the interceſſor, bringing his blood within the vail; with the office of a Prophet, to reveal the eternal counſels of peace, and by force of light to reſcue the elect from the power of their ſpiritual darkneſs; and with the office of a King, to reſcue them by ſtrength of hand from the power of their enemies, and complete the happineſs of the whole body elect.

A myſterious method, which makes the apoſtle cry out, 1 Tim. iii. 16. ‘Without controverſy great is the myſtery of godlineſs; God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory:’ and which no man nor angel could have propoſed. It is only to be reſolved into the infinite wiſdom and free love of God. Which aggravates the guilt of the world's contempt of Chriſt.

5. The foundation of the myſtery, on and according to which it was to proceed. That was the covenant of grace from eternity concluded betwixt the Father and the Son, as ſecond Adam; Pſal. lxxxix. 3. ‘I have made a covenant with my choſen, I have ſworn unto David my ſervant;’ ‘the counſel of peace that was between them both,’ Zech. vi. 13. A myſterious contract, wherein the Son bound himſelf to fulfill all righteouſneſs the broken law could demand of the body elect, Matth. iii. 15. And the Father, on the other hand, promiſed thereupon a glorious reward to Chriſt himſelf, and eternal life to them, Phil. ii 9. Tit. i. 2. It is the fulfilling of this covenant, in the performing of the condition, and in adminiſtering of it, that makes the myſtery. And it is our perſonal entering into it in Chriſt, that brings us into the fellowſhip of the myſtery; while thoſe without the covenant are far from it.

6. laſtly, The great deſign and end of the myſtery. It is the moſt glorious contrivance that ever was: and the deſign of it muſt be of proportionable worth and excellency. It is twofold.

1. The ſubordinate and neareſt end. That is the ſalvation of the church of the elect, Luke xix. 10. For the Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt; to ſave them from ſin and wrath, and to make them completely happy for ever. This is the point that the whole of the myſtery terminates in; the deſign unto which every ſtep of the divine conduct and management in the world is levelled. Vain and fooliſh men on whom the world ſmiles, are apt to think that the world is, and is managed for them; and they deſpiſe the godly, if they are mean and low, as for the moſt part they are; the church is the object of their contempt. But it is the buſineſs of the deſpiſed church that is the chief deſign of providence in the world. Other things are managed with relation to it, ſo as beſt to carry on their ſalvation. It is for their cauſe that crowns and ſceptres are taken away and beſtowed, Iſa. xliii, 14. ‘Thus ſaith the Lord your Redeemer, the holy One of Iſrael, For your ſake I have ſent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles, and the Chaldeans, whoſe cry is in the ſhips;’ and for their ſakes the world is kept up, the corn grows, graſs ſprings, ſun and moon are kept circling about, and time ſpun out, 2 Cor. iv. 15. ‘For all things are for your ſakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thankſgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.’ And when there is no more uſe for them on their behalf, they ſhall be no more. That is a myſterious deſign, which the world cannot comprehend, will not believe.

2. The chief and higheſt end. That is the glory of God; Rom. xi. 36. ‘For of him, and through him, and to him are all things; to whom be glory for ever, Amen;’ the diſplay of his glorious perfections in the eyes of his creatures. God made the world for this end; and therein he diſplayed his infinite wiſdom, goodneſs, and power. But in this myſtery there is a far more ample diſplay of manifold wiſdom, rich goodneſs, and greateſt power, with exact juſtice, and riches of mercy and grace. More particularly,

1. It is the glory of God in his Son. He made the world through his Son, by his Spirit: but that glaſs repreſented only the glory of God in his firſt works. He deſigned to diſplay his glory in his Son; and for that cauſe to prepare him a body, a human nature; his latter work a more ſtupenduous work than the firſt; that the conſtellation of the divine perfections might together ſhine forth in him: Iſa. xlix. 3. ‘Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified,’ 2 Cor. iv. 6. ‘God who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt.’ This is the end of the myſtery of the divine conduct by Chriſt, John xiv. 13. ‘That the Father may be glorified in the Son,’ even in his deepeſt ſufferings, chap. xiii. 31. ‘Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.’ And it is ſo far the deſign of God in the myſtery, that God reckons not himſelf honoured at all but in his Son, chap. v. 22, 23. For the Father judgeth no man: but hath committed all judgement unto the Son: that all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him. Whence appears the fatal miſtake of blinded men diſhonouring Chriſt, under pretence of honouring his Father: whereby they run quite counter to the chief deſign of the myſtery of God, and fight againſt it, namely, the glory of God in his Son, the centre in which all the parts of the myſtery were to meet.

SECONDLY, We ſhall conſider the myſtery of God as begun and carried on in time. Here we may view in the general,

1ſt, The firſt opening of the myſtery,

2dly, The gradual opening of it.

3dly, The progreſs of it.

Firſt, We ſhall conſider the firſt opening of the myſtery. It lay hid from eternity in God, till Adam fell, and all the world was become guilty before God. Then upon that occaſion the ſealed book was opened, the myſtery revealed, and begun to be executed in paradiſe. It was opened,

1. In the promulgation of the promiſe of the goſpel, Gen. iii. 15. ‘I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed and her ſeed: it ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel.’ A ſurpriſing myſtery to our guilty firſt parents, which they neither had nor could have had any hopes of; that the Son of God becoming man, the ſeed of the woman, ſhould be bruiſed in the heel by the ſerpent; and bruiſe his head on the other hand, and ſo deſtroy the works of the devil.

2. In the offering of the firſt ſacrifices, with the ſkins whereof our naked firſt parents were clothed, Gen. iii. 21. Thus was Chriſt held forth as the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world. Thus the ſinner's acceptance with God through an imputed righteouſneſs, Rom. iii. 22.

Now Chriſt firſt entered on the execution of his office in the management of the myſtery of God committed to him, Gen. iii. 8. He began the work, he has been all along ſince carrying it on, and has not yet finiſhed it. He acted as a Prophet, revealing the counſel of God touching man's ſalvation; as a King, in emitting his royal proclamations, offering his indemnity to rebel-man, and declaring war againſt the devil; and as a Prieſt, in the ſacrifices offered.

Secondly, We ſhall conſider the gradual opening of the myſtery. Of this we have an account, Heb. i. 1. God at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets. It was opened by degrees, now a piece and then a piece, till it was fully opened in the apoſtolic times. The patriarchal church had the morning of the opening of the myſtery; Adam and Eve got the dawning of it in the revelation of Chriſt to them as the ſeed of the woman; and it ſtill grew lighter by degrees. He was revealed afterwards as the ſeed of Abraham; thereafter as the ſeed of Iſaac; and then the tribe was revealed, that he was to come of, Judah: Gen. xlix. 10. ‘The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him ſhall the gathering of the people be.’

The Jewiſh church had the forenoon of it. To them the family he was to come of was determined, namely, the houſe of David, the place of his birth, Bethlehem. He was lively pointed out in the Levitical ordinances; and to him all the prophets bare witneſs. Moſes witneſſed his prophetical office, David ſpeaks of his kingdom and prieſthood. David, Iſaiah, and others, ſpoke of his ſufferings, his reſurrection, victory, and triumph. At length the Baptiſt pointed him out to their eyes, he being bodily preſent with them: but there was a miſt before their eyes, that they knew him not, but fulfilled the ſcriptures in crucifying him.

The Chriſtian church got the noon-day light of it, after Chriſt was aſcended into heaven. Then the Spirit was poured out, the Gentiles were called, and made partakers of the myſtery. Then was the myſtery opened at the rate it had never been before, that the angels themſelves ſaw more of it than ever they had ſeen. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Eph. iii. 8, 9, 10. ‘Unto me, who am leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, is this grace given, that I ſhould preach among the Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; and to make all men ſee, what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery, which from the beginning of the world, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jeſus Chriſt: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wiſdom of God.’ But yet it continued a myſtery ſtill.

Thirdly, We ſhall conſider the progreſs of the myſtery. Concerning which in the general we may notice three things.

1. It has never been interrupted ſince it began in paradiſe; the ſalvation of the church has all along been carried on, and matters managed for that end. Still the church has been continued in the world, ſometimes more ſometimes leſs viſible, Pſal. xxix. 10. Heb. The Lord ſat at the flood: and he hath ſat king for ever.

2. It has made ſuch progreſs, that by this time it is drawing towards the period of finiſhing it. The ſeveral generations of the patriarchal church of the elect, of the Jewiſh church, and ſeventeen generations of the Chriſtian, are now waſted over to the promiſed land; the great Manager having made the ſeveral diſpenſations they lived under, though ſome clearer, others darker, effectual for their ſalvation. The knowledge of the myſtery is now ſpread far and wide, in compariſon of what ſometime it was. The prophecies are moſtly fulfilled already; the prophecies of the flood, of the Egyptian bondage, the conqueſt of Canaan, the captivity of the ten tribes, the Babyloniſh captivity, the four monarchies, are all punctually fulfilled long ago. The prophecy of the coming of Chriſt, his death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion, put off about four thouſand years, is near ſeventeen hundred years ſince accompliſhed. So is that of the rejection of the Jews, and the coming of Antichriſt, fulfilled in our ſight. And there are but a few that remain.

3. laſtly, It is going on in our day, in the ſame powerful hand that has managed it all along. Our Lord, who has picked out his own out of all former generations, and brought them to their happineſs, is ſtill drawing forth his own of this generation, out of the world lying in wickedneſs, taking them under his conduct, and guiding them towards Immanuel's land. And they are ſurely a vaſt company that are got there already, through the progreſs made in the myſtery.

But for a more full view of the myſtery as executed in time, we ſhall conſider the eight following particulars of this myſterious kingdom; in every part of which there is a myſtery.

1ſt, The head of this kingdom.

2dly, The ſubjects of it.

3dly, The erection and conſervation of it.

4thly, The ſeat of it.

5thly, The extent of it.

6thly, The privileges of it.

7thly, The life and practice of it.

8thly, The manner of the conduct and management of it.

1ſt, The head of it, Jeſus Chriſt, is myſtery. And he is a myſtery, a myſterious head.

1. In the conſtitution of his perſon, being God and man in one perſon. He was the eternal Son of God, and in the fulneſs of time he became man, John i. 14. Gal. iv. 4. This is a myſtery which dazzles the eyes of human reaſon, that cannot comprehend it; and becauſe men have neither reach of reaſon enough to comprehend it, nor humility enough to take it on God's teſtimony, therefore there are ſo many infidels this day. But indeed it is a myſtery that may attract and fix on it the wondering eyes of angels: the ſame perſon, the eternal God, and a man of ſeventeen hundred and thirty-two years; filling heaven and earth, and yet ſhut up nine months in a woman's dark womb; nouriſhing and feeding the whole creation, yet hanging at and ſucking the breaſts of Mary; upholding all by the word of his power, yet an infant that could not go, but behoved to be carried in her arms: infinite in perfections, not capable of addition, yet increaſing in wiſdom and ſtature: Lord of all, yet having nothing but what was given him for houſe or hold: the expreſs image of the Father's perſon, yet accounted the reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people: Lord of life, yet dying ignominiouſly on a croſs!

2. In his offices. His prophetical office is a myſtery. On earth he appeared a mean man, but revealing the ſecrets of the eternal counſels, as he that was in the Father's boſom: taught with the greateſt ſimplicity of words and phraſes, but with the greateſt power, reaching the innermoſt parts of the ſoul: now in heaven, yet teaching on earth by his word and Spirit, to the reſcuing of ſinners from the power of their ſpiritual darkneſs. His prieſthood is a myſtery; dying on a croſs as a malefactor, yet mean while offering himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin; now entered into heaven, preſenting the blood of his ſacrifice, and interceeding for his people. His kingdom is a myſtery, in the ſetting it up, and whole management thereof in carrying it on.

3. In all circumſtances about him. His birth was myſterious, as born of a virgin; his life was myſterious, the greateſt power and dignity hid in it under the vail of a mean outward appearance; his death was myſterious, Acts iii. 15. ‘They killed the Prince of life.’ His reſurrection, his aſcenſion, and ſitting at the Father's right hand, were myſterious.

2dly, The ſubjects of it, believers, are a myſtery too. They are in the world indeed, but unknown to the world, 1 John iii. 1. They are mixed with them in ſociety, yet are a people that dwell alone, Numb. xxiii. 9. There are ſeveral myſterious things to be obſerved about them.

1. Though it is the moſt honourable of all kingdoms, yet thoſe dignified to be the ſubjects of it, are for the moſt part perſons of a mean figure, having the leaſt outward advantages to recommend them. O what a myſtery is that, 1 Cor. i. 26, 27, 28. Ye ſee your calling, brethren, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty: and baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed, hath God choſen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are!’ If the Son of God was to have a kingdom on earth, one would have thought he would have pitched out for the ſubjects of it, thoſe deſcended of noble and ancient families, the wiſe and learned, the potent, rich, and wealthy. But he hath done juſt the contrary: for he receives not honour from men.

2. There is a glory in them, hid under a thick vail of human infirmities, bodily and ſpiritual: Pſal. xlv. 13. The king's daughter is all glorious within, her cloathing is of wrought gold. There is this difference betwixt them and others, that they wear their worſt ſide outmoſt, others theirs inmoſt. They appear outwardly to the world for the moſt part very deſpicable; but in the inner man, each one reſembles the children of a king. They are all fair in the eyes of God, even whom thoſe worldly men that ſwell in pride, would ſcorn to ſet with the dogs in their flock.

3. They are a myſtery in their conſtitution as Chriſtians in this world. There is in them an old man, derived from the firſt Adam; and a new man, derived from the ſecond Adam. Hence there is myſtery, two contrary parties, grace and corruption, ſtruggling within them. The man has a will for, and a will againſt the ſame thing, at oneand the ſame time. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 20. 'Now if I do that I would 'not, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in 'me.' The Chriſtian has a being in himſelf, and a being out of himſelf. Hence he is ſo weak, that he can do nothing; yet ſo ſtrong that he can do all: Phil iv. 13. 'I can do all things (ſays the apoſtle) through Chriſt 'which ſtrengtheneth me.' He has nothing, yet poſſeſſes all things, 2 Cor. vi. 10. and loaded with wants and imperfections, yet complete. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Col. ii. 10. Ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power.

3dly, The erection and conſervation of it is a myſtery, Luke xvii. 20. 'And when he was demanded of 'the Phariſees, when the kingdom of God ſhould come; 'he anſwered them, and ſaid, The kingdom of God 'cometh not with obſervation,' i. e. with outward ſhew. Earthly kingdoms are ſet up, and kept up with a great deal of noiſe, buſtle, and parade. But it is not ſo here. Conſider,

1. The beginnings of it were very ſmall, how vaſtly ſoever it has ſpread. The firſt beginning of it was in paradiſe after the fall, where the King gained two ſubjects to begin his kingdom with under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation. The beginning of it under the New Teſtament diſpenſation, was very ſmall, Acts i. 15. being about an hundred and twenty perſons, compared to a handful of corn upon the top of the mountains, Pſal. lxxii. 16. yet has it ſpread far and wide over the earth.

2. The means of erecting and ſetting it up, were very unlikely and unuſual, viz. the deſpiſed preaching of the goſpel: Pſal. cx. 2. 'The Lord ſhall ſend the rod of 'thy ſtrength out of Zion: rule thou in the midſt of 'thine enemies.' Iſa. ii. 3. 'Many people ſhall go and 'ſay, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of 'the Lord, to the houſe of the God of Jacob, and he 'will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his 'paths; for out of Zion ſhall go forth the law, and the 'word of the Lord from Jeruſalem.' Firſt of all Chriſt preached it himſelf, to our firſt parents under the Old Teſtament, and then under the New, to the Jews; and then he ſent out his apoſtles. What a myſtery was this, being to erect a kingdom, he ſends not out an army to fight, to get him ſubjects by the power of the ſword; but a few men to preach the goſpel of the kingdom! For them he goes not to the ſchools, thence to fetch men of learning and breeding whom he might ſo employ; but to the ſea-coaſts, where he takes fiſhermen from their boats and nets, to ſend them out on this errand!

3. The oppoſition to it from the beginning has been very great; yet it has made its way, and continued all along without interruption, over the belly of all the oppoſition. The powers of earth and hell have ſtill been engaged againſt it, yet could never prevail to raze it. All the four monarchies were one after another heavy on it, yet has it outlived them all; the ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, has broken in pieces the iron, braſs, clay, ſilver, and gold.

4. The means of keeping it up, even ſuch as it was ſet up by. Not the power of the ſword; they make the kingdom of Chriſt no myſtery, that breathe nothing but fire and ſword, war and blood, to maintain and propagate it; but the preaching and teaching of the word of the goſpel, and ſetting that home on mens conſciences; prayers, and tears, patient ſuffering, even unto death, Rev. xii. 11. 'And they overcame him by the blood of 'the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony; and 'they loved not their lives unto the death.' Theſe and the like are the appointed, proper means for maintaining the kingdom of Chriſt, which make it a myſterious kingdom; though I do not think that Chriſtianity obliges men to throw up their civil privileges, or takes away their natural right of neceſſary ſelf-defence.

4thly, The ſeat of it is a myſtery too. The ſeats of kingdoms and empires of this world are moſt conſpicuous, being the capital cities of them; there they keep their courts, thence they iſſue out their royal commands. But the ſeat of this myſterious kingdom is hid from the eyes of all men on earth; for it is in the higheſt heavens, at the Father's right hand, Pſal. cx. 1. There he keeps his court, there he grants petitions, thence he iſſues out his royal commands. This is a myſtery: but what makes it more ſo,

1. The meaneſt of his ſubjects, in whatever part of his dominions on earth, has immediate acceſs to the throne, with their complaints, petitions, &c. and that though they be not able to ſtir a foot, but are fixed to a bed or ſeat. It is hard for the moſt part to travel with their ſuits to their earthly princes; and when they are got to the court, they muſt be introduced by ſome courtier. But to this king the ſubjects may have acceſs without moving their bodies at all, and go ſtraight forward without noticing ſaint or angel; though the Papiſts think that preſumption, making Chriſt's kingdom like a worldly one, ſo deſtroying the myſtery. The proto-martyr Stephen, when he died, addreſſed Chriſt directly, ſaying, Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit. But faith does it.

2. He ſees all that is in his kingdom with his own eyes, good or bad, perſon or thing: Prov. v. 21. 'For 'the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and 'he pondereth all his goings.' Kings of the earth muſt needs ſee with other mens eyes, and hear with other mens ears: but Zion's king is himſelf witneſs to all, needs no information, and is liable to no miſtakes. There is never a good thing one of his ſubjects do, how ſecretly ſoever, but he ſees it; never a groan they give, but he hears it; he knows all the circumſtances of their caſe. And there is never an ill thing his enemies do, but he is witneſs to it.

3. As far off as his throne is where he ſits, he is ever preſent with his people for all that, and will be; Matth. xxviii. 20. 'Lo, I am with you always (ſays he) even 'unto the end of the world.' He is not only a help, but a preſent help in time of trouble, Pſal. xlvi. 1. A great myſtery; but faith can unriddle it, believing him to be God as well as man, and therefore every where preſent; though the heavens muſt contain him till the day of the reſtitution of all things.

5thly, The extent of it is a myſtery, whether it is conſidered.

1. In reſpect of the kinds of juriſdiction he has in it,

(1.) The kingdom of grace is in his hand. He is a deſpiſed Chriſt in the world, he was crucified as a blaſphemer and ſeditious perſon in it: yet all the grace and favours of heaven, to the ſalvation of mortals, relative or real, are in his hand to diſpenſe; and they can come at them by no way, but only through him; Eph. i. 22. For God 'hath put all things under his feet, 'and gave him to be the head over all things to the 'church.

(2.) The kingdom of glory is in his hand too, Hence he ſaid to his diſciples, Luke xxii. 29, 30. 'I appoint 'unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto 'me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my ‘kingdom, and ſit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.’

(3.) The kingdom of providence is in his hand likewiſe. Zion's King is King of the world; the government of the world is lodged by the Father in the ſame hand the government of the church is, John v. 22. ‘For the Father judgeth no man: but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.’ compare Iſa. xliii. 14, 15. ‘Thus ſaith the Lord your Redeemer, the holy One of Iſrael, For your ſake have I ſent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles, and the Chaldeans, whoſe cry is in the ſhips. I am the Lord your holy one, the creator of Iſrael, your king.’ This is a great myſtery: his kingdom is a deſpiſed one, yet a non-ſuch kingdom: he is higher than the kings of the earth, who are all his vaſſals, though they pay him little regard.

2. In reſpect of the bounds of it. It extends itſelf over both worlds. Hence ſays Chriſt, Matth. xxviii. 18. All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Rev. i. 18. I have the keys of hell and of death. The myſtery is a carrying on through this world; there he is gathering his elect out of the kingdom of the devil, by the goſpel, ruling and defending them againſt their enemies. In the other world, he has the eternal reſt for his kindly ſubjects, and the priſon for his enemies. And in the paſſage betwixt the two worlds, viz. death, it is carried on in perfecting the happineſs of the ſaints, and the miſery of the wicked. So it is a great myſtery, whereof we ſee little as it is in this world, and nothing as it is in the other, but by faith.

6thly, The privileges of it are a myſtery. What a myſtery was the man Chriſt going up and down in a mean outward condition in the world, yet the only begotten of the Father! John i. 14. Such a myſtery are believers in their meaſure, privileged above the greateſt on earth who wear the crowns; though going in rags, privileged above thoſe going in ſhining apparel. They have myſterious privileges.

1. Their union with Chriſt is a myſtery, Eph. v. 32. Even the meaneſt believer is truly united to Chriſt, John xv. 5. I am the vine ye are the branches. A wonderful myſtery; the head in heaven in fulneſs of glory, yet the members on earth in a low afflicted condition; beſet with wants, yet complete in him; crucified with him, and ſo dead, yet living; groaning under the remains of corrupt nature, yet in him partakers of the divine nature, as being one ſpirit, or of one ſpiritual nature with him, 1 Cor. vi. 17. He that is joined to the Lord, is one ſpirit.

2. Their juſtification is a myſtery. They are pardoned, and accepted as righteous in the ſight of God, yet all ‘their righteouſneſs as filthy rags,’ Iſ. lxiv. 6. How can that be? Why, the myſtery lies here, in that there is an imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to them, what he was, did, and ſuffered. Hence we read, Rom. iii. 22. of ‘the righteouſneſs of God which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt’ being ‘unto all, and upon all them that believe.’ The diſputers of this world laugh at this as a putative way of juſtification, as if one ſhould pretend to be warm by the cloaths on another's back, or full with the meat in anothers belly. They think juſtification by our obedience to the new goſpel-law is a rational way: thus they think it no myſtery.

3. Their ſanctification is a myſtery. Vain men conceive the ſanctification of a ſinner to be by a vigorous exerciſe of their rational faculties, to correct their vicious habits, and practiſe virtue. But ſanctification by union with Chriſt through faith, the only way of the ſanctification of a ſinner, 1 Cor. i. 2. Acts xxvi. 18. is ſuch a myſtery as was unknown to the Jewiſh Rabbies and Greek philoſophers, and an imaginary ſanctification in the eyes of all legaliſts: but the truth is, the ſanctification of a guilty ſinner is no leſs a myſtery than his juſtification.

4. Their perſeverance in grace is a myſtery; grace keeping ſtill its ground in the heart, amidſt all the ſtrength of corruption within and temptation without, till at length overcoming all, it iſſueth certainly in glory. That is no leſs a myſtery than would be a candle burning ſtill in the wind, and laying the wind at length, a ſpark of fire keeping alive in the ocean, yea drying up the ocean at length; a worm threſhing the mountains, yea at length beating them ſmall as duſt, Iſa. xli. 14, 15. But the myſtery of it lies, in that the covenant is everlaſting, they have the perpetual interceſſion of Chriſt and indwelling of his Spirit.

7thly, The life and practice of it is a myſtery. The life of every believer or ſubject of this kingdom is a myſtery. They are God's hidden ones, and their life is a hidden life. Col. iii. 3. ‘Your life (ſays the apoſtle) is hid with Chriſt in God;’ which the world neither ſees nor can underſtand. Hence ſays Solomon, Prov. xiv. 10. ‘The heart knoweth his own bitterneſs; and a ſtranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.’ They may ſee the outward appearance of it; but it is ‘the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price,’ 1 Pet. iii. 4.

This myſterious life is the life of faith, oppoſite to the life of ſenſe and ſelf, whereby the man lives out of himſelf, on things not ſeen; as the apoſtle deſcribes it, Gal. ii. 20. ‘I am crucified with Chriſt; Nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.’ The man living this life, ſtands on borrowed legs; ſees with borrowed eyes; does every duty, and bears every burden, in and with borrowed ſtrength; and when he has done all, counts all his doings and ſufferings droſs and dung: Chriſt being all to him, and himſelf nothing. Hence ſaith Paul, Phil. iii. 8, 9. ‘Yea, doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things: and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith.’ Hence there is no duty ſo eaſy, nor burden ſo light, but he owns, he is not man enough for it; yet none ſo difficult, nor heavy, but he will venture on it at the Lord's call. A myſterious life and practice. But our ſufficiency is of God, 2 Cor. iii. 5.

8thly, The manner of the conduct and management of it is a myſtery. Kings of the earth have their ſecrets of government; but they are but trifles in compariſon of the myſteries of God's government by Chriſt in the world. The maxims of government in the kingdom of Chriſt, and the manner of his management and conduct, are vaſtly different from thoſe of the powers on earth, Iſ. lv. 8, 9. ‘For my thoughts (ſaith the Lord) are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.’ Some of theſe myſterious pieces of management follow. It is the manner of this kingdom,

1. To prefer the moſt unlikely, baulking them that ſtand faireſt for the preference in all human appearance: Matth. xx. 16. ‘The laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt: for many be called, but few choſen.’ There is a thread of this method going through the whole oeconomy of grace. Abel the youngeſt is preferred to Cain, Shem to Japheth his elder brother, Jacob to Eſau, Ephraim to Manaſſeh, Moſes to Aaron, three years older than he, Exodus vii. 7. David to ſeven brethren elder than he. He calls the fooliſh and the baſe things of the world, paſſing by the wiſe, mighty and noble, 1 Cor. i. 26, 27, 28. forecited. The myſteries of the kingdom are hid from the wiſe and prudent, but reveal- ed unto babes, Matth. xi, 25. When the goſpel is to be preached, the Jews muſt have the firſt offer, they muſt begin at Jeruſalem, where Chriſt was crucified: for the deſign is to exalt the riches of grace.

2. To let things go to an extremity, to the utmoſt point of hopeleſſneſs, before a hand be put to help them, and ſet them right again. Hence ſaid Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 36. 'The Lord ſhall judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants; when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left.' Pharaoh ſhall not only inſlave the Iſraelites, but proceed to drown their males, before Moſes their deliverer is born: their bondage ſhall be harder than ever, ere they are brought out of Egypt. When they are out, they are beſet on all hands, and he ſeems to have them in a hoſe-net, ere he and they are freely parted. Haman carried his plot ſo far againſt the Jews, that the decree was paſſed, the letters of execution writ, and the poſts diſpatched with them, before there was a turn. It is a maxim with men, to cruſh things in their beginnings, becauſe they may prove too ſtrong for them afterwards: but our Lord takes the contrary method, to glorify the power of his hand.

3. To give the ſharpeſt treatment to the greateſt favourites. This is not the manner of men, but it is the manner of God. Hence ſaid the pſalmiſt, Pſal. lxxiii. 5. 14. 'They [the wicked] are not in trouble as other men: neither are they plagued like other men. For all the day long have I [Aſaph, a ſaint] been plagued, and chaſtened every morning.' Never was one treated ſo hardly as the Son of the Father's boſom. And it is the ordinary method that the favourites of heaven are caſt down to duſt, while his enemies are lifted up on high; the former ſigh while the latter ſing. John Baptiſt is in the priſon, while the inceſtuous Herodias is at a ball; her daughter danceth, and John Baptiſt's head is cut off, and brought in a charger to the inceſtuous woman to triumph over it. They have little ſkill of the myſtery of God, that from their outward eaſe and proſperity gather the ſpecial love of God to them. On the contrary, 'whom the Lord loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth,' Heb. xii. 6. As little ſkill have they that conclude the greateſt ſufferers are certainly the greateſt ſinners. If it be ſo, the apoſtles were the worſt of men; 'For I think (ſays Paul) that God hath ſet forth us the apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed to death. For we are made a ſpectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men,' 1 Cor. iv. 9.

4. To meet men with aſtoniſhing ſtrokes going in the way that God bade them, while they have a fair ſun-ſhine that are going in the way of their own hearts. Hence ſaid Solomon, Eccleſ. viii. 14. 'There is a vanity which is done upon the earth, that there be juſt men unto whom it happeneth according to the works of the wicked: again, there be wicked men to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous.' Jacob was bidden return to his own country; but what ſtorms roſe on him by the way, one after another! Moſes was bid go to Egypt on God's errand, yet he was in hazard of his life: but Jonah flying to Tarſhiſh, got a ſhip as ready to take him in as he could have wiſhed. People are ready to judge of other mens actions, according to the outward aſpect of providence on them; a moſt uncertain and dangerous rule, which cannot miſs of making them condemn the generation of the righteous, and bleſs them whom the Lord abhorreth.

5. To lay by accepted petitions, and let them long ly by, time after time, while yet unacceptable requeſts are quickly granted. The people luſted after fleſh, and they ſoon got their deſire; they were bent for a king, and they ſoon got their deſire in that too. But how many cries to heaven were there among the Old Teſtament ſaints for the coming of the Meſſias, a promiſed mercy, which yet were not anſwered till ſome thouſands of years were run! God, while he flings a mercy to a carnal man uneaſy for it, will let his elect cry to him night and day for their mercies ere they get them, Luke xviii. 7. And many a long proceſs they may have before the throne, depending many a year, ere they get their anſwer; as is evident in the caſe of Abraham for a ſeed; yea they may be carried off the ſtage ere they be anſwered, as in the caſe of the cloud of witneſſes, Heb. xi. 13. who 'all died in faith, not having received the promiſes.' And yet after all they are accepted, and the gracious anſwer is determined for them.

6. To anſwer accepted prayers quickly with ſome one terrible thing or other, which yet are to be graciouſly and bountifully anſwered in due time. Hence ſaid the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. lxv. 5. By terrible things in righteouſneſs, wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation. The woman of Canaan got repeated trials of this, Matth. xv. 22—28. Moſes and Aaron go in at God's command to Pharaoh to demand his letting Iſrael go; and no doubt they prayed for ſucceſs ere they went: but inſtead of that, immediately Iſrael's caſe is made far worſe than ever, Exod. v. Immediately providence takes a run directly contrary to what they had been praying for; this made Moſes himſelf ſtagger, as ye ſee verſ. 22, 23. 'And Moſes returned unto the Lord, and ſaid, Lord, wherefore haſt thou ſo evil intreated this people? why is it that thou haſt ſent me? For ſince I came to Pharaoh to ſpeak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither haſt thou delivered the people at all.' If at any time ye have been praying for a mercy with particular concern and ſeriouſneſs, and quickly after providence ſeems to fly in the face of your prayers, be not ſo weak and ſo ill ſeen in the myſtery of God, as to think, Now that is heaven's final anſwer; no: it is but a trial, very uſual in the myſtery of God; which if ye learn not by hearing, you will be fair to get it taught you by experience.

7. To muſter up various impediments, make many embarraſſments, and ſet up iron gates in the way of ſome great good thing that is to be done for a perſon, a favourite of heaven. This was taught by the apoſtles, Acts xiv. 22. who were employed in confirming the 'ſouls of the diſciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.' Some get their mercies with a great deal of eaſe, they drop into their lap like ripe fruit off the tree of common providence. But the children of the covenant come not ſo eaſily by theirs: and the greater the mercy is, readily the more and greater are the difficulties in the way thereof. Eſau and his poſterity were ſoon and eaſily ſettled in Edom, the land appointed for them: but it was many a year after ere Jacob's poſterity were ſettled in Canaan, the land appointed for them; and they fought many bloody battles before it. Abraham had the promiſe of a ſon, but behold the barrenneſs of his wife is rolled in the way of the promiſe: and, as if that had not been enough, he and ſhe both grew ſo old, that it ceaſed to be with her after the manner of women. Much a like was it with Zacharias and Elizabeth, Luke i. 18. But this is for the honour of God, in making the iron gates open of their own accord, and bringing the promiſed mercy over the belly of the impediments.

8. To ſet things on a run to bring in a mercy promiſed; and then when it comes to the point, that one is juſt expecting to receive it, ſuddenly to cauſe a ſtop, and make a turn that makes it quite hopeleſs like. When the Meſſias appeared, there were great hopes among the believing Jews of a glorious time for Iſrael; and theſe hopes were not vain; but they ſuddenly met with a ſhock; the Meſſias was crucified, dead, and buried; that made ſome of them like to loſe all their hopes. Hence ſaid the two diſciples that were going to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 21. We truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. This is a very ordinary piece of the divine conduct, the myſtery of God, firſt as it were to paſs the ſentence of death on a promiſed mercy, to bury and lay the grave ſtone on it, and then to raiſe it up and bring it in. David had the promiſe of the kingdom; he is ſent for to court, has Saul's favour, is made general by him, gains the hearts of the people, 1 Sam. xviii. Now things were on a run towards the accompliſhing of the promiſe. But behold, this run is ſuddenly ſtopt; Saul ſeeks his life, he is for many years hunted like a partridge on the mountains, thinks one day he will fall by the hands of Saul; and ſays in his haſte, Pſal. cxvi. 11. All men are lyars. So Moſes being bred up in the court of Pharaoh, had a ſecret intimation, that he would be the man who would deliver Iſrael. Accordingly when he was forty years old, he ſets himſelf to the work, Exod. ii. 11. &c. but it miſgives in his hand, and he is in hazard of his life, and is forced to flee the country: and for forty years after that he lives retired in Midian, Acts vii. 23. &c. by which time it would ſeem he had loſt all hope of the matter. Yet was the work done in its due time. Such ſeems to have been the caſe with Zacharias, as ye will ſee, Luke i. 13. compared with verſe 18.

9. When a promiſed mercy is to be brought about, to lay by the moſt likely and promiſing inſtruments, from whence one has his expectation. It is a piece of the myſtery of God, in that caſe, to looſe their grips one after another, till in end they have nothing left to grip to but God himſelf in his word. Hence ſaid the apoſtle, 2 Cor. i. 9. ‘We had the ſentence of death in ourſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in ourſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead.’ Before Iſrael ſhould conquer Canaan, all the men of war among them behoved to be conſumed and dead, Deut. ii. 16. Joſeph had a fair proſpect of deliverance, when he ſo ſignally obliged a courtier, Pharaoh's chief butler: but the ungrateful man never minded him, Gen. xl. 23. But the Lord doth this, that his own hand in the mercy may appear the more eminent: and he loves to employ unlooked-for means, and unexpected inſtruments. So our Lord Jeſus let the boats go away: but came walking on the ſea, to the relief of his diſtreſſed diſciples. He ſays ſometimes to inſtruments of a good work, Hitherto ſhall you go, but no further. The great and good Moſes, that ſingular inſtrument for good to Iſrael, muſt be laid by, before they enter Canaan.

10. To make uſe of hindrances of good things for furtherances thereof. Hence ſaid Paul to the Philippians, chap. i. 12. ‘I would ye ſhould underſtand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me, have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the goſpel.’ It was meet that Paul the apoſtle of the Gentiles ſhould be at Rome, then the chief city of the world, to preach the goſpel there. He often purpoſed it, but was diſappointed. Hence he ſaid, Rom. i. 13. ‘Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purpoſed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have ſome fruit among you alſo, even as among other Gentiles.’ How got he thither? Why, there was a mob raiſed on him by the Jews, he was taken priſoner by the Romans, toſſed from hand to hand, till he was obliged to appeal to Cæſar, and then the Romans carried him to Rome. Jacob was brought into heavy caſe, by what befel his ſon Joſeph: but behold, that was the means of the ſupport of him and his family. Hence ſaid he on his death bed, Gen. xlix. 24. ‘His bow [Joſeph's] abode in ſtrength, and the arms of his hands were made ſtrong, by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: from thence is the Shepherd, the ſtone of Iſrael.’ In the myſtery of God there is frequent working by contraries; providence driving ſtraight forward to the deſigned point, while it ſeems to us to be going quite againſt it. Chriſt cures the blind man putting clay on his eyes; Haman goes unto the king to get Mordecai hanged, and by that very means is brought to lead him through the city on horſeback, in the greateſt pomp and ſplendor. Had not Joſeph been put in priſon, he had not come to the court.

11. laſtly, To give weak backs heavy burdens to bear. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. i. 27. ‘But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty.’ Thus he chuſed his apoſtles fiſhermen, to ſet up his kingdom in the world, combat the learning of the ſchools, and the force of them who had the power of the ſword. The apoſtle unriddles this myſtery, 2 Cor. iv. 7. But we have this treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. While he makes a worm threſh the mountains, to beat them ſmall, the greater is the glory of the mighty hand that does it with ſuch a flail, Iſa. xli. 14, 15. When Peter was a young man, able to bear hardſhips, he was at eaſe; but when old and leſs able, he got ſore ones. Hence ſaid our Lord to him, John xxi. 18. ‘Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, When thou waſt young, thou girdedſt thyſelf, and walkedſt whither thou wouldeſt: but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldeſt not.’ If as the back grows weaker, the burdens to bear are increaſed, it is but an ordinary piece of management in the myſtery of God; which accounts for that order, Iſa. xl. 31. ‘They that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength; they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, and they ſhall walk and not faint.’

Many ſuch things are in the myſtery of God: but theſe condeſcended on ſhall ſerve for a ſwatch.

THIRDLY, We are to conſider the myſtery of God as finiſhed with time. And here I ſhall ſhew, 1ſt, When it ſhall be finiſhed.

2dly, Wherein the finiſhing of it lies.

3dly, The import and conſequence of this finiſhing.

Firſt, Let us conſider when this myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed.

1. It will be in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel. Now it is plain, the days of the ſeventh angel are come already: but then under it are comprehended the ſeven vials; and we are come the length of the third or fourth vial. So that the finiſhing period of the myſtery of God is now running, and is well far on. The morning and midday of the myſtery is paſt, the afternoon of it well far ſpent, and we are in the time drawing near to the evening of it.

2. It will get the finiſhing ſtroke with the end of time; and time and it will end together. It will not be carried on beyond time, and time will not end till it be done. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. xv. 24. ‘Then cometh the end, when he ſhall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he ſhall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power.’ At one and the ſame period, the world will end, and time with it, and the myſtery of God finiſhed withal.

3. But the preciſe time of this event is kept a ſecret from all men; which none of them are able to diſcover, nor ſhould they inquire into. Hence ſaid our Lord, Matth. xxiv. 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but the Father only. And ſaith Paul, 1 Theſſ. v. 2. ‘For yourſelves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord ſo cometh as a thief in the night.’ It is ſo ordered on deſign to guard men againſt ſecurity, and to oblige them to watch. Hence ſaith the exalted Redeemer, Rev. xvi. 15. ‘Behold, I come as a thief. Bleſſed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, leſt he walk naked, and they ſee his ſhame.’

Secondly, Wherein does the finiſhing of this myſtery ly? It lies in theſe three things following.

1. The accompliſhment of the remaining prophecies. Theſe are but few; the principle whereof are, the calling of the Jews, and the total deſtruction of Antichriſt. That the Jews are to be called, is evident from Rom. xi. 25, 26. ‘I would, not brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſtery, that blindneſs in part has happened to Iſrael, until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come 'in. And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: as it is written, 'There ſhall come out of Sion the deliverer, and ſhall 'turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob.' And who can conſider, that though this people have been rooted out of their own land, and ſcattered among the nations more than ſixteen hundred years, and yet remain a diſtinct people ſtill, not incorporated with nor ſunk in other nations, but they are reſerved by ſpecial providence for this notable event? And ſo much of the prophecies of the downfal of the Antichriſtian kingdom is already accompliſhed, as inſures the total deſtruction thereof, according to the remaining part anent it.

2. The gathering in of all the elect. There is a certain number choſen to life: thoſe that remain of them yet unborn, muſt be born in this world, till the laſt perſon of that bleſſed roll is come forth. And they muſt alſo be born again, and brought by faith into the kingdom of Chriſt. And then when the laſt elect man or woman is born, and withal brought to Chriſt, the myſtery is on the very point of finiſhing.

3. The completing of the ſalvation of the church of the elect. That was the end for which the myſtery was laid before time in the eternal counſel; and being obtained it is finiſhed, 1 Cor. xv. 24. forecited. Hereto belongs the reſurrection of their bodies, the deſtroying of death the laſt enemy, and the preſenting of the whole company of the elect, from the firſt to the laſt man, ſpotleſs before the throne. Hence ſaith Paul, Eph. v. 25. 27. 'Chriſt loved the church, and gave himſelf for it, that 'he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious church, not 'having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; but that it 'ſhould be holy, and without blemiſh.' And ſaith Jude, ver. 24. 'Now unto him that is able to keep you from 'falling, and to preſent you faultleſs before the preſence 'of his glory with exceeding joy,' &c. This is the delivering up of the kingdom to the Father, mentioned, 1 Cor. xv. 24.

Thirdly, It remains to ſhew the import and conſequence of this finiſhing the myſtery of God. It is of greateſt importance to the honour of God, and to the children of men. For then,

1. The eternal purpoſe of God concerning mankind is fulfilled; the contrivance laid from eternity in the depth of wiſdom about them, is executed. From eternity the ſcheme was formed, the draught was made, and then the building is reared up actually in conformity thereto, the head-ſtone is laid upon it.

2. The covenant betwixt the Father and Chriſt the ſecond Adam is then fulfilled on both hands. In it there was a condition to be fulfilled by Chriſt. This he did complete near ſeventeen hundred years ago, paying the debt of the whole elect world. And there were promiſes on the Father's part to be fulfilled on the performing of that condition. A great part of theſe yet remain to be fulfilled: but then it will be done completely; and the promiſes be made good in every point to the head and to the members.

3. Then the whole frame of the ordinances, now or ſince Adam's fall, in uſe in the world, for bringing in of ſinners, and edifying of ſaints, is laid by. No more church aſſemblies, word and ſacraments, church government nor diſcipline, nor church officers: theſe are as the ſcaffolding all to be taken down, now that the houſe is built, Eph. iv. 11, 12, 13. 'And he gave ſome 'apoſtles: and ſome prophets; and ſome, evangeliſts; 'and ſome, paſtors and teachers; for the perfecting of 'the ſaints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt: till we all come in the 'unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son 'of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the 'ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt.' In theſe it was that the myſtery of God was carried on; but the myſtery being finiſhed, there is no more need of them: but they will not be miſſed by them, who have through them been brought into the fellowſhip of the myſtery. Hence ſaith John of the new Jeruſalem, Rev. xxi. 22. I ſaw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb, are the temple of it.

4. Then the manner of the divine conduct towards mankind is altered ſo, that it is quite new: Rev. xxi. 5. 'He that ſat upon the throne, ſaid, Behold, I make 'all things new.' There will be no more trials and afflictions of the godly, and no more proſperity of the wicked, as now. Now is the mixed diſpenſation; then comes the unmixed one, that where it is well, it is perfectly well; where ill, it is abſolutely ill. An eternal ſun ſhine then chears the godly, without the leaſt intercepting cloud; and an eternal gloom ſits down on the wicked, without the leaſt gleam of light.

5. Then Chriſt's conqueſt is complete, his enemies made his footſtool, which he is this day in expectation of. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, Heb. x. 12, 13. 'But 'this man, after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, 'for ever ſat down on the right hand of God; from 'henceforth expecting till all his enemies be made 'his footſtool.' Then ſhame covers the faces of all that oppoſed and ſlighted him; their profane tongues that they uſed in contempt of him, his holy religion, are ſilent in darkneſs; the ſerpent's head is quite bruiſed away, and his works utterly deſtroyed; and he, and ſinners that believed him to their ruin, are together ſhut up in the pit. Then Chriſt and his followers have a total victory over ſin, Satan, death, and the preſent evil world.

6. Then begins the eternal marriage feaſt to be held in the kingdom of God, when Jeſus Chriſt, the glorious Bridegroom, has brought home his bride, believers now eſpouſed to him, Matth. xxiv. 10. The plenty, the glory, and the pleaſure of that feaſt mortals cannot comprehend: for in his preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at his right hand are pleaſures for evermore, Pſal. xvi. 11. Some ſips and drops his people get now and then, more reliſhing than any of the dreggy pleaſures of this world; but ſtill there is a vail betwixt us and it, ſo that we cannot know it.

7. Then the door is ſhut, Matth. xxv. 10. No acceſs more, knock who will. No refuſer of Chriſt will then, though he may now, have liberty to take his word again; the myſtery is finiſhed, of which God's bearing ſo long with ſinners makes a great part: but as God's ſhutting in Noah, was the barring out of thoſe that were out; ſo the eſpouſed to Chriſt being ſet down, there is no acceſs for new gueſts.

8. Then the world ends, 1 Cor. xv. 24. forecited. The world is kept up for the ſake of the carrying on the myſtery of God in it; and had it not been for that cauſe, it had been overthrown at Adam's fall: but then the myſtery being finiſhed, there is no more uſe for it; ſo fire is ſet to it as the ſtage of wickedneſs, a curſed world, wherein God has been ſo long diſhonoured.

9. Then the myſtery is opened, and appears in a full light; though before vailed, the vail is then taken off. The ſaints were often puzzled with the difficulties of it; but then they ſhall all be unfolded and laid open to them, to the clearing of them, in a ſuitableneſs to the divine perfections, and becomingneſs to the divine wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs, to their eternal joy and conſolation. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. 'For 'now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; but then face to 'face: now I know in part; but then ſhall I know even 'as alſo I am known.' The wicked deſpiſed the myſtery, drew concluſions from it as it appeared to them, to their own ruin; but then it will be ſo far opened to them, as they will ſee it worthy of God to their eternal ſhame and confuſion. Hence ſaith the prophet, Mic. vii. 16. 'The nations ſhall ſee and be confounded at 'all their might: they ſhall lay their hand upon their 'mouth, their ears ſhall be deaf.'

10. laſtly, There will be no more myſtery of God: then it is finiſhed. It is for the exerciſe and trial of faith, that matters are carried on in that myſterious manner now: but then faith gives place to ſight and ſenſe. Not that ever men will be able fully to comprehend the myſtery; but as far as the ſaints capacity reacheth, it is cleared unto them; and the wicked will be no more liable to miſtake as to the way of the Lord's dealing with them.

II. We ſhall conſider the relation betwixt the myſtery of God and time. We take it up in theſe two particulars.

1. Time is the ſpace appointed for the myſtery of God its being executed. It was in all the parts of it laid indeed in the eternal counſels before time: the effects of it, or the ſtate it will bring mankind into, and keep them in, will be to everlaſting, when time is no more: but the execution of it, the beginning, carrying on, and finiſhing it, is in time: time bounds that before and behind. The myſtery is a building of God, wherein many hands are employed: the pattern of it was drawn from eternity; it will be inhabited through eternity; but the building of it belongs entirely to time; in it the foundation was laid, and in it the cape ſtone will be laid on.

2. The ſubſiſtence or continuation of time depends on the myſtery. Hence are the words of the text, The angel ‘ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, that there ſhould be time no longer, but the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed.’ The myſtery muſt be carried on and finiſhed, take what time it will; therefore time muſt wait on it, till it be done. Being done, there is no more uſe for time, and ſo it ends. So it is for the ſake of the myſtery of God, not for the trifling concerns of men, that time is lengthened out. Had there been no myſtery of God, to have been carried on, time once polluted with ſin, had ended very ſoon after it began.

USE I. of Information. Hence we may learn,

1. Whence it comes to paſs, that there is ſo much ſtumbling of wicked men at the divine conduct by Chriſt in the world. They can ſee no beauty in it, they cannot receive it, they are offended at it, they improve it to ruining purpoſes againſt themſelves. This obtains ſo univerſally, that our Saviour pronounces ‘Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me,’ Matth. xi. 6. The matter is; it is a myſtery, and their natural blindneſs hinders them to ſee it, ſo that they know it not: 1 Cor. ii. 14. ‘The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are fooliſhneſs unto him; neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.’ They ſtumble at the doctrinal part of the myſtery; for there is in it what their reaſon cannot comprehend; and becauſe it is ſo, many of them profeſſedly reject it, 1 Tim. iii. 16. They ſtumble at the providential part of it, Mal. iii. 15. ‘And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedneſs, are ſet up; yea, they that tempt God, are even delivered.’ That is a myſtery too, which one needs the light of the ſanctuary to let him into. Hence ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. lxxiii. 16, 17. ‘When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me. Until I went into the ſanctuary of God; then underſtood I their end.’

2. How the godly come to have other thoughts of it; and true Chriſtians admire the beauty and glory of it, which carnal men deſpiſe. It is the myſtery of God, which he reveals to his friends and fearers of his name, Pſal. xxv. 14. ‘The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will ſhew them his covenant. John xv. 15. ‘Henceforth ſaith Chriſt) I call you not ſervants; for the ſervant knoweth not what his lord doth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you.’ They are let into the ſecret which others are not, and they get eyes to ſee what the ſharpeſt eye of unſanctified reaſon cannot perceive: Mark iv. 11. ‘Unto you (ſaith our Lord to his diſciples) it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all theſe things are done in parables.’ Therefore they ought to be thankful and humble, poſing themſelves with that queſtion, Who maketh thee to differ? The babes ſee what the wiſe and prudent cannot diſcern; becauſe the Father has revealed the ſame to the one, and hid them from the other, Matth. xi. 25.

3. No reaſon to deſpiſe religion, becauſe the world generally do ſo. Religion is a myſtery; the world is a blind world, and the blind cannot judge of colours. No body deſpiſes it, but thoſe who know it not; and it is raſhneſs with a witneſs to condemn what one knows not, Pſal. ix. 10. John iv. 10. It is true, carnal men have an underſtanding as well as others, and in many inſtances of deeper reach than others! but ſtill it is but a natural underſtanding, that is not competent for the myſtery of God, which cannot be taken up but with a new underſtanding. Hence ſaith the apoſtle, 1 John v. 20. ‘And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding, that we may know him that is true.’ It is the king's favourites that are let into the ſecrets of the government, but not every body.

4. Time is not continued as a ſleep without a deſign. The ſecure ſleeping world look on time as a thing that runs on by a neceſſity of nature; and becauſe they ſee now a new day ſtill ſuceeding the foregoing one, they think in effect it will always be ſo. They conſider not the deſign of God in continuing it, wherefore the ſun and the moon make ſo many rounds, why one day as yet ſtill comes after another; but are apt to ſay, as 2 Pet. iii. 4. ‘Where is the promiſe of his coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.’ O that men would conſider, that it is lengthened out on a particular deſign; which being compaſſed, it ſhall end for good and all:

5. It is not this world's buſineſs, but heaven's buſineſs, that is the great deſign of the continuing of time. Ye are miſtaken, if ye think, that the ſun riſes again, the new ſeed time comes, &c. juſt that ye may go to your work, and till and ſow, &c. Nay it is that the myſtery of God may be carried on: and theſe things have no place but as appendages of the myſtery of God; and true Chriſtians will manage them ſo. Hence is that exhortation, Col. iii. 17. ‘And whatſoever ye do in word and deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.’ Much leſs is it that men may carry on their myſteries of iniquity, which is almoſt the only thing that ſome profligate ſinners uſe their time for. But dreadful will their reckoning be, that ſpend in carrying on their myſteries of iniquity, that time that is deſigned for carrying on the myſtery of God.

6. The myſtery of God muſt be a matter of ſingular excellency, and of the laſt importance, that for it time is continued. It is ſo indeed, for the honour of God. Hereby there is a revenue of glory raiſed to him in this world, wherever that myſtery is declared: and as to thoſe places wherein it is not heard of, true believers honour him in entertaining awful thoughts of his ſovereignty, and the unſearchableneſs of his judgments, in keeping it wholly up from thoſe places, reverently waiting the opening of that part of the myſtery. But all theſe are but gleanings; the full harveſt of glory to God from the myſtery comes at the finiſhing of it. It is ſo likewiſe to mankind; for upon that myſtery depends their eternal ſtate of well or woe, according as they receive or ſlight it.

7. The myſtery of God, has, in the execution of it, been of long continuance; but it is drawing to a cloſe. It was begun in paradiſe, in the promulgation of the firſt goſpel that ever was heard in the world, Gen. iii. 15. Several thouſands of years have paſt ſince in carrying it on. Many a time the world has been heartily weary of it, wiſhing to have it at an end; not conſidering that time muſt end with it: ſo that could they have effectu-ate it, they would have but drawn down the houſe on their own heads. And perhaps the Chriſtian world was never more weary of it than at this day. But it is drawing to a cloſe now; and at the period God has fixed for its end, it will be finiſhed.

8. laſtly, When there is no more time requiſite for the myſtery of God, there will be no more time for other things neither; time will end with it; for it is for the ſake of it that time is continued.

Uſe 2. of Reproof; and that to thoſe,

1. Who will have no myſteries in religion, but all within the reach of human reaſon. However, according to the ſcripture, it is a bundle of myſteries, Matth. xiii. 11. hid from the wiſe, chap. xi. 25. The foundation of practical religion is a myſtery, Eph. v. 32. The practice of it is a myſtery, Col. iii. 3. 'Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God.' Gal. ii. 20. 'I am crucified with Chriſt: Nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.' See 1 Tim. iii. 16. 'Without controverſy, great is the myſtery of godlineſs: God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.' What reaſon can be aſſigned, why our God may not take trial of man, in believing him on his bare word, as well as obeying him on the mere intimation of his will?

2. Thoſe who deſpiſe the goſpel, as a weak and mean thing, looking on it with diſdain as fooliſhneſs, as it was to the Jews and Greeks, 1 Cor. i. 23. A dangerous adventure; a deſpiſing of the myſtery of God, the myſtery of his wiſdom, ver. 24. They will be confounded at the finiſhing of the myſtery.

3. Thoſe who improve it not, to the proper end of revealing it to them; i. e. the ſalvation of the ſoul; like thoſe invited to the marriage of the king's ſon, who 'made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize,' Matth. xxii. 5. This is a neglect inſuring ruin; Heb. ii. 3. 'How ſhall we eſcape if we neglect ſo great ſalvation?'

Uſe 3. laſt, of Exhortation. And,

1. Be not raſh in paſſing judgment on the ſtate of affairs in the world, while you ſee the ſeeming confuſions in your own caſe, of others, or of the church. Wait the finiſhing of the myſtery. Then you will ſee ſurpriſing ſights; particularly,

(1.) An admirable harmony betwixt jarring providences and promiſes. They will meet in cloſe agreement; and it will appear that there never was any real diſcord between them; but that providence took the beſt way towards the accompliſhing of the promiſes: Deut. xxxii. 4. 'God is the rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.'

(2.) A beautiful agreeableneſs of ſmiling providences in the caſe of the wicked, to the divine perfections. By theſe will appear the goodneſs, patience, &c. of God, without any the leaſt marring of the divine faithfulneſs in the threatening. Hence ſaid Abraham to the rich man, Luke xvi. 25. 'Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.' And ſaith the prophet, Iſa. iii. 11. 'Wo unto the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him.'

(3.) The baſe believers who took the myſtery on truſt fully ſatisfied; the wiſe and prudent who would believe no further than they ſaw, confounded, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. 'For now we ſee through a glaſs, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then ſhall I know even as alſo I am known.' Matth. xxii. 12. 'And he ſaith unto him, Friend, how cameſt thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? and he was ſpeechleſs.'

2. Improve the myſtery while you have it, before it be finiſhed; for if once it be finiſhed, there will be no more method of grace and ſalvation for ſinners. The goſpel is the laſt ſhip for Immanuel's land. It will be finiſhed in itſelf with time; but to you with the end of your time.

(1.) Earneſtly ſeek of God by his Spirit the revelation of the myſtery to you, the ſaving knowledge of it, Matth. xiii. 11. forecited. For no man can have it without the Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 14. forecited.

(2.) Reſt not till ye be brought into the fellowſhip of the myſtery, Eph. iii. 9. By the goſpel ye are called unto it, 1 Cor. i. 9. and by faith brought into it, 1 John i. 3.

(3.) laſtly, Carry always with you in remembrance the finiſhing of the myſtery, and time with it; that you may be inured to look on the preſent ſtate of affairs as paſſing, and to look for all things new.

Walking by Faith, not by Sight.

The Subſtance of three SERMONS, Preached at Maxton Communion, June 29. and 30. and at Ettrick, July 7. 1728.

2 Cor. v. 7.

For we walk by faith, not by ſight.

The firſt Sermon on this Text.

IN the preceeding words we find a notable myſtery of the Chriſtian life, viz. it is a groaning life, ver. 2. 4. and yet a life of confidence, wherein one is of good cheer, as ſafe and comfortable, ver. 6. But if Chriſtians are ſo confident, and of ſo good cheer, why do they they groan? They are burdened, under a body of ſin and death, a load of trials and afflictions. And burdened folk muſt groan; ay they may groan, and yet not grudge; for Chriſt himſelf was a groaner, but not a grudger, as we find John xi. 33. He groaned in the ſpirit, and was troubled. But then if they groan ſo heavily, how are they confident and of good cheer? how can theſe conſiſt? Very well, ſays the apoſtle, For we walk by faith, not by ſight. Faith's proſpect keeps up the heart, while ſight and ſenſe of the hardſhips of the way makes us groan; and we ſteer our courſe by the former, not by the latter. In the words we have,

1. The preſent ſtate and condition of the ſaints in this world: they are in the way as travellers; We walk. The ſaints in heaven, and the damned in hell, are come to their journey's end; they are, as to their bodies, in their long home; as to their ſouls, in their eternal home. We here are on the way: the wicked, ſome running, ſome ſtealing, on the way to deſtruction; the ſaints on their way to heaven, groaning and preſſing forward. The company before them is triumphant, the company with them militant; they are not yet got home, but they are on the way.

2. How they direct their courſe while in the way, for ſafety and comfort; for their road through this world is dangerous and gloomy, as in a wilderneſs. And poſitively,

1. By faith. They that are before them in heaven, manage themſelves by ſight: for their ſight cannot deceive; every thing appears there in its true colours, and there ſight diſcerns every thing as it is. The reſt of the travellers through the world, walk by ſight: but ſight and ſenſe in the world are deceitful things: for there are many falſe appearances there, which whoſo follow fall headlong into the dark dungeon of deſtruction. But their Father has given them faith's proſpect to walk by: and that diſcovers things worldly ſight cannot reach, and corrects the miſtakes of it in things it does reach: and in ſome meaſure it ſupplies the want of heavenly ſight, giving a view of things not ſeen; Heb. xi. 1. ‘ Now ‘ faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence ‘ of things not ſeen.’

2. Negatively, Not by ſight. The word does not formally denote the ſight ſeeing, but the ſight ſeen; that is, the outward ſhape of things, the appearance they make to our ſight, ſenſe, and carnal reaſon. Hence it is rendered ſhape, John v. 37. ‘ And the Father himſelf which hath ſent me, hath borne witneſs of me. ‘ Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor ſeen ‘ his ſhape;’ and appearance, 1 Theſſ. v. 22. ‘ Abſtain ‘ from all appearance of evil.’ Now, that appearance of things is the guide in the way to carnal men; by it they take their marks, and are led to ruin. The ſaints forgetting themſelves, ſometimes take their mark by it too, and they ſmart for it; but their habitual deliberate courſe is not directed by it.

DOCT. They that would ſafely and comfortably travel on their way through this world, muſt direct their courſe by faith, and not by ſight, or the appearance things make to their ſight, ſenſe, and carnal reaſon.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Conſider the journey we are all on.

II. Shew how we muſt, while we are on our way, direct our courſe by faith, and not by ſight, as ever we would get ſafely and comfortably through.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall conſider the journey we all are on. Saints and ſinners are both travellers. The difference between them lies not in that the one are on their journey, and the other arrived at their home; nay, they are both by the way; and ſinners are walking as faſt to their home, as ſaints to theirs. But it lies here; the one walk by faith, the other walk by ſight. Therefore here a few words of our common journey.

1. The point where we began our journey, was from the womb: the moment we received life there, we ſet off in our way. Then we commenced ſinful creatures, as ſaith the pſalmiſt, Pſal. li. 5. ‘ Behold, I was ſhapen ‘ in iniquity; and in ſin did my mother conceive me:’ and therefore dying creatures. So we are on our way, ere we could point a foot to the ground, ere we knew where we were.

2. The point where we will end it, is another world, the unſeen world, the place and ſtate of the dead. The travellers will never halt till they be there, whether they ſleep or wake: for ſays Job, chap. xxx. 23. ‘ I know ‘ that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living.’ The baiting-places by the way may be very different: but the lodging place is one; we will lie down alike in the duſt.

3. Our journeying, or travelling, or walking itſelf, is our motion between theſe two points: and that is our living here. Our life in this world is not a reſt, but a travelling motion; a travelling from the womb to the grave; a coming from the womb of our mother woman, and going in again to the womb of our mother earth, as ſaith Job, chap. i. 21. ‘ Naked came I out of ‘ my mother's womb, and naked ſhall I return thither.’

4. The place our way lies through, is this preſent world; where the riſing and ſetting ſun makes ſo many days and nights; where are ſo many ſummers and winters, while the travellers are on their road; where God ſends out his meſſengers to direct us to the right road. Carnal men count it their dwelling-place; hence ſaith the pſalmiſt, Pſal. xlix. 11. ‘ Their inward thought is, ‘ that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their ‘ dwelling-places to all generations; they call their lands ‘ after their own names.’ Again, they call it their reſting place: hence ſaid the rich man, Luke xii. 19. ‘ And ‘ I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid ‘ up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be ‘ merry.’ But it is but our journeying place we travel through; like a town on the road, where the traveller comes in at the one end of it, and goes out at the other: Eccleſ. i. 4. ‘ One generation paſſeth away, and another generation cometh.’

5. The way we make in our journey, is our time. How much of our time, ſo much of our way is over; and one ſtep of our way, right or wrong, we will never go back. Time flies away; and we cut our way more quickly than a poſt: and therefore will ſoon be at our journey's end.

6. laſtly, Every breathing we make, every pulſe is a ſtep in the way. God hath determined how often every one ſhall breathe in and out the air, how many rounds the blood ſhall go in our bodies, what number of pulſes it ſhall make. Theſe are the ſteps by which this journey is made. At length the laſt pulſe beats, the laſt breathing is made; and we are at our journey's end.

II. The next thing is to ſhew, How we muſt, while we are on our way, direct our courſe by faith, and not by ſight, as ever we would get ſafely and comfortably through.

1. As we are by nature poſſeſſed of ſight and ſenſe, we muſt be by grace poſſeſſed of faith too. We are men endowed with ſenſe and reaſon, but we muſt be Chriſtians too, having received Jeſus Chriſt by faith, as ſaith the apoſtle, Col. iii. 6. ‘ As ye have received Chriſt Jeſus ‘ the Lord, ſo walk ye in him.’ Mere ſenſual or natural men, without a gracious principle, a principle of faith, cannot walk but by ſenſe. Faith muſt firſt fetch a new life, or new nature from Chriſt, in habitual ſanctification, before one can walk by faith in actual holineſs, 2 Cor. v. 17. ‘ Therefore (ſaith the apoſtle) if any man ‘ be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt ‘ away, behold, all things are become new.’ Eph. ii. 10. ‘ For we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus ‘ unto good works, which God hath before ordained ‘ that we ſhould walk in them.’

2. We muſt no more make the preſent world our mark and chief aim, but the unſeen world of eternal bliſs. Senſe diſcovers the ſeen world as a beautiful thing in the profits and pleaſures thereof, and it terminates the view of the travellers by ſight. But faith's travellers look beyond it, and diſcover the better country, Immanuel's land; and being firmly perſuaded it is a better country, ſteer their courſe directly for it, Cant. viii. 5. ‘ Who is ‘ this that cometh up from the wilderneſs, leaning upon her beloved.’ Heb. xi. 13. ‘ Theſe all died in faith, ‘ not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them ‘ afar off, and were perſuaded of them, and embraced ‘ them, and confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth.’ Phil. iii. 14. ‘ I preſs toward the ‘ mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt ‘ Jeſus.’

3. We muſt take our way-marks to that land by faith, and not by ſight. The travellers that walk by ſenſe, they ſee the multitude on their way, and they ſee it is approven by the general vote; and ſo they go on in their looſe and eaſy way of religion, where the law as a law does not gird them ſtrait; and in their legal way of religion, where they hang by the bit of the law as a covenant. For that is a ſightly, rational way, not fanciful they think.

But the travellers by faith look to the word, and by faith diſcover only Chriſt to be the perſonal way, and univerſal holineſs the real way, John xiv. 6. 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.' Pſal. cxix. 6. 'Then (ſays the Pſalmiſt) ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments.' And therefore they work as if they were to win heaven by working: and renounce all confidence before the Lord in their works, as if they had never done a good work: hence is that character given of them, Phil. iii. 3. 'We are the circumciſion which worſhip God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.'

4. We muſt go on our way, not in felt ſtrength, but believed ſtrength. Sight and ſenſe are bold, according to what the man finds within himſelf; as ſaid Peter, 'Though all ſhould deny thee, yet will not I.' Faith is bold in what it ſees in Chriſt: hence is that exhortation, 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou therefore my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus.' And hence the Chriſtian's experience is, 2 Cor. xii. 10. 'When I am weak, then am I ſtrong.' For he ſays, Pſal. lxxi. 16. 'I will go in the ſtrength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteouſneſs, even of thine only.'

5. We muſt not wait the comforts of ſight and ſenſe, under the hardſhips of the way, but take the comfort of faith, Pſal. cviii. 7. 'God hath ſpoken in his holineſs, I will rejoice.' They may wait long the other way ere they get it: but faith is help at hand; for faith's cordial water is always ready, viz. the ſpring of the word that is always clear, even while the diſpenſations of providence are drumbly; hence ſaith David, Pſal lvi. 10. 'In God will I praiſe his word: in the Lord will I praiſe his word.'

6. We muſt not take the teſtimony of our ſight and ſenſe, but believe the report of faith, concerning all we meet with in our way; and walk accordingly. Worldly eaſe, wealth, and proſperity, are excellent good things, tribulations and trials very ill things, by the teſtimony of ſenſe; but faith reports quite otherwiſe of them; that the former is dangerous, and the latter the more ſafe. Senſe ſays, he hates, and therefore he rebukes; faith corrects the miſtake by the word, and ſays he loves; and therefore as many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten, Rev. iii. 19. We muſt believe.

7. laſtly, When ſight and ſenſe fails, we muſt hold faith's gripe, and preſs forward: hence ſaith the pſalmiſt, Pſal. lxxiii. 26. 'My fleſh and my heart faileth; but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever.' In particular temptations, trials, &c. when the foot is ready to ſlip, we muſt hold faſt the promiſe; for there is our ſafety and comfort too: Pſal. xxvii. 13. 'I had fainted, unleſs I had believed to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living.' When all ſtreams of conſolation ariſing from this world are running dry, we muſt fetch in conſolation from another world: hence ſaith the prophet, Hab. iii. 17, 18. 'Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation.'

USE 1. Sinners, be no longer deceived with vain appearances, ceaſe your purſuit of the objects of ſenſe as your great mark and aim, and cloſe with Chriſt the object of faith, looking for your portion in the unſeen world of happineſs. Conſider,

1. Sight and ſenſe have deceived you, and will do ſo to the end, Eccleſ. i. 2. It is impoſſible for what you ſee in this world, if it were all youre, to ſatisfy your heart in its cravings. You labour in vain; Eccleſ. i. 8. 'All things are full of labour, man cannot utter it; the eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.'

2. Faith will bring in full ſatisfaction to you; hence is that exhortation, Pſal. lxxxi. 2d. 'Open thy mouth mouth wide, and I will fill it.' It brings in a full ſatisfying object; for ſuch will be Chriſt in you the hope of glory: and according to the meaſure of your faith, ſo will your actual ſatisfaction and ſoul's reſt be: and if it were perfect, the ſatisfaction would be ſo too.

And if ye would take this courſe,

1. Secure your belief of a better world, of a full and eternal happineſs beyond the boundaries of time. Believe it on the teſtimony of God in his word. Alas! with moſt men, it is rather a may-be than a certainty; a probable opinion, than a matter of firm perſuaſion. If it were not ſo, men could not be ſo indifferent about it.

2. Believe that Chriſt is held forth to you in the goſpel-promiſe to be truſted to, and ſo to be embraced by you, that you may by that truſt on him as your Saviour be united to him: John iii. 16. 'For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.' Eph. iii. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. And in and with him is held forth all the grace and glory of the unſeen world: Rom. viii. 32. 'He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?' So receiving him, ye will be heirs of the eternal inheritance diſcovered and embraced in the promiſe by faith.

USE. 2. Let ſuch as are under ſpiritual deſertion, going mourning without the ſun, from whom the ſpiritual ſight and comfortable ſenſe they ſometimes had is gone, know that believing is a proper courſe for them. Though your way unto God ſeems to be built up round about you with hewen ſtone; there is an open place left, whereat ye may walk out by faith; Iſa. l. 10. 'Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his ſervant, that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light? let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay upon his God.'

1. Though former ſpiritual ſight and feeling is gone, that ye are left as a ſtone; the promiſe of the goſpel is where it was ſtill. Your miſmanagement cannot make the faithfulneſs of God of none effect: 2 Tim. ii. 13. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himſelf. The breaſts of the promiſe are as full and free as before.

2. Try to believe and apply the promiſe. Ye find ye have not the power of your ſpiritual limbs: but God calls you to ariſe, and walk by faith. Show good-will and the obedience of faith upon Chriſt's call, as the man with the withered hand. There may be great mercy in the womb of the heavy diſpenſation ye are ſhut up under: Rom. xi. 32. 'For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.' Strong appears that power, that ſuddenly looſes the waters bound up with an intenſe froſt.

3. Wait not for ſenſe and feeling, that ye may believe; but believe, that ye may recover ſpiritual ſenſe and feeling again: Pſal. lxv. 3. 'Iniquities prevail againſt me: as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away.' Rom. xv. 13. 'Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghoſt.'

USE 3. laſt. Remember that, particularly at the Lord's table, ye walk by faith not by ſight. Labour by faith to diſcern the Lord's body, exhibited to you in the ſacramental ſigns, and feed thereupon by a believing application of Chriſt to yourſelves.

2 Cor. v. 7.

For we walk by faith, not by ſight.

The Second Sermon on this Text.

YE have been at your ſpiritual meal, which our Lord allows for the refreſhment of travellers by the way; now ye muſt ariſe, and walk on your way to Zion; and if ye would walk aright, ye muſt walk by faith, not by ſight.

The doctrine obſerved from the words, was,

Doct. They that would ſafely and comfortably travel on their way through this world, muſt direct their courſe by faith, and not by ſight, or the appearance things make to their ſight, ſenſe, and carnal reaſon.

All I ſhall further do in diſcourſing from this doctrine, ſhall be,

I. To offer a ſhort view of walking by faith, not by ſight.

II. To ſhew wherein lies the difference betwixt faith and ſight in this matter.

III. Give the reaſons of this doctrine.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall offer a ſhort view of walking by faith, and not by ſight. It lies in theſe four,

1. In taking our aim by faith, and not by ſight. The aim taken by ſight is low; that by faith is high, out of the reach of ſight: hence ſaith the apoſtle, Phil. iii. 14. 'I preſs toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.' While the great aim of them that walk by ſight and ſenſe, is to win the world, the eaſe and comforts of it; let yours be to win Chriſt; as was Paul's, Phil. iii. 8. 'Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Chriſt.' Let it be to be with Chriſt, as was the ſame apoſtle's, chap. i. 23. 'For I am in a ſtrait betwixt two, having a deſire to depart, and to be with Chriſt; which is far better.' Follow that aim, and ye walk by faith.

2. In taking your guide for your way by faith, not by ſight. Give over walking according to the courſe of this world; but take Chriſt for your guide, whom the Father has given for that end: Iſ. lv. 4. 'Behold, I have given him for a witneſs to the people, a leader and commander to the people.' Your own ſight and wiſdom are not to be truſted for guiding you; ye will never get through, if he be not eyes to you in the wilderneſs.

3. In taking your directions in the way by faith, not by ſight. Sight takes up things by their outward appearance, faith views them in the glaſs of the word. And the word is the rule of the walk that is by faith; Iſ. viii. 20. 'To the law and to the teſtimony; if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them.' And to that word the traveller is to turn his eyes in all difficulties.

4. In fetching in your ſupport and proviſion in the way by faith, not by ſight. Faith goes to the promiſe for that end; hence ſaid Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 12. 'And thou ſaidſt, I will ſurely do thee good, and make thy ſeed as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.' It is the ſtaff in his hand to help him forward, the well of conſolation to drink at for refreſhment, the cordial to keep him from fainting.

II. Where lies the difference betwixt faith and ſight in this matter? There is a ſight and ſenſe of ſpiritual things, as well as of worldly things. But whatever kind ſight and ſenſe be of, while we are in the way, there is a great difference betwixt faith and it: ſo that we are to direct our courſe by the former, and not by the latter.

2. Sight looks into ourſelves, and out to the world; but faith looks up to Chriſt. Hence many heavy things preſent themſelves to the travellers ſight, partly without and partly within him, which are apt to cauſe him faint in his way. But faith looking to Chriſt, diſcerns in him what is more than balance for all theſe, 1 Pet. i. 6. 8. and makes him go chearfully on. If at any time joyful and refreſhing things preſent themſelves to his ſight; yet theſe are but ſome ſhallow ſtreams from that fulneſs in Chriſt which faith ſits down at, Col. ii. 10. 'And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power.'

2. Sight proceeds upon the outward appearance of things; and becauſe theſe are often falſe, the traveller is led out of his way thereby into pits and ſnares: as was the caſe with Samuel, 1 Sam. xvi. 6. 'And it came to paſs when they were come, that he looked on Eliab, and ſaid, ſurely the Lord's anointed is before him. But the Lord ſaid Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature; becauſe I have refuſed him; for the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.' And this is the very way how many are led off into the mire of profanity, following the ſight of their eyes; others into damnable hereſies, following the dictates of their corrupt reaſon in divine myſteries. But faith proceeds on the teſtimony of God, believing becauſe God has ſaid it; receiving the kingdom of God as a little child, to whom the Father's ſaying is enough for his believing, and his bidding for his doing. So walking by faith is ſure walking, becauſe on the teſtimony of God that cannot lie, Tit. i. 2.

3. The object of ſight is very variable, ſometimes waxing, ſometimes waneing, and ſometimes diſappearing for good and all; hence they that walk by it, are like men walking by the help of the moon in a cloudy night, that often leaves them in darkneſs. This was the pſalmiſt's caſe, Pſal. xxx. 7. 'Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong: thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled.' Hence ſuch unevenlineſs in the way of many. But the object of faith is unchangeable, Heb. xiii. 8. 'Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, and to-day, and for ever.' 2 Pet. i. 19. 'We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, untill the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts.' And hence walking by faith is ſure walking; the man holds on his way, though comforts fail without and within. Chriſt is to the fore, the promiſe is ſure anchor ground.

4. Sight reaches only to things preſent, but faith reaches to future things, Heb. xi. 1. 'Faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen.' Sight and ſenſe looking to the preſent diſpenſation of providence, tells the traveller, what is; but faith looking to the promiſe, tells what will be. Sight ſays, There is a beautiful world for a reſting place; and the traveller liſtening to its tale, begins to ſeek reſt there. But faith tells there is a train in the bowels of it, that will blow it up, and it will be in flames ſhortly; and ſo he haſteth forward; and, There is a better world to come. Sight ſays oft-times, There is a hard way, and a dark night, no appearance of day: but faith ſays, on the credit of the promiſe, But the end will be peace, and the morning cometh.

5. laſtly, Sight reaches no further even into things preſent, than the outſide: but faith looks in to what is wrapt up within them. It diſcovers the lions and leopards dens in Lebanon, hid from ſight by the pleaſant growth there; the poiſon covered up in the world's golden diſh, that deceived ſenſe would otherwiſe receive. And it will diſcover a paradiſe, where nothing lies open to ſight but a hedge of thorns, 2 Cor. xii. 10. 'Therefore I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake: for when I am weak, then am I ſtrong.' It will make ſurpriſing diſcoveries in a ſore affliction. Weighing an affliction that to ſenſe is the weight of a talent, it will diſcover it to be really light: meaſuring one of long continuance to ſenſe, it will diſcover it to be but for a moment; trying the nature and operation of one that appears deadly and deſtructive to ſenſe, it will diſcover it to 'work a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen; for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal,' 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

III. The next thing is, to give the reaſons of the point. Conſider,

1. It was walking by ſight that firſt ruined the world; as we find, Gen. iii. 6. 'And when the woman ſaw that the tree was good for food, and it was pleaſant to the eyes, and a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe; ſhe took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave alſo unto her huſband with her; and he did eat.' And by the ſame method the ruin is a carrying on ſtill. If it was ſo dangerons to walk by ſight in paradiſe, how is it poſſible it can be ſafe now, when ſnares are multiplied in the world, and our faculty of diſcerning is ſo notably impaired?

2. The life preſent is appointed for faith, the life to come for ſight and ſenſe. Now is the time of trial, and the trial of faith in particular; walk by it now; the trial will ſhortly be over, and faith will be turned into ſight; and the ſaints ſhall be happy in ſeeing and feeling to their hearts wiſh for ever. Two ſummers are not to be expected in one year: and they that will have their ſummer of ſenſe now, will have a long winter of it through eternity.

3. Faith and ſight in the matter of comfort, differ as duty and privilege. Faith is our duty at all times, foul or fair: hence is that exhortation: Pſal. lxii. 8. 'Truſt in him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us.' Spiritual ſight and ſenſe is a privilege that God gives or with-holds from his people according to ſovereign pleaſure. The duty of believing is preſcribed us for our work; ſight and ſenſe allowed us now and then for our encouragement in it; as we ſee in the caſe of Thomas, John xx. 27, 28, 29. 'Then ſaith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thruſt it into my ſide: and be not faithleſs, but believing. And Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, My Lord and my God. Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed; bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed.' And therefore we are to walk by faith.

4. laſtly, Our happineſs for time and eternity lies in unſeen things, 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. forecited. It is an unſeen Chriſt from whom we have all our hope of happineſs, Chriſt in you the hope of glory. It is an unſeen world where we can be completely happy. Therefore we walk to deſtruction, if we walk not by faith.

Uſe. 1*ſt*, As ever ye would walk ſafely through the world, and not be inſnared for the preſent, and ruined in the end, walk by faith, and not by ſight. And for this end conſider,

1. Ye are in an enſnaring world. Ye have a fair-faced deceitful world to deal with, a ſubtle devil ready to outwit you, and ye are but weak-ſighted for diſcerning of ſnares. If ye truſt to ſight and ſenſe, and walk not by faith, ye will be inſnared and circumveened to your eternal ruin. Therefore hear our Lord's direction, Cant. iv. 8. 'Come with me from Lebanon, my ſpouſe, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lions dens, from the mountains of the leopards.'

2. Sight, and ſenſe, and corrupt reaſon, are making fearful ſhipwreck of ſouls at this day; and ſpiritual plagues are a-dealing plentifully, in delivering up the generation to them, that have refuſed to walk by faith. The plague began in untender and looſe practices; theſe have ate out the life of ſpirituality in religion; and it has proceeded to the caſting off of the principles at length, rejecting firſt the grace of Chriſt, and then attacking the doctrine of the perſon of Chriſt, his ſupreme Godhead, neceſſary and ſelf-exiſtence and independency. So that our poſterity are like to have tranſmitted to them a mere rational kind of religion, under the name of Chriſtianity, that has no dependence on nor relation to the glorious perſon, grace, and Spirit of Chriſt the Father's equal; which differs not from Heatheniſm, but in ſome accidentals. And the ſpring of all is, walking by ſight, not by faith; the pleaſing of ſenſe in practice, and corrupt reaſon in principles. Therefore take heed, and learn the humility of faith in practice and principles, to echo your ſoul's conſent to Thus ſaith the Lord in his word. And,

(1.) Walk by faith in duty. Your call to it being clear, go about it in the faith of the promiſe of through-bearing; and not of your own gifts, abilities, and home furniture for it, Phil. iv. 13. 'I can do all things (ſays the apoſtle) through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.'

(2.) Walk by faith againſt ſin, and your ſeveral corrupt luſts that are to be mortified. Look to the croſs of Chriſt, thence to bring deſtruction on them, applying the virtue of Chriſt's death to yourſelves by faith, Rom. vi. 6. 'Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin;' truſting to him for the efficacy of his Spirit in the appointed means of mortification, Rom. viii. 13. 'For if ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.'

(3.) Walk by faith through temptations; being ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus, believing his grace ſhall be ſufficient for you, for that the battle is the Lord's. The faſt hold of the promiſe of his grace will be your ſecurity.

2*dly*, As ever ye would walk comfortably through the world, walk by faith, not by ſight. The comfort of ſight and ſenſe is very uncertain and ſhort-lived; the mountain may be ſtanding ſure this day, that may be overturned to morrow. And whatever comfort ye have that way now, ye will certainly come to the time, when, if ye cannot walk comfortably by faith, ye will have no comfort at all.

(1.) Walk by faith in deſertion. Sometimes the candle of ſpiritual ſenſe is blown out to God's people, but the ſun of the promiſe is as firm as the ſun in the heavens. And they are brought to that caſe for the trial of faith, which muſt then act on the bare word of promiſe: Iſa. l. 10. 'Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his ſervant, that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light? let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay upon his God.'

(2.) Walk by faith in affliction, believing it is God's ordinance for humbling and purifying; that there is no needleſs affliction ye meet with; that he will be with you in it, and will deliver you in the time that will be beſt for deliverance.

(3.) laſtly, Walk by faith through death. So they walked through the Red Sea, and were ſafe, though the waters were as hanging heaps on every hand of them; confident on the ground of God's faithfulneſs in the word of free grace, Heb. xi. 29. 'By faith they paſſed 'through the Red Sea, as by dry land: which the E'gyptians eſſaying to do, were drowned.'

2 Cor. v. 7.

For we walk by faith, not by ſight.

The third Sermon on this Text.

HAving had occaſion to diſcourſe from theſe words at a late ſacramental occaſion, I obſerved the following point of doctrine from them, viz. They that would ſafely and comfortably travel on their way through this world, muſt direct their courſe by faith, and not by ſight, or the appearance things make to their ſight, ſenſe, and carnal reaſon: which I endeavoured to open up and apply; and without repeating what was then delivered, I ſhall, as the ſubject of farther diſcourſe from this text, gather up the ſubſtance of the words in the two following doctrines.

Doct. I. The Chriſtian walk is not by ſight, or the outward appearance of things.

Doct. II. The Chriſtian walk is a walking by faith.

In handling the firſt of theſe doctrines, I ſhall,

I. Shew that there is ſuch a walk in uſe in the world.

II. Open up the nature of this walking by ſight, and ſhew wherein it lies.

III. Confirm the doctrine.

IV. laſtly, Make ſome practical improvement.

I. I ſhall ſhew that there is ſuch a walk in uſe in the world.

1. There are many whoſe main care and concern is for the body, and the things of a preſent life; neglecting their ſouls and their eternal intereſt: hence ſaith David, Pſal. iv. 6. 'There be many that ſay, Who will 'ſhew us any good?' (but there are few that ſay,) 'Lord, 'lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.' This ſad truth is obvious to diſcerning perſons, who cannot but ſee the world thronged with ſuch egregious fools, who are penny wiſe and pound fooliſh. But let ſuch conſider that word, Matth. xvi. 26. 'What is a man 'profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his 'own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for 'his ſoul?'

2. The life of moſt men is paſſed in a dream, being one continued cheat impoſed on them by the grand deceiver. Pſal. iv. 2. 'O ye ſons of men, how long will 'ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing?' They never open their eyes, to ſee matters in their true colours, till all is paſt remedy. This was the caſe of the rich man, Luke xvi. 23. who 'in hell lift up his eyes, being in 'torments, and ſaw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in 'his boſom.' The fooliſh virgins dreamed on till the door was ſhut. See the ſpring of this, Iſa. xliv. 20. 'He feedeth of aſhes: a deceived heart hath turned him 'aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there 'not a lie in my right hand?'

3. Few are at pains to examine matters by the word, which gives Heaven's teſtimony of them, Iſa. viii. 20.; but they take them according to their outward appearance. Hence the bait is ſwallowed greedily, without diſcerning the hook, till it ſtick in their throat.

4. Oft times things that are good and profitable, are neglected and ſhunned, becauſe they are not pleaſant to ſenſe; and things pleaſing to ſenſe, though poiſonous and deſtructive in their own nature, are greedily embraced. Hence is that wo, Iſ. v. 20. 'Wo unto them 'that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkneſs 'for light, and light for darkneſs; and put bitter for 'ſweet, and ſweet for bitter.' A plain evidence that ſenſe is the leading principle, and not faith.

II. I will open the nature of this walking by ſight, and ſhew wherein it lies. Walking by ſight lies,

1. In taking your aim by ſight, and not by faith, contrary to that, 2 Cor. iv. 18. 'While we look not 'at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which 'are not ſeen: for the things which are ſeen are tem'poral; but the things which are not ſeen are eternal.' Every man has ſome aim, which is the main thing he drives at; but moſt men take their aim by ſight and ſenſe, ſetting themſelves to purſue that for their portion which ſight and ſenſe recommend to them. Hence in walking by ſight,

(1.) The ſeen world is preferred to the unſeen; Pſal. iv. 6. 'There be many that ſay, who will ſhew us any 'good?' In the word of the goſpel we hear of an unſeen world, where glory dwells, where there is an eternal enjoyment of all good: but with our eyes we ſee the beauty of a preſent world. So ſight having more influence than faith, this world is choſen for a portion which we ſee: the other is neglected as a thing unſeen, and therefore unſure,

(2.) Preſent things to thoſe that are to come. Hence ſaid Paul of Demas, 2 Tim. iv. 10. 'Demas hath for'ſaken me, having loved this preſent world.' Senſe ſays, A bird in hand, is worth two in the buſh. Senſe being the leading principle, the man muſt have his portion preſently, he cannot wait; for ſenſe cannot be gratified with any thing but what is preſent, Pſal. xvii. 14.

(3.) Temporal things to ſpiritual, 2 Cor. iv. 18. forecited. Gold is preferred to grace, the fellowſhip of the world to the favour of God, and all the privileges of the everlaſting covenant. For the one are objects of ſight and ſenſe, the other objects of faith: and if men walk by ſight, they can never prefer ſpiritual things which they ſee not, to temporal things which they do ſee.

2. In directing your courſe by ſight, and not by faith, through this world. Hence is that exhortation, Numb. xv. 39. 'Seek not after your own heart, and your own 'eyes after which ye uſe to go a-whoring.' We have much need to be airted aright to the way we ſhould take, through the world, wherein there are ſo many croſs-ways, by-ways, dangerous ways. Men ſenſible of their own weakneſs ſtrive to direct their courſe by faith; but moſt men, proud and preſumptuous, direct theirs by their ſight and ſenſe. Hence,

(1.) The courſe of this world is followed inſtead of the way of God's commands. Hence ſaid the apoſtle of the Epheſians, Eph. ii. 2. 'In time paſt ye walked 'according to the courſe of this world, according to the 'prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit that now 'worketh in the children of diſobedience.' Men think themſelves ſafe enough, if there be a multitude before them; they are ſhameleſs in ſin, becauſe they have many neighbours; nay they would think ſhame not to go in a way that is generally gone into; for it is a piece of the wiſdom and good humour of the fleſh, to be conformed to the world. But 'be ye not conformed to 'this world; but be ye transformed by the renew'ing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good 'and acceptable, and perfect will of God,' Rom. xii. 2.

(2.) The moſt eaſy way is followed inſtead of the moſt ſafe: Matth. vii. 13. ‘Enter in at the ſtrait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat.’ For ſenſe ſees only what is preſent, ſees not the end untill it be come: ſo the broad, green, and eaſy way, though the pit of deſtruction is at the end, is preferred to the rugged way to life, by thoſe walking by ſenſe.

(3.) The ſofteſt ſteps are taken, though they be not cleanly. What will gratify the ſenſe, is ſwallowed down, though it choke the conſcience. When the eyes are fixed on beholding vanity, the ſoul runs headlong into the ſnare. Hence the world is filled with covetouſneſs, ſenſuality, uncleanneſs, &c. being drawn into ruin with the ſilken cords of ſenſe.

(4.) Steps dangerous to ſenſe are ſhunned, to the wounding of the conſcience, Prov. xxix. 25. ‘The fear of man bringeth a ſnare: but whoſo putteth his truſt in the Lord ſhall be ſafe.’ Hence walking by ſenſe in time of danger for religion, makes many apoſtates; and in time of the greateſt peace, it brings a fearful ſnare, ſo that ſhunning to offend men, we often run ourſelves on offending and grieving the Spirit of God.

3. In taking your encouragement in the way from ſenſe, not by faith; ſo venturing out on ſtrength ſeen and felt, not in the ſtrength of Chriſt ſecured in the promiſe, Jer. xvii. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord, Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord. Moſt men know nothing of going in any ſtrength, but what is in themſelves. And hence in walking by ſenſe.

(1.) Oft-times there is a bold venturing on where there is a foul come-off; as in Peter's caſe. Men preſumptuouſly venture on ſuch and ſuch duties, where they ſink and cannot get through, their own ſtock of ability failing them; they ruſh on temptations fearleſsly, and they loſe their feet and fall into the mire. Their bow bent is broken, and they cannot find their hands in the day of battle.

(2.) Oft-times there is a cowardly ſhifting of duty which God calls for, Prov. xxvi. 13. The ſlothful man ſaith, There is a lion in the way, a lion is in the ſtreets. The man is called to duty, but he ſees he is not able for it: every call to duty bears a promiſe of ſtrength: but he walks by ſenſe, not by faith, therefore can venture on no more than what he feels and ſees. And many duties are caſt off this way, and much guilt fixed on the conſcience.

4. In riſing and falling juſt according to ſight and ſenſe, and the outward appearance of providence. Moſt men know no other ſpring of trouble and ſorrow, of peace and comfort, but that; and according as that ſpring runs clear or muddy, ſo do they find or loſe their comfort. Hence,

(1.) When the outward diſpenſations of providence are ſmiling and favourable to them, they are very eaſy, though perhaps matters are all wrong betwixt God and their ſouls; as was the caſe with the rich man, Luke xii. 19. ‘And I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink and be merry.’ The concerns of this world proſpering, they are well, they reign as kings; for they have no due concern about the matters of another world.

(2.) When theſe outward diſpenſations are all againſt them, they have no comfort; for the things of ſenſe, the only ſpring of their comfort, is dried up. It was not ſo with Job walking by faith, Job vi. 13. ‘Is not my help in me? and is wiſdom driven quite from me?’ nor with Habakkuk, chap. iii 17, 18. ‘Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation.’

III. To confirm the doctrine, conſider,

1. Walking by ſight and ſenſe is not the way that Chriſt himſelf walked: and ſure it is the duty of believers to walk after his example, 1 John ii. 6. ‘He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked.’ Now it is ſaid of him expreſsly, Iſa. xi. 3. ‘He ſhall not judge after the ſight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears.’ We have a notable inſtance of it in the hiſtory of his temptations, Matth. iv. 8, 9, 10. ‘Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and ſheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them: and ſaith unto him, All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down, and worſhip me. Then ſaith Jeſus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God; and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.’ So they cannot be followers of Chriſt that walk by ſight.

2. It is not the way wherein the ſaints have got to the kingdom, 2 Cor. iv. 18. ‘They looked not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal.’ Had that been the way of walking every one took, where would men have been found, who would have digeſted ſeen and felt hardſhips, for unſeen comforts and happineſs? Walking by ſight would have been very unfit to make martyrs.

3. It is the high way of unregenerate men, ſenſual, not having the Spirit, Jude ver. 19. The evil ſpies, and the murmuring generation that liſtened to them, were an awful emblem of ſuch walkers, whoſe carcaſes ſhall fall in the wilderneſs, and they never ſee the promiſed land. Thoſe only ſhall ſee it, who like Caleb and Joſhua, have another ſpirit.

USE. 1. This informs us,

1. That thoſe are not true Chriſtians, who habitually walk by ſight and ſenſe, who make their ſenſe and feeling, and outward appearances of things, the mark they walk by. If your courſe of life be not influenced by your belief of things that are not ſeen, ye will never ſee the land afar off.

2. Let not Chriſtians think ſtrange, that things are generally ordered harſh to them in the world as to their ſight and ſenſe; for it is not by things ſoft and eaſy to theſe, that the Lord's children make their way home: nor yet that ſight and ſenſe in ſpirituals is but very ſeldom allowed them; for though ſome ſips and drops of that kind may now and then be let fall to them, their meal of that kind is reſerved for another world.

3. So far as a child of God walks by ſight and ſenſe, he is off his road; and he will find himſelf bemiſted in it at length, and be fain to return.

Uſe 2. Walk not by ſight and appearance of things.

Mot. 1. It is a wavering unſettled way of walking, James i. 8. ‘A double minded man is unſtable in all his ways.’ The objects of ſenſe are very uncertain; they may be with one to-day, away to-morrow; wo to them that are building their peace and comfort on them; they are like one that would ſleep on the top of a maſt.

2. It is a deceitful way of walking. Things that have the faireſt appearance to ſight, are oft-times the moſt hurtful and ruining, Cant. iv. 8. ‘Come with me from Lebanon, my ſpouſe, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lions dens, from the mountains of the leopards.’ And Satan deceives men a thouſand times by their ſight and ſenſe.

3. laſtly, It is a dangerous way of walking. All mankind felt it in Eve's truſting to her eyes, and the conſequences thereof, Gen. iii. 6. ‘And when the woman ſaw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleaſant to the eyes, and a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe; ſhe took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave alſo unto her huſband with her, and he did

' eat.' And fearful havock is ſtill making by the ſame doors of deſtruction.

Doct. II. The Chriſtian walk is a walking by faith.

In diſcourſing this doctrine I ſhall,

I. Give you a view of walking by faith, ſhewing wherein it lies.

II. Shew how they walk that walk by faith.

III. Confirm the doctrine.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall give you a view of walking by faith, ſhewing wherein it lies. [Here the author repeated what was ſaid upon the ſame ſubject in the beginning of the ſecond ſermon on this text, above, p. 546.]

II. I ſhall ſhew how they walk that walk by faith.

1ſt, They walk heavenly, Phil. iii. 20. ' For our converſation is in heaven.' They that walk by ſenſe, have a carnal, ſenſual, worldly walk, like the reſt of the men of this world: but they that walk by faith, walk as Chriſt walked, they walk heavenly; which we take up in four things.

1. Heaven and glory is the place and ſtate they have in view to reach, 2 Cor. iv. 18. They ' look not at the ' things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ' ſeen: for the things which are ſeen, are temporal; ' but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal.' They are ſet off in their journey, and there they deſign to be. There only they expect their reſt, and there they deſire to be; as was the caſe with the Old-Teſtament ſaints, Heb. xi. 16. ' But now they deſire a better country, ' that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not aſhamed ' to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them ' a city.' Thoſe who are led by ſenſe, like the Reubenites, &c. deſire their portion on this ſide Jordan, and on that condition would quit their part of Canaan: but the ſaints are for the heavenly Canaan.

2. They look on this world only as the place of their pilgrimage, and themſelves as ſtrangers in it, who are not at home; as did the Old-Teſtament ſaints, who ' confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the ' earth,' Heb. xi. 13. Others carry themſelves as the natives of it, they as ſojourners in it, and travellers, who muſt take it in their way home to their Father's houſe. And they entertain a holy comparative contempt of it; as did the apoſtle, Gal. vi. 14. ' But God forbid that I ' ſhould glory ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ' by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto ' the world.'

3. They are moving heavenward, Cant. viii. 5. ' Who ' is this that cometh up from the wilderneſs, leaning ' upon her beloved?' They are not only moving thither, by the courſe of nature haſtening to another world; but in heart and affection. Their treaſure is there, and therefore their heart is there. They are preſſing towards it; as did Paul, Phil. iii. 14. ' I preſs toward the ' mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt ' Jeſus:' ſo running as they may obtain it at length. And at the root of all their ſtruggles and endeavours againſt ſin, is a deſire to be with Chriſt.

4. They walk like men of another world; Phil. iii. 20. For our converſation is in heaven. So the church in the exerciſe of grace is deſcribed, Cant. iii. 6. ' Who ' is this that cometh out of the wilderneſs like pillars of ' ſmoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincenſe, with ' all powders of the merchant?' Our Lord Jeſus after his reſurrection from the dead, though he continued in the world, yet did not familiarly converſe in it as before: ſo they who by faith have received a new life, alter their courſe, conforming not to the world, but to the heavenly country.

Now faith makes them walk thus, as,

1. It views Chriſt in his tranſcendent glory and excellency, in the glaſs of the word of the goſpel: 1 Pet. ii. 7. ' Unto you which believe he is precious.' 2 Cor. iii. 18. ' We all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs ' the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the ' Lord.' Chriſt ſeen in his glory, is an attracting object, and will make the ſoul follow, though it ſhould ſwim through a ſea of blood. So the martyrs made their way to him. See Heb. xi. 27. By faith Moſes forſook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as ſeeing him who is inviſible.

2. As it takes up this world, and the heavenly country, in their true colours, as deſcribed in the word. In the Bible we have illuminated maps of both worlds; but they cannot be rightly diſcerned by ſenſe, but by faith. And the eye of faith diſcerns,

(1.) The reality of the heavenly country; that cannot be perceived by ſenſe, and therefore is treated by ſenſual men as a creature of imagination, and at beſt uncertain. Faith fixes on the teſtimony of God anent it, and therefore is perſuaded of the reality thereof; believing it, though they cannot ſee it, Heb xi. 1. 13. ' Now faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the ' evidence of things not ſeen. Theſe all died in faith, ' not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them ' afar off, and were perſuaded of them, and embraced ' them.'

(2.) The preferableneſs of the heavenly country to this world, Pſal. iv. 6. ' There be many that ſay, Who ' will ſhew us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light ' of thy countenance upon us.' Heb. xi. 13. forecited. Faith ſees a weight of glory there, that downweighs the ſmiles and frowns of the world here as light things. It ſees a ſuitableneſs in theſe to the ſatisfaction of the ſoul, and an unſuitableneſs in the things of the world. It ſees the one to be eternal, the other but temporary. Hence the one is followed eagerly, the other not ſo.

2dly, They walk ſafely, Prov. i. 33. ' Whoſo hearkeneth unto me, ſhall dwell ſafely, and ſhall be quiet ' from fear of evil.' This world is Satan's walk, a wilderneſs where like a wild beaſt he ranges to and fro for his prey; and they that walk by ſenſe, fall a prey to him, ſome caught in one trap, ſome in another. Only walking by faith we can be ſafe. For,

1. Faith keeps the eye on Chriſt as the great leader: Prov. iii. 5, 6. ' Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart; ' and lean not unto thine own underſtanding. In all ' thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy ' paths.' And following him we will be ſafe; for he is the leader appointed by the Father: hence he ſaid of himſelf, John viii. 12. ' I am the light of the world: ' he that followeth me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ' ſhall have the light of life.' The believer cloſeth his own eye of ſenſe, and takes Chriſt to be eyes to him in the wilderneſs by his word and Spirit. And hence diſtruſting himſelf, and truſting Chriſt for conduct, he is led on ſafely, where others ſtick and are mired.

2. Faith keeps the eye on the word of command from heaven, Pſal. xvii. 4. diſcerning the authority of God ſtamped upon it, which makes the ſoul obey without diſputing, Pſal. cxix. 4. ' Thou haſt commanded ' us to keep thy precepts diligently.' Faith's view of the authority of God ſtamped upon a duty, will counterbalance all the reaſonings of ſenſe againſt it, taken from the hardſhip of it, danger about it, &c. And Thus ſaith the Lord, will be ſufficient to the ſoul in the caſe, though the whole world ſhould ſay the contrary. And that is ſure walking: Prov. x. 9. ' He that walk' eth uprightly, walketh ſurely: but he that perverteth ' his ways, ſhall be known.'

3. Faith truſts to the divine protection in the way of duty: Pſal. xci. 2. ' I will ſay of the Lord, he is my ' refuge, and my fortreſs: my God, in him will I ' truſt.' Preſumption is for truſting to the divine protection, in a way that God calls not the ſinner to. See Matth. iv. 6, 7. In ſuch a caſe there is not a promiſe, and ſo there is no foundation for that truſt. But faith has a promiſe of protection for the ſoul in the way of duty, however dangerous: Iſ. xliii. 2. ‘ When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee; when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt; neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee.’ And this promiſe being believed, will be made good, Rom. ix. 33. ‘ Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed.’ Pſal. ii. 12. ‘ Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him.’

4. laſtly, Faith brings always ſafe to their journey's end, whatever ſtorms blow, or dangers are encountered by the way: Mark xvi. 16. ‘ He that believeth, ſhall be ſaved: but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.’ Heb. x. 39. ‘ But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the ſaving of the ſoul.’ Walking by ſenſe will land people in deſtruction, but walking by faith will bring to the heavenly country at length. This leſſon is taught for all ages, in the carcaſes of the unbelieving Iſraelites, falling in the wilderneſs; and in Caleb and Joſhua, who believed the promiſe, their inheriting Canaan.

3*dly*, They walk comfortably, as well as ſafely: hence we read, Acts ix. 31. of ‘ the churches walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt.’ Worldly men may walk comfortably, but not ſafely; for there is a worm at the root of their comfort, as in Babylon's caſe, Rev. xviii. 7. ‘ How much ſhe hath glorified herſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her: for ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit a queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow.’ Saints may walk mournfully and yet comfortably: 2 Cor. v. 4. 6. ‘ For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilſt we are at home in the body, we are abſent from the Lord.’ It is certain, they have much grief and ſorrow that others want: yet they want not comfort, if they live by faith: hence ſaid our Lord to his drooping diſciples, John xiv. 18. ‘ I will not leave you comfortleſs; I will come to you.’ As the running brook may make more noiſe than the deep river, ſo the comfort of the ungodly may be more noiſy than that of the ſaints; and yet the former is but like the crackling of thorns under a pot, no ways comparable to the ſolid comfort of faith.

1. Faith brings in freſh ſprings of comfort, when the world's ciſterns are all run dry: Pſal. cxix. 49, 50. ‘ Remember the word unto thy ſervant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.’ The Bible will comfort, when worldly comfort fails. There faith looking to the promiſe, I will be their God, will comfort under the greateſt preſſures of affliction: hence ſaid the prophet, Hab. iii. 17, 18. ‘ Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation.’ Senſe can only run from one creature to another for comfort; but faith runs from the creatures to God.

2. Faith will diſcover love in the heart of an angry God, ſmiting, and forſaking, and purſuing a quarrel againſt one; Pſal. xxii. 1. ‘ My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?’ Pſal. xlii. 7, 8. ‘ Deep calleth unto deep at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindneſs in the day-time, and in the night his ſong ſhall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.’ When God hides his face, and ſhoots his arrows againſt the believer; faith will let him ſee ſome glimmerings of love in his face; hence ſaid Job, chap. xiii. 15. ‘ Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.’

3. Faith aſſures the believer of the truth of God, when his diſpenſations of providence ſeem to run croſs to his promiſes; this we have exemplified in Abraham's caſe, Rom. iv. 18, 19, 20. ‘ Who againſt hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was ſpoken, So ſhall thy ſeed be. And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah's womb.’ He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God.’ Heb. xi. 17, 18, 19. ‘ By faith Abraham when he was tried, offered up Iſaac; and he that had received the promiſes, offered up his only begotten ſon; of whom it was ſaid, That in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed by called. Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead: from whence alſo he received him in a figure.’

4. Faith eaſes the ſoul of many burdens that make uncomfortable walking. It eaſes it of a burden of guilt, Rom. v. 1. ‘ Therefore being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.’ It eaſes it of a ſtrong corruption, Acts xv. 9. ‘ Purifying their hearts by faith.’ It eaſes it of a burden of care and anxiety, 1 Pet. v. 7. ‘ Caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.’ And it eaſes it of the burdenſomeneſs of duty, Phil. iv. 13. ‘ I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.’

5. laſtly, Faith gives a fair proſpect of ſafe landing in Immanuel's land, amidſt all the ſtorms that happen in the voyage: Pſal. xxiii. 4. 6. ‘ Yea, though I walk through the valley and ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me, thy rod and thy ſtaff they comfort me. Surely goodneſs and mercy ſhall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the houſe of the Lord for ever.’

III. To confirm this doctrine, conſider,

1. The Chriſtian's life is by faith, Gal. ii. 20. ‘ I am crucified with Chriſt; Nevertheleſs I live, yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.’ And his walk muſt be alſo by faith, Col. ii. 6. ‘ As ye have therefore received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo walk ye in him.’

2. Thus the Chriſtian's life is diſtinguiſhed from that of the ſaints in heaven, and that of the wicked, as he is in a middle ſtate betwixt the two.

3. Thus Chriſt himſelf, and all the ſaints have walked; and thus alſo muſt all walk that intend to get to the heavenly Canaan.

Uſe. 1. Then they who do not direct men to a life of faith, and walking by faith, teach not true Chriſtianity. Of which unhappy number are many of the teachers of this day, whoſe continual theme is morality and virtue, and preſſing men to the obſervation of theſe as the conditions of their ſalvation, and the road to happineſs; without any notice of Chriſt, and faith in him, as the ſpring of all holy walking.

Uſe. 2. Know ye, ye walk not as Chriſtians indeed, if ye walk not by faith. If ye walk by ſight, ſenſe, appearance of things, and your own carnal reaſon, ye have but the name of Chriſtians. Walk looking to unſeen things; fixing your eyes on God and Chriſt, and the things of the other world. And thus evidence yourſelves to be Chriſtians indeed, by having your converſation in heaven, and your eyes turned away from all the objects of ſenſe.

The Nature and Neceſſity of REPENTANCE.

Several SERMONS preached at Ettrick, in the Year 1717.

LUKE xiii. 5.

I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

WHEN we conſider the abounding ſin and hardneſs of heart prevailing under a preached goſpel, it muſt needs let us ſee, that the doctrine of repentance is both neceſſary and ſeaſonable, to pluck the brands out of the burning; or if that will not do, to leave men without excuſe. Sinners ſtave off repentance, as if they were reſolved to perſiſt in ſin come what will, or at leaſt as halting betwixt two opinions; but here is a peremptory deciſion of the caſe in this text, I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

In theſe words we have two things.

1. An abuſe of a diſpenſation of providence corrected: I tell you, Nay. Some had told our Lord the news of Pilate the Roman governor's falling on ſome Galileans, with his ſoldiers, and killing them, while they were ſacrificing. It ſeems the tellers of this news, or others in the company, were apt to think, that theſe were ſinners beyond others, becauſe an unordinary judgment had fallen on them. Our Lord tells them, that it would not bear ſuch a concluſion. He puts them in mind of another remarkable providence, viz. the tower of Siloam in Jeruſalem its falling on and killing eighteen perſons: but here he ſhews, that this did not befal them, becauſe they were greater ſinners than all the reſt in Jeruſalem; nay there were as great ſinners as thoſe, which miſſed that ſtroke, and others like it too.

2. The right uſe of the diſpenſation inſtructed: But except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. The right uſe is to learn repentance from the ruin of others; if others give us an example at their own coſt, that we take heed to it, and improve it to our repentance and reformation. This is the import of the particle but. Theſe words are a peremptory certification given to ſinners by our Lord. And the propoſition in its own nature includes a twofold certification.

1ſt, A certification of ruin upon impenitence. Sinners go on in their courſe, yet hope that all may be well for all that. No, ſays our Lord, deceive not yourſelves; for if you do not repent, there is no ſaving of you. There is here,

(1.) The matter on which the certification is given, Except ye repent; i. e. If ye do not repent, if ye be not duly humbled for your ſins, and ſincerely turn from them. If ye harden your hearts under your guilt, keep ſtill your ſinful courſes, and refuſe to let them go, they will ruin you.

(2.) The thing certified, which is periſhing likewiſe; not periſhing in that very manner, but ye ſhall periſh as ſurely they did. The judgments of God ſhall purſue you, and ye ſhall periſh for ever.

(3.) The extent of the certification, All——periſh. This clears the periſhing to be meant of everlaſting death. Q. d. Though ſignal temporal judgments do not purſue all that are impenitent, yet eternal puniſhment will; no impenitent ſinner ſhall eſcape that, however they may eſcape temporal ſtrokes of ſignal vengeance.

(4.) The peremptorineſs of it. This appears in two things. 1. That ſolemn aſſertion, I tell you, ſuppoſed to be repeated in the laſt clauſe. Take it out of the mouth of the Lord himſelf, that ye ſhall periſh except ye repent. Q. d. This has been told you by many, but ye would not believe: but now I tell it you out of my own mouth. And to hear this out of the mouth of the Saviour, may ſtrike a ſinner with concern, and let him ſee, that Chriſt's blood will never be laid out on a perſon continuing impenitent, to ſave him from death. 2. In the relation intimate to be between the puniſhment of thoſe ſo ſignally ſmitten by the hand of God, and the future puniſhment of all impenitent ſinners: the former is a pledge of the latter. This is intimated by the particle likewiſe.

2dly, A certification of life upon repentance. This is implied here, as Gen. ii. 17. God has made as ſure a connection betwixt repentance and life, as betwixt impenitence and death. Be your ſins never ſo great, if you repent of them, and turn from them, they ſhall never be your ruin.

Before I come to the main point I deſign, I ſhall lay before you ſome obſervations from the words.

Obſ. 1. That thoſe who meet with more ſignal ſtrokes than others, are not therefore, nor are to be accounted greater ſinners than others. The Lord ſpares ſome as great ſinners, as he ſignally puniſheth. I tell you, Nay.

Reaſons of this diſpenſation of providence.

1. Becauſe of God's ſovereign power and abſolute dominion, which he will have the world to underſtand: Matth. xx. 15. 'Is it not lawful for me to do what I 'will with mine own?' Thus our Lord accounts for the diſpenſation of the man's being born blind, John ix. 3. All men have that in them and about them, which may make them liable to the heavieſt ſtrokes that any of the children of men meet with; and therefore whatever any ſuffer, the Lord does them no wrong, ſince he puniſhes them leſs than their iniquity deſerves; but amongſt many whom juſtice may ſtrike, ſovereignty picks out ſome, and cauſes them to ſmart. And who may ſay, What doſt thou?

2. Becauſe we are now under the mixed diſpenſation of providence; not the unmixed, reſerved to another world, when all men ſhall be put into their unalterable ſtate. Now, hereunto this is very agreeable, that God ſignally puniſh ſome of a ſociety, while others as guilty do eſcape, that the whole may, with David, Pſal. ci. 1. 'ſing of mercy, and judgment,' too. And thus the diſpenſation of divers colours is held up in the world, as a diſplay of the manifold wiſdom of God.

3. Becauſe the mercy of God to ſome is magnified by his ſeverity on others. As black ſet by white makes the white appear the better; ſo God's ſeverity againſt ſome, may be a looking glaſs to others, wherein they may ſee how much they ſtand obliged to free grace and mercy, Rom. xi. 22. Men are never fairer to prize health in themſelves, than when they ſee others toſſed on ſick-beds; nor to prize the exerciſe of ſenſe and reaſon, and other mercies, than when they ſee what miſerable and pitiful ſights they are that are deprived of theſe. And this ſhould make folk patient and thankful under the ſtrokes of the Lord's hand, becauſe if he take away a mercy, health for inſtance, or perhaps a member or limb of their body, being taken away, it may be more ſerviceable for him than when they had it, in ſo far as it ſhall ſerve to magnify the mercy of God to others, that ſee and notice the hand of the Lord. See Matth. xxi. 3.

4. Becauſe in very ſignal ſtrokes very ſignal mercies may be wrapped up. So it was in Joſeph's caſe; there was a very ſingular bleſſing on the head of him that was ſeparated from his brethren. Job's troubles were but a dark hour before a very glorious day. The halt Jacob got in his thigh, was more excellent, as a badge of his wreſtling with the angel, than Eſau's retinue of four hundred men.

5. laſtly, Becauſe this diſpenſation is in ſome ſort neceſſary to confirm us in the belief of the judgment of the great day. God puniſhes ſome remarkably, that the world may ſee that there is a God that judgeth on the earth; he does not ſo puniſh all, that man may be aſſured that there is a judgment to come. If none were puniſhed here, the world would improve that for Atheiſm; if all were puniſhed it would be improved to Sadduciſm.

Uſe 1. Then learn that unordinary ſtrokes may befal thoſe that are not unordinary ſinners; and therefore be not raſh in your judgment concerning the ſtrokes that others meet with. It is true, whatever we or others meet with, it is deſerved at the Lord's hand; and when God follows an unordinary ſeen ſin with an unordinary judgment, as in the caſe of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, it is no breach of charity to judge, that that ſtroke comes for that ſin. But when people, in whoſe converſation ye ſee no ſignal ſin, meet with ſignal ſtrokes, beware of harſh judging. For in the way of the Lord's diſpenſation, ſome will meet with a ſignal ſtroke for ſome ſin, ſuch as the world would think little or nothing of, if they knew it.

2. Then adore the mercy of God to you, and wonder at his ſparing of you, when ye ſee others ſmart under the hand of God, which ye do not feel. Acknowledge, that whatever others meet with, the ſame might have been your lot, if the Lord had dealt with you as ye deſerve; as the church did, Lam. iii. 22. 'It is of the 'Lord's mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe his 'compaſſions fail not.'

Obſ. 2. That the ſtrokes which any meet with, are pledges of ruin to impenitent ſinners. But except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

Reaſons of this are,

1. Becauſe they ſhew how hateful to God ſin is, in whomſoever it is, Iſa. xliii. 24. 'Who gave Jacob for a 'ſpoil, and Iſrael to the robbers? did not the Lord, he 'againſt whom we have ſinned? for they would not 'walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his 'law.' God has no delight in the miſery of his own creatures, Ezek. xviii. 23. He muſt therefore have a mighty hatred againſt ſin, in that he is ſo heavy oftentimes on the work of his own hands for it. Not only his enemies ſmart for ſin, but his dear friends; yea, his dear Son ſmarted for it, when it lay on him but by imputation. And therefore how can impenitent ſinners think to eſcape? Luke xxiii. 31. 'For if they do theſe things 'in a green tree, what ſhall be done in the dry?'

2. Becauſe they ſhew how juſt God is. He is the Judge of all the earth, and cannot but do right, Gen. xviii. 25. Now, though juſtice may delay the puniſhment of one longer than another, yet it will not allow to puniſh ſome, and for ever to ſpare others, in the ſame ſtate. For that would be manifeſt partiality, which God hateth, Ezek. xviii. 20. And therefore the apoſtle tells us, 2 Theſſ. i. 6. that 'it is a righteous thing with God 'to recompence tribulation to them that trouble' the ſaints.

3. Becauſe whatever any meet with in the way of ſin, is really deſigned for warning to others, as is clear from the text. See 1 Cor. x. 11, 12. And they that will not be taught by the example of others, may expect to be made examples to teach others, as Lot's wife was. But the wiſe will have their eyes in their head, while impenitent ſinners paſs on and periſh, as thoſe that will not take warning. Hence it comes to paſs, that the ſtroke afar off not prevailing, is oftentimes brought nearer home.

4. laſtly, Becauſe all thoſe ſtrokes which ſinners meet with in this life, are the ſpittings of the ſhower of wrath that abides the impenitent world, after which the full ſhower may certainly be looked for. As the joys in believing are the pledges of eternal joy, flowing from one fountain with it; the firſt fruits of Canaan's land, which will be followed with the full harveſt: ſo all the outlettings of God's wrath on ſinners here, are the pledges of eternal wrath, and firſt fruits of hell, which will be followed with the harveſt of miſery, being the ſame in kind, Rev. xx. 14.

Uſe 1. Be not unconcerned ſpectators of all the effects of God's anger for ſin going abroad in the world; for your part and mine is deep in them. There is none of them but ſays to us, as in the ſame condemnation, Except you repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. O how unconcernedly do many look on the miſeries of others, how far are they from taking a leſſon to themſelves therefrom! But a hard heart and ſeared conſcience, which cannot be awakened by the diſpenſations of providence far off from them, do but invite the heavy ſtroke to fall on themſelves.

2. Conſider, O impenitent ſinners, how can ye eſcape, when your ruin is inſured by ſo many pledges thereof from the Lord's hand, while ye go on in ſin? When a ſinner goes out of God's way, he leaves his ſoul in pawn for his return by repentance; but the impenitent ſinner never returns to looſe his pawn, and ſo loſes it. When God lets out any of his wrath in any meaſure on the children of men, that is God's pawn for his bringing eternal wrath on the impenitent; and we may be ſure, that however careleſs we be of our pawns, God will not loſe his. Therefore conſider your ways, and repent.

Obſ. 3. The ſtrokes that others meet with are loud calls to us to repent. That is the language of all the afflicting providences which we ſee going in the world. To confirm this, conſider,

1. God does not ſtrike one for ſin with a viſible ſtroke, but with an eye to all. The reaſon which God gives in his law for puniſhing of ſome tranſgreſſors ſeverely, is, that all Iſrael might hear, and fear, and do no ſuch thing. In the infancy of the Jewiſh church, he conſumed Nadab and Abihu with fire, Lev. x. 2. compared with verſ. 9. In the infancy of the Chriſtian church, Ananias and Sapphira were ſtruck dead for a lye. Why all this, but to be a warning to all that ſhould come after?

2. Thereby we may ſee how dangerous a thing ſin is to be harboured; and if we will look inward, we may ever ſee, that there is ſin in us alſo againſt the God of Iſrael. If we ſaw one ſtung by a ſerpent which he had taken up, would not we quickly throw away one which we had taken up too, leſt we ſhould fare no better? How can we think to proſper in that way, where we ſee it goes ſo very ill with others?

Uſe. 1. We may ſee that none go on impenitently in a ſinful courſe, but over the belly of thouſands of calls from providence to repent, beſides all thoſe they have from the word. Look abroad into the world, O ſinner, and conſider how many have fallen into ruin, and are ſtill falling by their iniquity. As many as there are of theſe, ſo many mouths are there calling thee to repent, and turn from thy ſin. 'Who did ever harden 'himſelf againſt God, and proſper?' And doſt thou think, that thy caſe will ever be an exception to the general rule? No; ſo many witneſſes give their teſtimony to thee, That except thou repent, thou ſhalt likewiſe periſh.

2. Impenitency under the goſpel cannot have the leaſt ſhadow of excuſe. The calls of providence common to the whole world, are ſufficient to leave the very Heathens without excuſe, Rom. i. 20.; how much more ſhall the calls of the word and providence too make us inexcuſable, if we do not repent? Sinners make many ſhifts for themſelves, to preſerve the life of their luſts, and to keep themſelves from this unpleaſant exerciſe: but they will be but fig-leaf covers before the Lord.

3. How much more do ſtrokes from the hand of the Lord on ourſelves call us to repent? Hoſ. ii. 6, 7. 'Therefore behold, I will hedge up her way with thorns, 'and make a wall, that ſhe ſhall not find her paths. 'And ſhe ſhall follow after her lovers, but ſhe ſhall not 'overtake them; and ſhe ſhall ſeek them, but ſhall not 'find them: then ſhall ſhe ſay, I will go and return to 'my firſt huſband, for then was it better with me than 'now.' What Abſalom's deſign was in burning Joab's corn-field, is the deſign of afflicting providences. And therefore impenitency and hardneſs of heart under the ſtrokes of the Lord's hand, is highly aggravated, Jer. v. 3. Every croſs that we meet with, is a charge from Heaven to turn from our ſinful courſe, and from the particular ills of our way.

I come now to the principal doctrine of the text.

Doct. Sinners except they repent ſhall periſh. This is an except without any exception. Be who they will, if they be ſinners, they muſt repent or periſh. All are ſinners, and by ſin depart from God; and they muſt come back again to him by repentance, elſe they are for ever ruined. Be they ſinners of a greater or leſſer ſize, they muſt be penitent ſinners, or it had been better for them they had never been born.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Explain the nature of repentance.

II. Apply.

I. I ſhall explain the nature of repentance. And here we may conſider,

1. What it is in its general nature.
2. How it is wrought in the ſoul.
3. The ſubject of true repentance.
4. The parts of repentance.

Firſt, We may conſider what repentance is in its general nature. It is a ſaving grace: 2 Tim. ii. 25. 'In 'meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves: if 'God peradventure will give them repentance to the 'acknowledging of the truth.' It is a grace given us of God freely, enabling and diſpoſing a ſoul to all the acts of turning from ſin unto God; and it is ſaving, as in its own nature diſtinguiſhing a man from a hypocrite, and having a ſure connection with eternal ſalvation. To unfold this more particularly, conſider,

1. It is not a tranſient action, as Papiſts and ſome ignorant creatures imagine, as if a ſigh for ſin, an act of ſorrow for it, a confeſſion of it with a God be merciful to me a ſinner, were repentance. No, no; theſe may be acts of repentance while they proceed from a truly penitent heart. But repentance itſelf is not a paſſing act, but an abiding grace, Zech. xii. 10.; a continuing frame and diſpoſition of the ſoul; a principle lying deep in the heart, diſpoſing a man to mourn for and turn from ſin on all occaſions.

2. It is not a paſſing work of the firſt days of one's religion, as ſome profeſſors take it to be: but a grace in the heart, ſetting one to an anſwerable working all the days of their life. It is a ſpring of waters of ſorrow in the heart for ſin, which will ſpring up there while ſin is there, though ſometimes through hardneſs of heart it may be ſtopped for a while. They that look on repentance as the firſt ſtage in the way to heaven, and looking back to the ſorrowful hours which they had when the Lord firſt began to deal with them, reckon that they have paſſed the firſt ſtage, and are in a dangerous condition. And whoſo endeavour not to carry on their repentance, I doubt if they ever at all repented yet. As when Moſes had ſmote the rock in the wilderneſs, and the waters began to guſh out, thoſe waters ran (it is thought, 1 Cor. x. 4.) and followed them while in the wilderneſs: ſo the heart firſt ſmitten with repentance for ſin at the ſoul's firſt converſion to God, the wound ſtill bleeds, and is never bound up to bleed no more, till the band of glory be put about it in heaven, Rev. xxi. 4.

Hence initial and progreſſive repentance, though the former be the repentance of a ſinner, the latter of a ſaint, are no more different kinds of repentance, than the ſoul's virgin-love to Chriſt, and their love to him through the courſe of their ſpiritual marriage with him; or than faith in its firſt and after actings. But as the mid-day and evening ſun are the ſame with the morning-ſun, ſo are theſe; though the morning-ſun may be moſt noticed by the traveller, who having travelled in the night, was thereby brought from darkneſs to light.

3. It is not a common grace, but a ſpecial ſaving one. Men may have a repentance for their ſin, gnawing their conſciences, and tormenting their hearts, which they will carry on in hell through eternity; being only the firſt movings of the worm in the ſoul that never dieth: as Judas's repentance ſeems to have been, Simon Magus's, and Pharaoh's. They may bitterly rue their ſin, as Eſau, Gen. xxvii. 34. who never truly repent of it, Heb. xii. 17.; and the ſtony heart may be broken in a thouſand pieces, while yet every piece remains a ſtone. They may have a ſuperficial ſorrow for ſin, and a light joy ſucceeding it, whoſe hearts were never pierced to the quick; and therefore the joy goes, as the effects of a ſcud of rain on the parched ground, Matth. xiii. 20, 21. But true repentance is a repentance never repented of, kindly working in the ſoul.

Secondly, We may conſider how repentance is wrought in the ſoul. And here two queſtions muſt be anſwered, and two points cleared, namely.

1. Who works repentance, or is the author of it? And that is the ſanctifying Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt: Zech. xii. 10. 'And I will pour upon the houſe of 'David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the 'ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications, and they ſhall look 'upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall 'mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only ſon, and 'ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born.' Sometimes notorious prodigals become true penitents; as a perſecuting Saul turned to be a preaching Paul: ſo that the world is amazed with the change, and are ready to ſay as in Saul's caſe, 1 Sam. x. 11. 'What is this that is come unto 'the ſon of Kiſh? Is Saul alſo among the prophets?' But that query, ver. 12. 'But who is their father?' gives a rational account of the matter. All ſort of timber to divine grace is alike eaſy to hew. And foraſmuch as the houſe of God is ordinarily built of the knottieſt wood, publicans and harlots entering into the kingdom of God before Scribes and Phariſees, it may plainly appear, that repentance is not the work of nature, but of grace; not of mens own ſpirit, but the Spirit of Chriſt.

This is evident from the word, Jer. xiii. 23. 'Can 'the Ethiopian change his ſkin, or the leopard his 'ſpots? then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed 'to do evil.' It is the Lord's own work to 'take away 'the ſtony heart, and give an heart of fleſh,' Ezek. xxxvi. 26. It is the office of the exalted Mediator to give repentance, in whoſe hand it is to ſend the Spirit. Acts v. 31. Miniſters may preach repentance, but cannot work it in themſelves, and far leſs in others. They may ſow the ſeed, but cannot make it grow, 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7. It is but a peradventure if God give repentance, when they have done their utmoſt, 2 Tim. ii. 25. But if at all their weapons be mighty, it is through God, 2 Cor. x. 4.

2. By what means does the Spirit work repentance? That is by the word, whether read or preached. The word is the channel wherein the influences of the Spirit flow; and from theſe it has its piercing, melting, and heart ſoftening virtue, as the pool of Betheſda had its healing virtue from the angel's troubling of the water; Acts xi. 20, 21. ‘ And ſome of them were men ‘ of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come ‘ to Antioch, ſpake unto the Grecians, preaching the ‘ Lord Jeſus. And the hand of the Lord was with ‘ them: and a great number believed, and turned to ‘ the Lord.’ Junius, who was deeply plunged in atheiſm, was brought to repentance, by reading John i. in a New Teſtament which his father had purpoſely laid down in his chamber, if perhaps he might take it up and read it. Auguſtine was converted by reading, Rom. xiii. 13, 14. ‘ Let us walk honeſtly as in the ‘ day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in cham‘ bering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying. ‘ But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no ‘ proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.’ Three thouſand we find were wrought on by one ſermon, Acts ii.

Many and various are the occaſions of repentance, which the Lord bleſſeth for bringing home the word to the ſoul, and the ſoul by it unto God. Perſonal afflictions have been ſo in the caſe of many, Hoſ. ii. 7. The ſight of ſtrokes on others has been bleſſed to ſome. The firſt occaſion of Luther's turning ſerious, was a fright by the violent death of a dear companion of his. Nay, God has made falls into groſs ſins occaſions of repentance unto many, whereof there are ſeveral inſtances, as Achan, the thief on the croſs, &c. Flavel gives an account of one in the caſe of an attempt of ſelf murder. Auguſtine heard a voice, ſaying, ‘ Take up and read.’ Nay, God can make a dream in the night ſuch an occaſion, Job xxxiii. 15, 16. But theſe are not properly the means, but the occaſions which bring men to conſider of the word, which is the true and proper means. And here the Spirit of the Lord makes uſe of both parts of the word.

1*ſt*, The law to break the hard heart; Jer. xxiii. 29. ‘ Is not my word like a hammer that breaketh the rock ‘ in pieces? ſaith the Lord.’ It goes before like John Baptiſt to prepare the way of the Lord into the heart. And the Spirit of the Lord making uſe of it in a ſoul, is called the Spirit of bondage, Rom. viii. 15. And here each part of the law has its proper uſe.

(1.) The commands of it to convince the ſoul of ſin: Rom. vii. 7. ‘ I had not known ſin, (ſays the apoſtle) ‘ but by the law: for I had not known luſt, except the ‘ law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.’ The commands of the law, held forth to the ſoul in their ſpirituality and vaſt extent, are the looking glaſs wherein the ſinner is made to ſee his black face, the ſins and ſinfulneſs of his nature, heart and life, which he muſt repent of.

(2.) The threatnings of it, to convince the ſoul of judgment: Gal. iii. 10. ‘ As many as are of the ‘ works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is writ‘ ten, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all ‘ things which are written in the book of the law to do ‘ them.’ Theſe carried home on the ſoul, diſturb its reſt in ſin, and let the man ſee that he has been ſleeping within the ſea mark of divine vengeance, and ſo give him a frightful wakening. Theſe diſcover the danger of ſin for time and eternity, and tell him that he muſt turn over a new leaf, elſe he is ruined.

2*dly*, The goſpel, to melt the hard heart, like a fire, Jer. xxiii. 29. ‘ Is not my word like as a fire? ſaith the ‘ Lord:’ and ſo to bow and bend it from ſin towards God, Zech. xii. 10. ‘ And I will pour upon the houſe ‘ of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ‘ ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications, and they ſhall look ‘ upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall ‘ mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only ſon, and ‘ ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitter‘ neſs for his firſt-born.’ Thus the ſoul that was driven by the law, is kindly led and drawn by the goſpel to repentance. The law ſerves to make a terrible reel in the conſcience and affections; but the goſpel is Chriſt's key to open the heart, and to turn about the will, that he may come in, Gal. iii. 2. The ſtormy wind, and earthquake, may go before in the law; but the ſtill ſmall voice of the goſpel is that which the Lord is in. This is evident if ye conſider,

(1.) That repentance is the doctrine of the goſpel. I do indeed think, that it cannot be denied but that the law requires repentance as a duty, in ſo far as it binds the apoſtate ſinner to return to God: but in the mean time it gives no hope of mercy to the penitent, ſeeing its conſtant voice is, “ Curſed is every one that continueth “ not in all things which are written in the book of the “ law to do them.” But the goſpel brings the glad tidings of place for repentance, and ſhews how the apoſtate creature returning will be accepted. And there can be no true returning to God, where there is no hope of acceptance.

(2.) Repentance is a promiſe of the covenant of grace: Ezek. xxxvi. 31. Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall lothe yourſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations. It is not only the duty of God's elect, but their privilege, made over to them in Jeſus Chriſt, purchaſed by his death, and beſtowed on them by virtue of his exaltation, Acts v. 31. And hence, as one of the benefits of that covenant, it is ſealed in baptiſm, Mark i. 4.

The ſum of what is ſaid on this ſecond head, is, That repentance is an evangelical ſoftneſs of heart, and bent of ſpirit to turn away from ſin, and to turn to God, wrought in a ſoul by the Spirit of Chriſt. The Spirit of holineſs being given to Chriſt without meaſure, he puts the ſame Spirit in his elect in the day of his power; who by his grace melts the heart for ſin, and bends it away from ſin to holineſs.

Uſe. 1. Repentance is not a man's taking up himſelf, in the point of his outward converſation. It is one thing to reform the life, another to reform the heart by changing the will. The former is within the reach of mere nature, the other is not to be effected but by a ſupernatural hand, Jer. xxxi. 18. The former may make one a painted ſepulchre, the latter makes him a new creature.

2. Legal repentance is no true repentance: and therefore though one have it, he may periſh; as Pharaoh, Judas, &c. It makes a fretful reſtleſs conſcience under the terror of God's wrath, but mean while it leaves a hard heart, glewed to ſin. The law and its terrors coming into a ſinful ſoul, may raiſe the duſt ready to choke the ſinner, as in a houſe when a ſweeping; but will never be made clean, unleſs the goſpel have its efficacy on the heart, as the water which lays that duſt. Hence it comes to paſs, that ſinners ſometimes have ſharp convictions, but mean while their luſts grow as rampant as ever after.

3. See the folly of delaying repentance, and not ſtriking in with the motions of the Spirit, when one has them. How do people put off repentance from time to time, as if it were wholly in their power to do it at any time; But they that cannot command wind and tide, have need to fall in with them, while they ſerve, leſt if they go, they be left hopeleſs. O delay not, leſt the Spirit of the Lord be provoked to depart.

4. laſtly, Learn whom ye are to look to for repentance. It is the work of the Lord's Spirit; and unto him ye are to look for his grace to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, to ſoften the hard heart, and to turn you to himſelf, Jer. xxxi. 18.

Thirdly, We may conſider the ſubject of true repentance, what it is. It is a convinced believing ſoul. An unconvinced ſinner cannot be a true penitent! for what the eye ſees not, the heart rues not. Neither can an unbelieving ſinner be ſo; for without faith the heart may be rent for ſin, but not from it.

Firſt, The ſoul wherein true repentance is wrought is a convinced ſoul: Job xxxvi. 9, 10. ‘ He ſheweth ‘ them their work, and their tranſgreſſions that they ‘ have exceeded. He openeth alſo their ear to diſci‘ pline; and commandeth that they return from iniquity.' Acts ii. 37, 38. 'Now, when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do? Then Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.' The firſt particular work in the creation was making light; and the letting in a new light by conviction, is the firſt work in the new creation. God begins his work, where Satan ends his; who having got the ſoul aſleep in the arms of its luſts, ſhuts the windows, and draws the curtains, that it may ſleep ſound, till it awaken in hell. But the Spirit of the Lord by conviction opens them, and awakens the ſinner ordinarily, if not always, in a fright. Here conſider,

1. How this conviction is wrought. It is done by the erecting of a criminal court within the ſinner's own breaſt, which the man cannot abſent himſelf from, more than he can go out of himſelf. He muſt ſtay and anſwer, unleſs he prevail with the judge to let fall the proceſs; as, alas! many do by ſilencing their conſciences one way or other to their own ruin. And in this court,

1ſt, The Spirit of the Lord, awakening the ſleepy conſcience, ſets it upon the bench, ſo that the man becomes his own judge: John xvi. 8. 'And when he [the Comforter] is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment.' The man ſearches and tries his heart and life, which was before neglected as the ſluggard's garden. But now every corner thereof is ranſacked, and ſecret things ſet in the light.

2dly, The man is convicted as a ſinner by the law. His nature, heart, and life brought to the holy law and compared with it, he is found evidently to be guilty and a tranſgreſſor. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 9. 'I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died.' The law as a looking glaſs is held before his eyes, and he ſees his ſpots. His own conſcience is as a thouſand witneſſes againſt him, and he cannot deny the charge. So his mouth is ſtopped, and his ſin at length has found him out, Rom. iii. 19.

3dly, The man is ſentenced and condemned by his own conſcience according to the law, adjudging him liable to death, eternal death, for his ſins: Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.' He is therefore a condemned malefactor in his own eyes, by the ſentence of the law pronounced againſt him. Conſider,

2. The effects of this conviction which are theſe.

1ſt, A painful ſenſe of ſin, an affecting ſight of it, Rom. vii. 9. forecited. For now the ſore is lanced; and they ſee thoſe ſins, and that in ſin, which they ſaw not before; and their eyes affect their hearts. As when the ſun ſhines into a houſe, the motes are diſcovered which did not appear before; ſo is it here. And the ſin which ſat light on them before, becomes a burden too heavy to them to bear; for now they are rouſed out of their lethargy, and feel their ſores. It is a burden on their ſpirits which ſinks them; on their backs that bows them down; on their heads, which they are not able to diſcharge themſelves of. Therefore the ſoul coming to Chriſt, is repreſented as a man with a burden on him, Pſal. lv. 22. 'Caſt thy burden upon the Lord, and he ſhall ſuſtain thee.' Hoſ. xiv. 2. 'Take with you words, and turn to the Lord, ſay unto him, Take away all iniquity;' Heb. Lift off iniquity as a burden.

2dly, Terror on their hearts, Pſal. ix. 20. 'Put them in fear, O Lord; that the nations may know themſelves to be but men.' The convinced jailor, a man who wore a ſword, falls a-trembling, Acts xvi. 29. for the terror of God is too high for the ſtouteſt heart, that know not what it is to fear the face of man. The ſoul that was fearleſs before, becauſe blind to its own hazard, now that his eyes are opened, is magor miſſabib. For, what heart can be ſtrong before an angry God, brandiſhing the ſword of a fiery law over the conſcience, which, awakened, is the tendereſt part of the man?

3dly, Legal ſorrow for ſin, Acts ii. 37. 'Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart.' There are ſtounds of grief that go through their hearts like arrows, Pſal. xlv. 5. and theſe are very piercing, Prov. xviii. 14. 'The ſpirit of a man will ſuſtain his infirmity; but a wounded ſpirit who can bear?' The man ſees now that he has been murdering his own ſoul, and he grones out an elegy over his dead ſelf; which is raiſed the higher, that he thought his ſoul was alive, when really it was dead. He calls himſelf fool and beaſt for doing as he did. But what is very ſad, though his heart be rent in pieces for his ſin, yet it is not rent from it. What grieves him thus, is purely ſelfiſh; his ſeparation from God, without whom he ſees he cannot be happy; and his liableneſs to his wrath and curſe, which he ſees will ruin him for ever to lie under.

4thly, A racking anxiety how to be delivered out of this ſtate, Acts ii. 37. 'Now when they heard this, they——ſaid,——What ſhall we do?' And here many times fear and hope take their ſeveral turns in his anxious ſoul; ſometimes hoping, ſometimes deſponding, like Jonah in the whale's belly, Jon. ii. 4. 'Then I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple.' Conviction of ſin will make way for care into the moſt careleſs head, and will make folk beſtow many thoughts on the neglected ſalvation, that uſed not to beſtow one ſerious thought upon the buſineſs. And this care will ſwallow up all others, as that of a drowning man to ſave his life.

Uſe 1. The unconvinced ſinner is an impenitent ſinner. Hearken ye young ones, and old, that have lived at eaſe, and with a hale heart, in reſpect of your ſouls ſtate, all your days. They may ſleep ſound indeed, whom the devil is rocking in the cradle of a natural impenitent ſtate. But ye will get awakening yet, either in time to bring you to repentance, or when time is gone, and there is no place for repentance, Jer. xlviii. 11, 12. For except ye repent, ye ſhall——periſh. Ah poor ſinner, thou waſt never yet in the next ſtep to repentance. Thy ſore has not been lanced yet, therefore ſurely the filthy matter is never yet caſt out by repentance.

2. Convictions and legal qualms of conſcience are not repentance; for they do but qualify the ſubject for it, and that in part only. Theſe are very neceſſary things I have ſpoke of under this head; but they are but like the unripe fruit, which muſt be ripened by the work of the goſpel on the heart, and brought to a perfection by the warm ſun of goſpel-influences, ere he that has them can be accounted a penitent indeed. Or rather, they are like the bloſſoms which go before, and differ in kind from the fruit, which often fall off, and no fruit follows at all. Folk may have had theſe many days and years ſince, that never repented to this day, Hoſ. vi. 4. The firſt-fruits of the ſecond death may be miſtaken by many for the pangs of the new birth. And therefore ye that have had them, conſider well what iſſue they have had; for it is not enough to have been in them, but to have got right out of them. Wrong curing of ſome diſeaſes, breeds others, that prove mortal to many.

The right iſſue out of them lies in three things.

1. It lies in ſelf denial, or unſelfing of the ſoul, when the ſoul is ſhaken out of itſelf for juſtification and ſanctification too, Jer. xxxi. 18. 'I have ſurely heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf thus, Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed, as a bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke; turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God.' Compared with verſe 19. 'Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote upon my thigh; I was aſhamed, yea, even confounded, becauſe I did bear the reproach of my youth.' They ſee the heinouſneſs of ſin, and the corruption of their nature too, ſo as they conclude themſelves utterly unable to help themſelves in either of theſe points, and ſo come off from themſelves.

2. It lies in faith, or believing; in coming to Jeſus Chriſt for all, in point of juſtification and ſanctification too: Iſa. xlv. 24. ‘ Surely, ſhall one ſay, in the Lord ‘ have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.’ The ſoul being turned off its own bottom, comes and builds on him for what it wants, and looks to him for his blood and Spirit. Thus ‘ the law is a ſchool-maſter to bring us unto Chriſt, ‘ that we might be juſtified by faith,’ Gal. iii. 24. See Jer. iii. 22, 23.

3. It lies in repentance, or a kindly melting of the heart for ſin, Jer. xxxi. 18. Zech. xii. 10. as done againſt a gracious God, whom the heart is knit to in love. The ſoul comes from before the throne of juſtice, where it ſtood weeping for itſelf and its own miſery, before the throne of grace, where it ſtands weeping for having offended ſuch a gracious Father.

They land at this threefold ſhore, who come rightly out of theſe depths. But many plunge up and down in them a while, and land again juſt in the ſame ſide they went in at. Some land at the ſhore,

1. Of formality, or a legal walk, 2 Tim. iii. 5. ‘ having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power there‘ of.’ They change their former way, but retain their old heart. They go indeed to religious duties, but they never go out of them to Chriſt. They act not as they did; but ſtill they have the old principle of action, acting from ſelf, and to ſelf; ſo that though they change their work, they ſtill work to the old maſter. And thus many continue in a profeſſion of religion, living on their duties, never coming to Chriſt. Others land at the ſhore,

2. Of their former ſecurity. They are neither better inwardly nor outwardly; but they come from out of their qualms of conſcience, as one out of a fever, returning juſt to their old way of living; as was the caſe with Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. who ſaid to Paul, ‘ Go thy way ‘ for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will ‘ call for thee.’ Others land at the ſhore,

3. Of profanity; turning worſe than before: Matth. xii. 43, 44, 45. ‘ When the unclean ſpirit is gone out ‘ of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt, ‘ and findeth none. Then he ſaith, I will return into ‘ my houſe from whence I came out; and when he is ‘ come, he findeth it empty, ſwept, and garniſhed. Then ‘ goeth he, and taketh with himſelf ſeven other ſpirits ‘ more wicked than himſelf, and they enter in and dwell ‘ there: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the ‘ the firſt.’ Their luſts dammed up for a while, run with more vigour than ever thereafter.

Secondly, The ſoul wherein repentance is wrought, is a believing ſoul. Faith is the ſpring and ſource of repentance; ſo that though the grace of faith and repentance are given together and at once in reſpect of time, yet, in the order of nature, faith goes before repentance, and the acting of faith goes before the exerciſe of repentance. And he that would repent, muſt firſt believe in Chriſt that he may repent. I know that ſome teach otherwiſe. But this is the doctrine of the ſcriptures and our catechiſm. To confirm it, conſider,

1. That faith is abſolutely the leading grace, and the firſt breathing of a quickened ſoul: Heb. xi. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; therefore it is impoſſible to repent, for that is very pleaſing to him, Jer. xxxi. 20. So John xv. 5. Without me, i. e. ſeparate from me, and there is no union with him but by the Spirit of faith, ye can do nothing acceptable to God, therefore ye cannot repent.

2. It is particularly the leading grace to repentance; Zech. xii. 10.——‘ They ſhall look upon me whom ‘ they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him, as ‘ one that mourneth for his only ſon.’ Thus it is repreſented in fact, Acts xi. 21.——‘ And a great num‘ ber believed, and turned unto the Lord.’ If repentance be the emptying of the ſoul by the dropping of the tears of godly ſorrow, it is faith that generates them in the heart. It is faith that melts the heart, which droppeth in repentance. The eye of faith fixes on God in Chriſt, and then the ſoul turns to him by repentance, Jer. iii. 22.

3. The ſcripture uſually propoſeth the objects of faith, and promiſes of grace, for motives to repentance; thereby diſcovering, that it muſt be by a believing application of theſe, that a ſoul is brought to repentance: Jer. iii. 14. ‘ Turn, O backſliding children, ‘ ſaith the Lord, for I am married unto you.’ ver. 22. ‘ Return, ye backſliding children, and I will heal your ‘ backſlidings: behold, we come unto thee, for thou art ‘ the Lord our God.’ Joel ii. 12, 13. ‘ Therefore alſo ‘ now, ſaith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all ‘ your heart, and with faſting, and with weeping, and ‘ with mourning. And rent your heart and not your ‘ garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he ‘ is gracious and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great ‘ kindneſs, and repenteth him of the evil.’ Hoſ. vi. 1. ‘ Come and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath ‘ torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will ‘ bind us up.’ chap. xiv. 1. ‘ O Iſrael, return unto the ‘ Lord thy God, for thou haſt fallen by thine iniquity.’ Nay the very law proclaimed on mount Sinai with ſo much terror, is graciouſly prefaced with goſpel grace for faith to work on in the firſt place; ‘ I am the Lord thy ‘ God,’ &c. And thus the doctrine of the New Teſtament concerning repentance is propoſed to ſinners, Mat. iii. 2. and iv. 17. ‘ Repent ye: for the kingdom of hea‘ ven is at hand.’

4. laſtly, The nature of repentance plainly teacheth this. It is a cordial turning from ſin unto God: but is it poſſible to turn to God, but through Chriſt? John xiv. 6. ‘ I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no ‘ man cometh unto the Father, but by me.’ And is there any way of coming to Chriſt, but by faith? The ſoul then that would turn and go to God again by repentance, muſt needs take Chriſt (by faith) by the way. The people indeed wept; but did they put away the ſtrange wives, or ſet to it, till Shechaniah cried, Ezra x. 2. ‘ We have treſpaſſed againſt our God, and have ta‘ ken ſtrange wives, of the people of the land: yet now ‘ there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing?’ They muſt not only be priſoners of fear, but of hope, that will turn, Zech. ix. 12. ‘ Turn ye to the ſtrong hold, ye priſo‘ ners of hope.’ Repentance is a kindly humiliation and mourning for ſin; but the faithleſs heart may roar under law horror, will never kindly mourn but under goſpel-influences.

Object. Repentance is placed before faith, Mark i. 15.; and ſometimes repentance only is mentioned to natural men as the way to ſalvation, as in our text, and Acts ii. 38. and iii. 19. Anſw. (1.) Repentance no doubt is abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation; and no man needs pretend to faith, that does not repent, for they are inſeparable. But that will no more infer the precedency of repentance to faith, than that Heb. xii. 14. will infer the precedency of holineſs to it. Now, this is all our text aims at. (3.) Repentance being the end, and faith the means to that end, no wonder they be ſo placed; for the end is firſt in one's intention, yet the means are firſt in practice. So Mark i. 15. Chriſt commands ſinners to repent; but then in order to repenting, he commands them to believe. So Acts ii. 38. believing is implied in the command to be baptized. And therefore, ſpeaking of the reſult of this work, ver. 44. it is ſaid, ‘ And ‘ all that believed,’ &c. So Acts iii. 19. it is implied in being converted; compared with Heb. iii. 12. ‘ Take ‘ heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil ‘ heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.’ And that this is the true reaſon of this way of ſpeaking, namely, that repentance is the end, and faith the means, is clear from Acts xx. 21. ‘ Teſtifying——repen‘ tance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus ‘ Chriſt:’ for that ſcripture can bear no other meaning, without deſtroying that fundamental truth, That Chriſt is the way to the Father. John preached repentance, Mark i. 4.; but how did he direct to it? Acts xix. 4. 'John verily baptized with the baptiſm of repentance, ſaying unto the people, That they ſhould believe on him which ſhould come after him, that is, on Chriſt Jeſus.'

Uſe 1. Then it is not goſpel-doctrine, That Chriſt will receive none but true penitents, or that none but ſuch have a warrant to embrace Chriſt by faith; Rev. xxii. 17. 'And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, come; And whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.' The evil of this doctrine is, that it ſets ſinners to ſpin repentance out of their own bowels, and to fetch it with them to Chriſt, inſtead of coming to him by faith to get it. And it hinders ſenſible ſinners from coming to Chriſt, as keeping them back till they be perſuaded that they have true repentance. I ſay, perſuaded; for how can a ſinner come to Chriſt till he be perſuaded he has a warrant ſo to do? If Chriſt will receive none but ſuch as have true repentance, then none other are invited to come; for ſurely thoſe that are invited, will be welcome upon their coming: if none other be invited, then impenitent ſinners are not bound to come to Chriſt; for none are bound to come, but thoſe that are invited; 'for where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion.' However, none are have in Chriſt by faith, but thereupon they become true penitents; and none but true penitents will ſee heaven.

2. Then for ſenſible ſinners to think that they dare not and ought not to believe, and embrace Chriſt, till they be more deeply humbled, and do more thoroughly repent of their ſins, and, in a word, be more fit to receive him, is but a gilded deceit, and a trick of the falſe heart, to make the ſoul ſtay long in the place of the breaking forth of children, and die there at length. The ſcripture holdeth forth quite other doctrine, Rev. iii. 20. 'Behold, I ſtand at the door, and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me.' Iſa. lv. 1. 'Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price.' It is one thing what a ſinner will do; another, what he may and ought to do. It is very true, there are many who will never come to Chriſt, if they be not made more ſenſible of their need of him than they are. But all that hear the goſpel may and ought to come, be their caſe what it will; and thoſe that come not, will be condemned for their not coming, John iii. 19. Therefore let every ſenſible ſinner under that temptation think, that he is in the caſe of a drowning man, who if he ſtand diſputing whether he may catch hold of the rope reached to him to hale him to land, a wave may come and ſweep him away: and therefore without diſputing he muſt take hold of it.

3. This ſhews the true way to deal with a hard heart, to ſoften it, and bring it to hearty repentance. It is to believe. Ye muſt do like thoſe fowls, that firſt fly up, and then come down on their prey; firſt ſoar aloft in the way of believing, and then come down in true humiliation: Zech. xii. 10.——'They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him.' One may otherwiſe toil long in vain, with a hard heart. Unbelief will lock up the heart, as the waters are with a hard froſt; for hard thoughts of God ſet the ſoul at a diſtance more and more from him, when the believing of the proclaimed pardon touches the rebels hearts, and makes them come in.

4. laſtly. The more faith the more repentance; as the fuller the ſpring is, the ſtreams run with the more vigorous current. 'According to your faith be it unto you,' is the rule of the diſpenſation of grace. For faith is the proviſor for all other graces, as being the conduit pipe by which grace comes from the fountain of grace to the ſoul; ſo that it failing, all fails; and it moving vigorouſly, the reſt do ſo too.

Queſt. How are we to act faith in order to repentance?

Anſw. 1. Firmly believe that whatever your guilt be, God is reconcileable to you in Chriſt Jeſus; that there is hope of your caſe, if ye can attain to the way laid out for bettering it. You have God's word for this: Iſa. i. 18. 'Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool.' Ezek. xviii. 23. 'Have I any pleaſure at all that the wicked ſhould die? ſaith the Lord God: and not that he ſhould return from his ways and live?' This will quicken your endeavours after the happineſs of your ſouls. Satan ſtrikes at this foundation, to keep the ſoul from repentance, many ways. He will tell you, it cannot be thought, that God can ever love the like of you. But the Lord ſaith the contrary: Hoſ. xiv. 4. 'I will heal their backſliding, I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from him.' Again, Satan will tell you, that you were not elected, but made for deſtruction; though God never ſet him nor you on the ſecrets of his decrees: Deut xxix. 29. 'The ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God: but thoſe things which are revealed belong unto us.' But why does he tell you all this, but to make you careleſs? which being done, he knows you cannot repent.

2. Believe that Jeſus Chriſt is both able and willing to ſave you from ſin and from wrath. You have ground to believe his ability, 1 John i. 7. 'The blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.' Heb. vii. 25. 'He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them.' And you have alſo ground to believe his willingneſs, Iſa. lv. 1. Rev. xxii. 17. both forecited. This will ſet you a ſtep farther on; and truly this believed by a ſenſible ſinner, the bargain is almoſt cloſed. Therefore Satan works againſt the toſſed ſoul's believing of this, to the end he may not come to an anchor or reſt, but may plunge up and down in the depths, knowing no landing place. Hence theſe helliſh ſuggeſtions, What have you to do with the promiſes of grace? they will be made out to others, but not to you. But ſee Acts ii. 39. compared with verſ. 36. Hence alſo the ſuggeſtion of having ſinned the unpardonable ſin. But why is that ſin unpardonable? not that the Phyſician cannot or will not cure it, Heb. vii 25. John vi. 37. but becauſe the ſinner will never after deſire to come to him, but wilfully and maliciouſly rejects him. Hence alſo that ſuggeſtion, that Chriſt died not for him. But ſurely Satan never ſaw the roll of thoſe whom Chriſt died for, and knows it no more than we, Deut xxix. 29. We ought not to call that in queſtion, but leave that matter to the Lord. It is plain, that we are commanded to believe, 1 John iii. 23. Let us do ſo, and we ſhall have evidences that Chriſt died for us.

3. Chriſt has given his conſent to be yours in his word; believe it; and do you conſent to be his, accepting of the covenant, and of Chriſt therein to be your head and huſband. Take him in all his offices as offered; and ſolemnly lay the whole weight of your ſoul, for juſtification and ſanctification, on him. Lay over the burden of your guilt on his blood, of your raging luſts on his blood and Spirit; confidently truſting in him for ſalvation from ſin and wrath. You have good ground to do this: Matth. xxii. 4. 'All things are ready: come unto the marriage.' Iſ. xxvi. 3, 4. 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtaid on thee: becauſe he truſteth in thee. Truſt ye in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength.' Chap. xliv. 5. 'One ſhall ſay, I am the Lord's: and another ſhall call himſelf by the name of Jacob; and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand unto the Lord, and ſirname himſelf by the name of Iſrael.' Chap. xlv. 24. 'Surely ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.' This being done, the bargain is cloſed for time and eternity; Chriſt is yours, and ye are his, and God is your God in him. Satan ſtrives againſt the ſoul here: for he knows, that if this be done, the perſon is no more his. Hence are theſe ſuggeſtions, Chriſt is a hard maſter there is no living with; though Chriſt ſays the contrary, Matth. xi. 28, 29, 30. Again, it is over ſoon for that ſerious work, Pſal. xcv. If none of theſe nor the like will do, then he will tell the perſon, that it is preſumption for him to offer at any ſuch thing. But that is but the devil's doctrine, that it is preſumption to do it, ſince God has commanded it, 1 John iii. 23. ‘This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt.’ And do what you will, ye cannot pleaſe God unleſs you do it, John vi. 29. ‘This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent.’ Heb. xi. 6. ‘Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.’ Well, if the ſoul will venture, he is ready to tell him, he had as good let it alone as try it in vain, for Chriſt will never receive him, nor give his conſent to the bargain. But Satan is a liar; for he has given it already: Matth. xxii. 4. ‘All things are ready: come unto the marriage.’ Hoſ. ii. 19. ‘I will betroth thee unto me for ever, yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and in judgment, and in loving-kindneſs, and in mercies.’ The ſoul is like a traveller come to a deep water-ſide, over which lies a bridge appearing very thin and narrow; it is pouring on rain on this ſide, it is fair weather on the far ſide; he would fain be over; and while he is minting to take the bridge, a falſe friend tells him, that he will never get over, that the bridge will break with him, or that his foot will ſlip, &c. And thus the poor man ſtands, ſometimes putting on his foot, ſometimes drawing it back again, till the flood riſing behind him, he ſees he muſt venture or periſh. So he ventures with a trembling heart, and gets ſafe over, and ſees that it was an enemy that made him ſo diſtruſtful of the paſſage.

4. This being done, believe that Chriſt is yours, Cant. ii. 16.; that God is reconciled to you in him; that your ſins are pardoned for Chriſt's ſake, and you are no more under condemnation for them, Rom. viii. 1; that you are now in a ſtate of peace with God, and ſafe under the covert of blood. This will effectually melt your hearts into ſincere repentance. And the ſtronger your confidence be in this point, the fire will be the more keen to melt the ſoul. Satan will oppoſe you in this alſo, that raiſing the duſt of doubts and fears, your hands may be feeble that ſhould fight againſt your luſts, the legs weak and trembling wherewith you ſhould turn from ſin unto God. But the more he weakens that, the more he ſerves his own purpoſe againſt you.

5. Stand upon this ſhore, and look to your ſins, and Saviour, Zech. xii. 10. When a ſoul has, by a believing application of the blood of Chriſt, paſſed the gulf of condemnation, and ſees itſelf ſafe on the other ſide, it ſtands faireſt for a hearty melting for ſin, and a free and cordial turning from it unto God, Luke vii. 37, 38. compared with ver. 47. Slaviſh fear may be greater before, but it is filial relenting that will be greateſt then. The waters of ſorrow may make greater noiſe before, but they will come ſweeping down with a more full flood then, as when a hearty thaw comes after a long froſt.

6. laſtly, Believing the promiſe of his grace, uſe the means. There are means of God's appointment to ſtir up a ſoul to repentance; namely, ſerious meditations on the ſins of our nature, heart, lip, and life; the evil of it with reſpect to God and to ourſelves, &c. Rev. ii. 5. ‘Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent.’ Pſal. cxix. 59. ‘I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies.’ There are promiſes of repentance, Ezek. xxxvi. 31. ‘Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall lothe yourſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.’ Acts v. 31. ‘Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins.’ To believe the promiſe without uſe of the means, is preſumption; to uſe the means without believing the promiſe, is a ſelfiſh unſanctified work. What God has joined, either of theſe puts aſunder, and ſo muſt be fruitleſs. God ſays to us in this caſe, as unto Moſes, Exod. xvii. 5, 6. ‘Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Iſrael: and thy rod wherewith thou ſmoteſt the river, take in thine hand, and go. Behold, I will ſtand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou ſhalt ſmite the rock, and there ſhall come water out of it, that the people may drink.’ The means are as the rock, the faith of the promiſe the rod of God; the way to get the water was by ſmiting the rock with the rod.

Fourthly, Let us conſider the parts of repentance. Theſe are two, namely, humiliation for ſin, and turning from ſin unto God. Theſe two put together, make up true repentance. Accordingly, the ſcripture ſpeaks of repenting of ſin, 2 Cor. xii. 21. ‘which have not repented of the uncleanneſs,’ &c.; and likewiſe repenting from ſin, Heb. vi. 1. ‘not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works,’ &c. So in the Old-Teſtament repentance is expreſſed by two words; the one denoting remorſe and ſorrow: Job xlii. 6. ‘Wherefore I abhor myſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.’ Jer. viii. 6. ‘No man repented him of his wickedneſs, ſaying, what have I done?’ the other denoting the turning of the ſoul, viz. from ſin unto God, Ezek. xviii. 30. ‘Repent, and turn yourſelves from all your tranſgreſſions.’

But however theſe may be diſtinguiſhed, they cannot be divided in true repentance. The true humiliation iſſues always in turning; and turning always begins at humiliation. Hence very often the whole of repentance is expreſſed by returning, and ſometimes by humiliation, as Lev. xxvi. 41. ‘If then their uncircumciſed hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity.’ 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12. ‘And when he was in affliction, he beſought the Lord his God, and humbled himſelf greatly before the God of his fathers.’ We have both together, Joel ii. 12, 13. ‘Therefore alſo now, ſaith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with faſting, and with weeping, and with mourning. And rent your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs, and repenteth him of the evil.’

1ſt, To begin with humiliation. This leads the van in the ſinner's return to God by repentance. There is never a ſoul comes back to God, but it comes the low way of humiliation. The ſinner gone from God, is ſet up againſt him, but grace pulls down the ſinner from that ſeat, and lays him down at the Lord's footſtool, where the Lord takes him up, 1 Pet. v. 6. ‘Humble yourſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.’ As it was with Benhadad's ſervants, 1 Kings xx. 31, 32. ſo it is with the convinced ſinner: faith teaches them, that the king of Iſrael is a merciful king; repentance girds ſackloth on their loins, and ropes on their heads, and in that poſture brings them to him. Now, in this humiliation of the ſoul there are theſe five things.

Firſt, A kindly ſenſe of ſin, whereby the ſoul ſees and is deeply affected with its ſins againſt a holy, gracious God. I call it ſo, to diſtinguiſh it from the legal convictions ſpoken of before, which make a terrible reel in the conſcience and affections: whereas this kindly ſoaks into the heart. The former is at the bottom involuntary, comes in, and is kept on againſt the ſinner's will; becauſe the natural enmity of the heart againſt God is not broken; and makes the man like one under great pain, who would fain ſleep, but ſtill the new ſtounds awake him and keep him awake. The latter is voluntary, it is welcome in, and welcome to ſtay; becauſe the heart is brought low, and would fain be lower before a holy God.

When the light appears at a chink, they would fain draw the curtains and open the windows, that they may get a better ſight of their black face and foul hands, Jer. lii. 18, 19. This ſenſe of ſin,

1. For the matter of it, is,

1ſt, A ſenſe of the plague of the heart, or ſin of the nature, 1 Kings viii. 38. Rom. vii. 7, 8. The man that is humbled, ſees the corruption of his nature, himſelf to be a maſs of corruption and confuſion. He diſcerns the bias of his heart to the wrong ſide, the averſion to good, the proneneſs to evil, that is interwoven with his very nature. The light of the Lord ſhining into his ſoul, gives him the affecting ſight of the diſtortion and pravity that is in all the faculties of his ſoul, the blindneſs in his mind, rebellion in his will, and carnality in his affections. The want of this is a flaw in the repentance of many, of whom we may ſay, as Lev. xiii. 44. 'He 'is a leprous man, he is unclean: the prieſt ſhall pro'nounce him utterly unclean, his plague is in his head.' They never ſee the corruption of their nature, and ſo repent not of it.

2dly, A ſenſe of actual ſins, Job xxxvi. 9. 'Then he 'ſheweth them their work, and their tranſgreſſions that 'they have exceeded.' Theſe are the poiſonous ſtreams flowing from the impoiſoned fountain; Mark vii. 21, 22. 'For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed 'evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, 'covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an e'vil eye, blaſphemy, pride, fooliſhneſs.' Sin now lies at the door; for thoſe things that were buried out of ſight, have a reſurrection, and ſtand before him as an exceeding great army which he has muſtered againſt heaven. Sins committed many years before, will appear more freſh and green than that day they were committed. What he juſtified before as no faults, he will be now aſhamed of; and what were reckoned tolerable follies, will be accounted monſtrous impieties.

3dly, A ſenſe of the particular idol of jealouſy, which the man has been moſt apt to be led away with. The ſoul is never truly humbled, till deeply ſenſible of its weak ſide, Hoſ. xiv. 3. 'Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, we 'will not ride upon horſes, neither will we ſay any more 'to the work of our hands, Ye are gods.' For the penitent will be particularly ſet againſt that, as what is particularly offenſive to God, Pſal. xviii. 22. This right eye ſmarts and pains him ſo exceedingly, that now he would gladly have it plucked out. And as it does eſpecially grieve the Lord's Spirit, it eſpecially grieves his, as what has been the great make-bate betwixt God and him.

4thly, A ſenſe of the numerouſneſs and multitude of their ſins, Job xiii. 23. 'How many are mine iniquities 'and ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my 'ſin.' A true ſenſe of ſin will open mens eyes to ſee innumerable evils compaſſing them about, countable only by him who telleth the ſtars, Pſal. xix. 12. Hence the humbled ſoul is ſenſible of a cloud of guilt that it has been wrapt up in; and will ſee it muſt plead guilty to every line of the ſpiritual law; ſees itſelf a maſs of iniquity; 'from the crown of the head to the ſole of the 'foot, there is no ſoundneſs, but wounds, and bruiſes, 'and putrifying ſores, Iſ. lxiv. 6. 'We are all as an un'clean thing, and all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy 'rags,' &c.

5thly, A ſenſe of the heinouſneſs of their ſins, the aggravating circumſtances, wherewith they have been attended, Luke xv. 18. 'I will ariſe, and go to my father, 'and will ſay unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt 'heaven, and before thee.' Each ſin pierces the heart of the penitent. And ſo it is wonderful to ſee what a dexterity a repenting ſinner has in aggravating of his ſins, in his prayers, and complaints. Time, place, perſon, and each circumſtance, ſhoots as it were a dart through the liver.

Laſtly, A ſenſe of the evil of ſin. Men may ſee ſin, that ſee not the evil of it. Hence profeſſing of ſin, inſtead of confeſſing it; turning to it, inſtead of turning from it. But if one ſaw the ſerpent's ſting, he would not take it into his boſom, Luke xxiii. 34. But the Lord's language to the ſoul whom he is drawing to repentance, is that, Jer. ii. 19. 'Thine own wickedneſs ſhall correct 'thee, and thy backſliding ſhall reprove thee; know 'therefore and ſee, that it is an evil thing and bitter, 'that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God, and that my 'fear is not in thee, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts.' And there is a twofold evil in ſin, which the ſoul is now ſenſible of.

(1.) The evil of it with reſpect to themſelves. They are ſenſible of the bitter fruits of ſin, Rom. vi. 21. 'What fruit had ye then in thoſe things, whereof ye 'are now aſhamed? for the end of thoſe things is death.' They ſee now 'the vine is the vine of Sodom, the grapes 'are grapes of gall, the cluſters bitter, and their teeth 'are ſet on edge.' They cry out, as the ſons of the prophets in another caſe, 2 Kings iv. 40. 'O thou man of 'God, there is death in the pot.' This is the danger of ſin, that they are made ſenſible of. They ſee the guilt of it, laying the ſoul open to temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſtrokes, Jer. xiv. 7. 'O Lord, though our 'iniquities teſtify againſt us, do thou it for thy name's 'ſake, for our backſlidings are many, we have ſinned 'againſt thee.' Hence 'horror takes hold on them, 'becauſe of God's righteous judgments.' They are made to wonder that they are not in hell, drinking the cup of the wrath of God. Their hearts tremble to look back on the ruin that was hanging over their heads in their natural ſtate; that the poiſonous cup which they drank, has not diſpatched them. Hence they fear to meddle with ſin again, as one would do to take a ſerpent into his boſom.

(2.) The evil of it with reſpect to God and Chriſt; and that in a threefold reſpect. [1.] As contrary to the holy law of God: 1 John iii. 4. 'Whoſoever com'mitteth ſin, tranſgreſſeth alſo the law; for ſin is the 'tranſgreſſion of the law.' By ſin one breaks over the hedge, yea breaks it down, and ſo ſteps into the devil's ground; what wonder then a ſerpent do bite him! Now the ſinner ſees the equity of God's law, and ſo plainly perceives the evil of tranſgreſſion: Rom. vii. 12. 'The law is holy; and the commandment holy, and 'juſt and good.' And the breaking over this ſo glorious a hedge, galls the penitent heart, the ingenuous ſpirit of an evangelical penitent.

[2.] As contrary to the holy nature of God: Hab. i. 13. 'Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and 'canſt not look on iniquity.' Sin is the worſt of evils in itſelf, and in the eyes of the penitent. There is nothing ſo contrary to the chief good, and therefore it is the chief evil. Now, the true penitent loves God, his holy nature and perfections; and therefore his ſin is heavy to him, becauſe by it he has walked contrary to him: Lam. v. 16. 'Wo unto us that we have ſinned.'

[3.] As the procuring cauſe of the ſufferings of Chriſt, Zech. xii. 10. 'They ſhall look upon me whom 'they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him,' &c. Mount Calvary is the Bochim to the true penitent: the ſufferings of Chriſt are the commentaries on ſin, which the true penitent reads; the groans of a dying Saviour rend their hearts; and by the wounds of a Redeemer they ſee the ill of ſin.

This is the loathſomeneſs of ſin, Iſa. xxx. 22.; whereby it is not only hated for what attends it, but is abhorred for itſelf, as a thing which on no terms the ſoul could any longer digeſt.

2. For the qualities of it. It is,

1ſt, A particular and diſtinct ſenſe of ſin, not a general and confuſed one. No man that hears the goſpel, having common underſtanding, but he confeſſes himſelf a ſinner; but many nevertheleſs are blind as to particulars. But this puts one in a capacity to lay his hands on his ſores, ſaying, as Pſal. li. 4. 'Againſt thee, thee on'ly have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight.' It ſhews him his particular tranſgreſſions wherein he has exceeded, and the particular ills by which he has exceeded and offended in theſe. As the vermin appear crawling, when the ſtone is lifted up, which before lay hid; ſo the ills of the heart and life appear to the penitent: Rom. vii. 9. ‘I was alive without the law once: but when the ‘commandment came, ſin revived, and I died.’

2*dly*, It is real, not imaginary. The Spirit of the Lord realizeth the evil of ſin to the ſoul. And ſo it goes beyond a merely rational knowledge of ſin, as far as the ſenſe of the bitterneſs of gall got by taſting it, exceeds that got by the bare hearing of it: Jer. ii. 19. ‘Thine ‘own wickedneſs ſhall correct thee, and thy backſlidings ſhall reprove thee: know therefore and ſee, that ‘it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou haſt forſaken ‘the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, ‘ſaith the Lord God of hoſts.’ There is a ſpiritual ſenſation of ſpiritual things, ariſing from the new nature, as well as a natural feeling of what is grievous to us another way, 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15. ‘The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they ‘are fooliſhneſs unto him: neither can he know them, ‘becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. But he that is ‘ſpiritual, judgeth all things.’

3*dly*, It is operative, not dead and idle. The eye of the penitent affects his heart; and the heart being touched, ſets all the powers of the ſoul on work. It is the ſpiritual phyſic, that ceaſeth not to work till the whole ſoul be purged; as in the caſe of Peter's hearers, Acts ii. 37. who ‘were pricked in their heart, and ſaid unto ‘Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do?’ There is a ſenſe of ſin which vents itſelf in nothing but in ſighing and going backward, or in dry and fruitleſs complaints. It is like the diſturbance which the ſluggard meets with on his bed, which never thoroughly awakes him. But this ſenſe of ſin is thorough work.

Laſtly, It is an abiding ſenſe of ſin, not a tranſient one in a fit, and ſo away, Lam. iii. 49, 50. ‘Mine eye ‘trickleth down, and ceaſeth not, without any intermiſſion: till the Lord look down, and behold from ‘heaven.’ The humbled ſoul carries it about with him, as long as he carries the body of ſin and death about with him, ſaying with the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 24. ‘O ‘wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from ‘the body of this death!’ For it is not a ſlight touch, which goes as it comes, very eaſily. The removal of the ſtroke carried off Pharaoh's ſenſe of ſin; but here the wound is deeper, and ſo more abiding.

Uſe 1. An unſenſible ſinner is an unhumbled impenitent ſinner; as was the caſe of the church of Laodicea, who ‘ſaid, ſhe was rich, and increaſed with goods, and ‘had need of nothing; and knew not that ſhe was ‘wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and ‘naked,’ Rev. iii. 17. They that never digged deep, are not built on the rock. They that never got a broad ſight of themſelves in the ſinfulneſs of their hearts and lives, have never yet got a believing ſight of Chriſt. Conſider this, ye that have ſtill lived at eaſe, ſtrangers to any thorough exerciſe about your ſouls caſe; though the door is ſhut, the thief is in the houſe.

2. This ſhews how it comes, that the pride of people's hearts ſtill remains, though under crying guilt of ſin. Though they know their ſin, they have no due ſenſe of it. If they had, it would be ſuch a burden on their backs as would ſoon make them ſtoop, as Peter's hearers did, Acts [illegible] 37. Unſenſible ſinners may ſit high in the ſeat of the ſcornful, while they ſee not what a God they have to do with; but when the Spirit of the Lord opens their eyes, and touches their hearts, to let them ſee and feel the evil of ſin, they will lie low in the duſt. They will, with the afflicted man, ‘put their mouth in ‘the duſt, if ſo be there may be hope,’ Lam. iii. 29.

3. See here a difference betwixt the ſaints humiliation, and that of the hypocrites. An Ahab may humble himſelf from a ſenſe of the danger of ſin; but a true penitent is humbled from a ſenſe of the loathſomeneſs of ſin, 1 Kings xxi. 27. 29. Job xlii. 5, 6. A ſlave may bow himſelf for fear of the whip; but the diſpoſition of a ſon is to be affected with the offence done to a kind father. Many will ſeem very low under the rod of God, and the apprehenſions of his wrath, who are never touched with his love. They will be caſt down under the ſenſe of the evil their ſin does to themſelves, while the diſhonour done to God by it lies far from their hearts.

4. laſtly, Let me exhort you to get and entertain a deep ſenſe of ſin on your ſpirits. See your ſins, and be duly affected with them, and be humbled for them. O how ſad is it, that amongſt our many thoughts, ſin gets ſo few of them!

For motives to preſs this exhortation, conſider,

1*ſt*, That the Lord is anew calling the land by his providence to be ſenſible of their ſins, and to be humbled for them. The Lord took us not long ago as a brand out of the burning; but he is threatening to caſt us into the fire again, by a foreign invaſion. For though we were delivered, yet the controverſy remains ſtill. We have not been thankful for our deliverance; Atheiſm, profanity, formality, contempt of the goſpel, and a ſpirit of apoſtaſy and declining from the Lord, and his work and way, wofully abound. How can we miſs to fall at length!

2*dly*, Conſider the preſent diſpenſation of providence towards this congregation, threatening to leave our houſe deſolate. It fills the mouths of many with what is little worth; would to God it might fill your hearts and mine with a ſerious inquiry into the cauſes of it before the Lord. It ſpeaks aloud, O that we were taking up the language of the threatening rod. The melancholy ſtate of this congregation, in the time of the laſt deſolation, needs not be forgot. It would become us all very well on this occaſion, to conſider what a jealous God we have to do with, and what entertainment has been given to the preached goſpel; to lay our hands every one on our own mouths, and conſider well what we have contributed to the bringing of the matter to this paſs. By taking with our ſin, and humbling ourſelves before the Lord, way might be made for the acceptance of prayer through Jeſus Chriſt; and them that humble themſelves, God will exalt.

3*dly*, Conſider, that however light your ſins may ſit on your ſpirits, they are a burden to the holy Spirit of God: Amos ii. 13. ‘Behold, (ſays the Lord,) I am preſſed under you, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves.’ And we may be ſure the Lord will eaſe himſelf of that burden ſooner or later. And if it be not by our repentance and humiliation, it will be by accompliſhing his wrath on us: Iſa. i. 24. ‘Ah, I will eaſe me of mine ‘adverſaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.’ Therefore conſider your ways, in order to a returning to the Lord. The lighter that ſin ſits on us, it is the more grieving to the Spirit of the Lord.

Laſtly, Conſider, that without ſenſe of ſin there is no humiliation; that without humiliation there can be no repentance; and that without repentance there can be no eſcape from the wrath of God. For except ye repent, ye ſhall periſh. Unſenſibleneſs of ſin, and the evil of it, locks up the heart in obduration and impenitency; and that will ſhut up the ſoul under wrath. But God loves the ſenſible humbled ſoul: Jer. xxxi. 20. ‘Is Ephraim my dear ſon? is he a pleaſant child? for ſince I ‘ſpake againſt him, I do earneſtly remember him ſtill: ‘therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will ſurely have mercy upon him, ſaith the Lord.’

Secondly, In true humiliation there is a kindly ſorrow for ſin: Zech. xii. 10. ‘I will pour upon the houſe of ‘David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications; and they ſhall look ‘upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall ‘mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only ſon, and ‘ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt born.’ The ſoul is not only filled with remorſe, but true grief, for offending a holy, gracious God. He grieved the Spirit in committing of ſin, his ſpirit is grieved in repenting of it. The hard heart is broken, the adamantine heart diſſolved into tears of godly ſorrow, the rock is ſtruck by the rod of the goſpel, and the waters guſh out. The way to Zion lies through the valley of Baca: Jer. l. 4, 5. ‘In thoſe days, and in that time, ſaith the Lord, the children of Iſrael ſhall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they ſhall go, and ſeek the Lord their God. They ſhall aſk the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, ſaying, Come, and let us join ourſelves to the Lord, in a perpetual covenant that ſhall not be forgotten.’ And it is the mourners for ſin whom the Lord comforts with the conſolations of his Spirit. This is that brokenneſs and contrition of heart, which God calls for, and takes ſo much pleaſure in. This is the renting of the heart, which God requires, Joel ii. 12, 13. This is godly ſorrow, which hath theſe properties.

1. It is a ſorrow for ſin as ſin; not only for the guilt of it, but the loathſomeneſs of it; not only for the ill it does to ourſelves, but the diſhonour and wrong it does to a holy gracious God, Pſal. li. 4. Zech. xii. 10. The penitent in his ſorrow, goes farther than awakened reprobates, who ſeeing their ſouls ruined and dead, do put on their mournings. He grieves at the heart, becauſe of the offence done to God, the defacing of his image, tranſgreſſing a holy and moſt juſt law, furniſhing a ſpear and nails to pierce a Saviour.

2. It is an inward real ſorrow. Not the hanging down of the head like a bulruſh, Iſ. lviii. 5. Not a made ſorrow in a diſfigured countenance, which lies all in outward appearance. But it is a ſorrow ſoaking into the ſoul, and piercing the very heart, Iſ. lxi. 3. And therefore it follows the man in ſecret, where no eye ſees; making him mourn before the Lord, when the world knows nothing of it. For it ariſeth from an inward principle.

3. It is a lively ſorrow. The ſorrow of the world worketh death. It ſtupifies a man, and takes heart and hand for duty from him. But the ſpiritual pangs of godly ſorrow for ſin quicken a man to his duty: 2 Cor. vii. 11. ‘For behold this ſelf ſame thing that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, what carefulneſs it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourſelves, yea what indignation, yea, what fear, yea what vehement deſire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge!’ It makes the man active in ſalvation work. And the reaſon is, the one ſprings from ſlaviſh fear, which chills the ſoul, making it cold and ſtiff, and unfit for action; and the other from love, which warms the heart, and diſpoſeth it for action; Luke vii. 47. ‘Her ſins which are many, are forgiven; for ſhe loved much.’

4. It is an abiding ſorrow. It is not a flaſh of an affection, which is deceitful, but a ſpirit of heavineſs. Iſ. lxi. 3. The ſorrows of many are like a ſummerſhower, that wets the ſurface of the ground, but is preſently dried up, ere it do any good. But godly ſorrow is like that, Eccleſ. vii. 3. ‘Sorrow is better than laughter; for by the ſadneſs of the countenance the heart is made better.’ The ſoul, like Mary, mourns till it finds the Lord, Lam. iii. 49, 50. forecited. It may indeed remit of its degrees; but while ſin abides, the ſpring of mourning abides too.

5. It is an univerſal ſorrow. The true penitent heartily grieves for his own ſin, Pſal. xxxviii. 18. and for the ſins of others, Pſal. cxix. 136. It is like the letting out of waters: it may begin at one ſin, but it does not ſtop there, but goes through all known ſin, Pſal. li. 5. and unknown too, Pſal. xix. 12. ‘Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults.’ They never truly mourn for one ſin, that do not mourn for all: for that which moves ſorrow in the repenting heart for one ſin, is to be found in all ſins, namely, its contrariety to the law and nature of God, the loathſomeneſs as well as danger of it. And hence, when once the flood-gate of godly ſorrow is opened, it overflows all; and the ſweeteſt morſel becomes bitter.

6. It is deep ſorrow. Peter repenting wept bitterly. He that would have a good crop, plows well; and he that would build ſurely, goes deep with the foundation. It was the want of depth of earth that was the ruin of the ſtony-ground hearers, Matth. xiii. 5. And deep digging was the ſafety of the houſe founded on a rock, Luke vi. 48. This ſorrow is a renting of the heart, Joel ii. 13.; a renting of it as the plough rents the earth, Jer. iv. 3.; a pricking and piercing of it as with daggers, ſwords, and ſpears, Acts ii. 37. compared with John xix. 34. a cutting it as it were with a knife, Jer. iv. 4.

It is a queſtion, Whether penitential ſorrow exceeds all other ſorrows for the comforts of this life, or not? If we meaſure by the moving of the heart and affections, it is evident, that at leaſt always it doth not exceed other ſorrows. But if we meaſure by the ſettled diſpoſition of the heart, it is as evident that it does exceed them all. As the deepeſt waters ordinarily make leaſt noiſe, ſo men will be more moved in a leſſer joy and grief than in a greater; for they are but the lighteſt joys that move laughter, and oft-times the greateſt ſorrows are above tears. It ſettles more firmly, and continues more than any other ſorrow whatſoever in the world.

7. laſtly, It is a heart-purifying ſorrow. It works repentance or forſaking of ſin: 2 Cor. vii. 10. ‘Godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation, not to be repented of.’ True mourning and turning are inſeparable companions; though there is a mourning for ſin, that is not deep enough to turn up the love of ſin by the root. True ſorrow in the heart is a ſpring, which as it runneth will work out ſin, as to the love, habitual practice, and dominion of it, as a ſpring works out the mud thrown into it.

Uſe. 1. There is no repenting with a hale heart, and without repentance no ſalvation. People muſt either be broken for their ſins in a way of mourning, or God will break them for them in a way of judgment. There are many ſtout hearts in our day, that will boldly outface challengers from the word and their own conſciences, without either breaking or bowing. But let ſuch remember, that there is a day coming when God will make the ſtouteſt heart to tremble, and the heart of adamant to fly in a thouſand pieces, Pſal. ii. 9. ‘Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron, thou ſhalt daſh them in pieces like a potter's veſſel.’

2. How far muſt they be from humiliation, that ſin deliberately, glory in their ſhame, and rejoice in ungodly courſes and practices! I think providences and ordinances are hardening to many in our day; they are not bettered by them, and therefore they are hardened and made worſe under them. Our penny-weddings and ſet drinkings, leaving ſuch a ſtench behind them, and attended with before unheard of profanity, are ſpeaking evidences of this. Are theſe Chriſtian methods to help poor people? Will God accept the gift, where ſuch a fat ſacrifice is offered to the devil? Is that charity for which drinking muſt open mens hearts and hands to give? If ſome methods be not fallen on to prevent theſe things, they will bring wrath on the congregation. I appeal to the conſciences of all ſober perſons, if it looked not judgment-like, that in that very time when abroad a deſign was managing to lay the congregation deſolate, at home many were met for a ſet drinking, carried on to a monſtrous height of profanity, in the day and in the night. It becomes us all to mourn for this, leſt we involve ourſelves in the guilt. And particularly I warn all ſuch as were any partakers of that ſcandalous riot, to repent, leſt wrath break out upon them. For it is a fearful thing to ſtand expoſed to the laſh of theſe threatenings, Hab. ii. 15. ‘Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink: that putteſt thy bottle to him, and makeſt him drunken alſo, that thou mayeſt look on their nakedneſs.’ Iſa. xxii.

12, 13, 14. ‘And in that day did the Lord God of hoſts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloth: and behold, joy and gladneſs, ſlaying oxen, and killing ſheep, eating fleſh, and drinking wine; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we ſhall die. And it was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of hoſts, Surely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you, till ye die, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts.’

3. The ſorrow of many for their ſins, will tend to no good account before the Lord. Few have any remarkable ſorrow for their ſins at all; but amongſt thoſe whoſe hearts are really grieved and pained for their ſin, how few are there that have any right ſorrow? The danger of it, the diſadvantage by it, the ſhame of it before the world, pains them a little; but the diſhonour done to God by it, touches them not effectually. And ſo their ſorrow will be but the beginning of hell, not of repentance.

4. laſtly, Be exhorted to mourn for ſin. Labour to get your hearts affected with this mournful object, and be not ſtrangers to this exerciſe. The ſins and threatned judgments of this day call for it; and it is the way to attain particular ſafety in common calamity: Ezek. ix. 4. ‘And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go through the midſt of the city, through the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a mark upon the forehead of the men that ſigh, and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midſt thereof.’ If we were more in the duty of mourning, we would ſhare more of the goſpel comforts, Matth. v. 4. ‘Bleſſed are they that mourn: for they ſhall be comforted.’ And the more of the Spirit one has, the more will he be taken up that way.

Thirdly, In true humiliation there is a holy ſhame upon the account of ſin before the Lord: Rom. vi. 21. ‘What fruit had ye in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? for the end of thoſe things is death.’ The remembrance of ſin fills the penitent with ſhame and bluſhing: hence ſays Ezra, chap. ix. 6. ‘O my God, I am aſhamed and bluſh to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increaſed over our head, and our treſpaſs is grown up into the heavens.’ Shame was never known in the world, till ſin entered; yet ſometimes ſin comes to ſuch a height with ſinners, that it quite baniſhes ſhame: but the caſe of ſuch is very deſperate, Jer. iii. 3. ‘Thou hadſt a whore’s forehead, thou refuſedſt to be aſhamed.’ Shame then is the remains of virtue in a ſinner, to which whoſo are loſt, are loſt to all good, Iſa. iii. 9. ‘The ſhew of their countenance doth witneſs againſt them, and they declare their ſin as Sodom, they hide it not.’ Now, the grace of God awakens this ſhame, and ſanctifies it in the penitent ſoul, ſo that he hangs down his head before the Lord, as aſhamed of his way and heart.

There are four things occaſion ſhame, and meet here.

1. Nakedneſs cauſeth ſhame. Hence ſaid Adam to the Lord, Gen. iii. 10. ‘I heard thy voice in the garden: and I was afraid, becauſe I was naked; and I hid myſelf.’ Sin ſtrips the ſinners of their beautiful garments, takes away the glory of the rational creature, and leaves them without a covering before the eyes of a holy God. The penitent ſees this, and is aſhamed; and ſo, with the publican, cannot lift up his eyes to heaven, but ſmites on his breaſt, as if he would wound the breaſt that ſin bred in, which has brought him to this ſhameful caſe.

2. Pollution and defilement, for that makes one loathſome to others, Job ix. 31. ‘Thou ſhalt plunge me in the ditch, and my own cloaths ſhall abhor me.’ Sin defiles the ſoul, takes away, and mars all its beauty, and deforms it in the ſight of God. And the penitent ſees this, and is aſhamed, Iſ. lxiv. 6. ‘We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteouſneſſes as are filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.’ Never was a man that had been plunged over head and ears in a mire, more aſhamed to come before others in that caſe, than the penitent is aſhamed to ſhew his face before God.

3. Diſappointments of raiſed expectations, Jer. ii. 36, 37. The ſinner in his impenitent ſtate, looked for his happineſs and ſatisfaction in ſinful courſes. But when his heart is touched, he is aſhamed; for he finds, that inſtead of bread expected, he has got a ſtone; inſtead of fiſh, a ſerpent. He finds that he has been courting his own death and ruin; and that from the wall he leaned on there has come forth a ſerpent and bit him. And hence is that reflection, Rom. vi. 21. ‘What fruit had ye in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? for the end of thoſe things is death.’

4. Diſcovering of one’s reproach, Jer. ii. 26. ‘Sin is a reproach to any people.’ In the impenitent ſtate the ſoul’s reproach is hid to it; but when grace touches the heart, and the Lord brings the ſinner’s ways to mind, lays his ſins in broad-band before him, how can he miſs to be aſhamed? In a ſpecial manner, a conviction of baſe ingratitude fills one with ſhame, as to be convicted of deſigns againſt him who had ſaved our life. And thus the goodneſs of God duly conſidered, fills the penitent with ſhame and bluſhing, while he thinks what an ungrateful wretch he has been, Jer. iii. 25. ‘We lie down in our ſhame, and our confuſion covereth us: for we have ſinned againſt the Lord our God, we and our fathers from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God.’

Uſe 1. Shameleſsneſs in ſin is a badge of impenitency, and therefore a forerunner of deſtruction, Jer. vi. 15. Phil. iii. 19. A forehead of braſs is a ſign the heart is of ſtone. Impudence in ſin argues a filthy heart, an obſtinate diſpoſition, and a ſeared conſcience. And ſuch are a ſtage beyond others from the kingdom of God. What hopes can they have of the glory of heaven, that glory in their ſhame?

2. We ſee then that ſin will bring ſhame ſooner or later, here or hereafter. As for them that live and die without repentance, their ſhame is ſure, and they will be covered with it, before the great congregation of heaven and earth at the laſt day, and they ſhall never recover their countenance, Dan. xii. 2. ‘Many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt.’ And if people be recovered by repentance, they will be filled with ſhame before the Lord, even holy ſhame. But whatever ſhame men have, it is no holy ſhame that keeps them from glorifying God by taking ſhame to themſelves when called thereto; for no grace of God keeps folk back from duty, Joſh. vii. 19. Common diſcretion teaches us, that one aſhamed of an injury done to the honour of another, cannot look him in the face but with ſhame, till he has done what he can to repair that honour.

3. laſtly, The penitent ſoul is an ingenuous ſoul, and heartily at odds with ſin. For ſuch a one will be aſhamed before God, of what the world cannot tax him with. Many may be ſorry for ſin before God, becauſe of the terrible conſequences of it which they apprehend, who yet are not aſhamed before him, becauſe they ſee not the evil that is in ſin itſelf. But it argues a child like diſpoſition, to be heartily aſhamed of ſecret ſins before the Lord.

Fourthly, In true humiliation there is ſelf loathing and abhorrence, Ezek. xxxvi. 31. ‘Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath yourſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.’ The penitent not only loaths his ſin, but himſelf for his ſin. He cries out with Job, chap. xl. 4. ‘Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.’ Repentance ſets a man at variance with himſelf. He ſees his ugly face in the glaſs of God’s law, Chriſt’s ſufferings, and the Lord’s goodneſs, and he loaths himſelf. This ſelf loathing manifeſts itſelf,

1. In the low and mean thoughts the penitent juſtly entertains of himſelf. True penitents ſee ſuch vileneſs in themſelves, as makes them give a very mean account of themſelves. Abraham owned himſelf to be but duſt and aſhes; Jacob, leſs than all the mercies of God; David, a worm, and not a man; Aſaph, as a beaſt before the Lord: Agur, more brutiſh than any; the centurion, unworthy that Chriſt ſhould come under his roof; Paul, one born out of due time, the leaſt of the apoſtles, nay, leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, nay, the chief of ſinners; and the prodigal ſon, Luke xiv. 19. reckoned himſelf no more worthy to be called a ſon, but to be made a hired ſervant.

2. In the penitent's being heartily out with himſelf upon the account of his ſin, Job xlii. 6. ‘ Wherefore I ‘ abhor myſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.’ As one cannot with any pleaſure touch himſelf, that has filth thrown on him, but his very heart ſtands at himſelf; ſo it is in ſpiritual ſelf loathing. He looks on himſelf as an ugly ſpectacle. He not only has nothing to ſay in defence of himſelf, but with indignation he rejects all the ſhifts and excuſes for it, which he was ſatisfied with before, Luke xviii. 13. ‘ The publican ſtanding afar off, ‘ would not lift up ſo much as his eyes unto heaven, but ‘ ſmote upon his breaſt, ſaying, God be merciful to me ‘ a ſinner.’

3. In holy revenge, 2 Cor. vii. 11. He that was going on in ſin before, is now divided againſt himſelf; ſo that the devil's kingdom of ſin in him muſt needs go to ruin. He acts the part of an accuſer, advocate, and judge, againſt himſelf; yea, in ſome ſort laſhes himſelf for his ſinful heart and life. Hence we find the humbled ſinner, 1ſt, Smiting on his breaſt, Luke xviii. 13. as it were thereby declaring, that he deſerves to be ſtruck at the heart, and die for his tranſgreſſion; that within him is the cauſe of all his ſin and ſorrows, he may thank himſelf for all; the ſource and ſpring of all is the corrupt heart.

2dly, Smiting on his thigh, Jer. xxxi. 19. as if he would thereby declare, that he would be willing to take vengeance on the feet that carried him out of the way of God; that he is filled with indignation againſt himſelf, for his unaccountable practices, ſaying, ‘ What have ‘ I done?’ what a wretched ſinner have I been?

There are theſe five things that ſtir up this ſelf-loathing, eſpecially in the penitent ſoul.

(1.) The remarkable blots, and ſignal miſcarriages in his way, that deeply wound and defile the conſcience, like Peter's denying of his Maſter, which made him weep bitterly when he came to himſelf. Theſe in a peculiar manner cover the ſoul with confuſion, and fill it with ſelf-abhorrence. And hence repentance begins at ſome ſuch thing, from whence it ſpreads to the whole body of ſin: Acts ii. 36, 37. ‘ Let all the houſe of Iſrael know ‘ aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus whom ‘ ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt. Now when ‘ they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and ‘ ſaid——Men and brethren, what ſhall we do?’

(2.) The fulneſs of ſin ſeen in the ſoul, Iſa. lxiv. 6. ‘ We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteouſ‘ neſſes are as filthy rags.’ The penitent being made ſenſible of his ſoul's caſe, ſees the leproſy ſpread over the whole man, his mind under much darkneſs, his will rebellious againſt the will of God, his affections diſordered, his whole nature corrupted, the ſeed of every ſin in it; ſo that he concludes, that his heart is full of iniquity, and that the luſts that are hatched there, their name may be legion. His life is a loathſome ſpectacle of the outbreakings and workings of that corruption. So that he ſees that ‘ from the ſole of the foot to the crown of ‘ the head there is no ſoundneſs;’ and therefore he loaths himſelf.

(3.) The pollution cleaving to his duties: Iſa. lxiv. 6. forecited. While he ſees how the running ſore of his natural corruption drops on all his holy things, and defiles them, how can he chuſe but loath himſelf? He ſees his beſt works are like a moth-eaten garment, full of holes: never a prayer, nor confeſſion made, but there are provocations againſt the Lord in them. His mournings for ſin muſt be mourned over, becauſe of the woful defects thereof; while he goes to mend one hole, ſtill he is ſure to ſtrike out another. Thus the penitent is in his own eyes like Job, who had not whole fingers to dreſs his ſores with; ſo he abhors himſelf.

(4.) The aggravations of ſin, Luke xv. 18. A ſight of theſe makes ſin look like an opened ſtinking ſore, wherein each of them contributes to make it more and more loathſome. When the penitent conſiders with what bent of affection he has ſinned, the light, the many mercies, vows, and reſolutions, &c. he has ſinned againſt, he cannot but loath himſelf as a wretched ſelf deſtroyer, as an ungrateful miſcreant, and as a beaſt before the Lord.

(5.) Inſtability in any thing that is good: Hoſ. vi. 4: ——‘ Your goodneſs is as a morning-cloud, and as the ‘ early dew it goeth away.’ Wavering hearts, and wavering hands, are very humbling to a ſoul truly touched. A good frame is a rare hour, and ſtays but a ſhort while. How often are reſolutions fairly taken up, and begin to bud in endeavours for practice, that yet are quickly let fall again? How often do men relapſe into the ſame ſins, they have ſometimes had made very bitter to them? There is nothing more apt than this to ſtir up ſelf abhorrence.

Uſe. 1. Self conceit is a need-nail to a ſtate of impenitency: Rev. iii. 17. ‘ Thou [the church of Laodicea] ‘ ſayeſt, I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have ‘ need of nothing; and knoweſt not that thou art wret‘ ched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked.’ No repentance can be where there is no humiliation, and there can be no humiliation while people are puffed up with a conceit of themſelves. Publicans and harlots will enter into the kingdom of heaven before ſuch ſelf-conceited profeſſors. Whenever the Spirit of the Lord takes a dealing with ſuch perſons, and diſcovers to them the ſignal miſcarriages in their life, the fulneſs of ſin, &c. that ſwelling conceit of ſweet ſelf will fall away as ever the ſnow melts in a ſunſhine day. They that look on themſelves as among the chief of ſaints, will ſee themſelves the chief of ſinners.

2. Look into yourſelves, if ye would loath yourſelves and repent. Hence ſaid Iſaiah, chap. vi. 5. ‘ Wo is ‘ me, for I am undone, becauſe I am a man of unclean ‘ lips.’ Things may be going all wrong in the houſe, and the maſter not know it, while he is a ſtranger at home. Many a poor ſoul is pining away in its iniquity, and running with loathſome ſpiritual ſores, threatening its ruin, while in the mean time they are mightily in love with themſelves, and fond of their own condition, like a miſerable man that is happy in a dream. But heavy will the wakening of ſuch be.

3. laſtly, Sin muſt needs be a very loathſome thing in the eyes of a penitent, ſince it makes him loath himſelf. Alas! many times we love that in ourſelves which we loath in others. But when one loaths himſelf for his ſin againſt a holy, gracious God, it is an argument that that ſoul is heartily out with ſin.

Fifthly and laſtly, In true humiliation there is a penitent confeſſion of ſin. Hence is that exhortation, Jer. iii. 13. ‘ Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou ‘ haſt tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord thy God,’ &c. This is the way that penitent ſinners have always ſought pardon and eaſe to their conſciences in: Pſal. xxxii. 5. ‘ I ‘ acknowledged my ſin unto thee, and mine iniquity I ‘ have not hid: I ſaid I will confeſs my tranſgreſſions un‘ to the Lord; and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ‘ ſin.’ Confeſſion of ſin is the vomit of ſin, whereby the ſweet morſel is caſt up again; and it is the vent of real ſorrow, ſhame, and ſelf-abhorrence. And when the heart is looſed to it, the man becomes like the fiſh that is boiled in the water which it ſwimmed in.

This confeſſion is to be according to the nature of the offence. If the ſin be a ſecret one, a confeſſion to God in ſecret is ſufficient. If it be a private offence, the confeſſion is to be ſo too; James v. 16. 'Confeſs your faults one to another.' If it be a public offence, giving public ſcandal, the confeſſion is to be public alſo; 1 Tim. v. 20. 'Them that ſin rebuke before all, that others alſo may fear.' So penitent David left his confeſſion in record, for the church's edification. And ſo did the apoſtle Paul, 1 Tim. i. 13. And the reaſon is evident, ſince by ſin God's honour is impaired, and we can repair it no other way, but by confeſſing it with ſorrow, ſhame, &c. the confeſſion muſt be according to the nature of the offence, elſe the wrong done to the honour of God is not repaired by it. And in the private and public confeſſion, God is our party, and not men only, as well as in the ſecret one.

Now, confeſſion is a neceſſary part of humiliation. If the hard heart be looſed to be truly humbled for ſin, it follows of courſe, that the tongue will be looſed to confeſs it. Hence confeſſion is put for the whole of humiliation, yea, of repentance, Hoſ. v. 15. 'I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence.' 1 John i. 9. 'If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful, and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs.' Confeſſion of ſin hath two parts,

1. Self accuſing. God has given a law, the ſinner has broke it; the penitent confeſſeth his tranſgreſſion with ſhame and ſorrow, to the honour of the Lawgiver. He cannot hide it, he dares not deny it; his ſoul is humbled, and therefore he confeſſeth it, Pſal. li. 3. 'I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions: and my ſin is ever before me.' He approves of the law as holy, juſt, and good, and diſapproves of the tranſgreſſion. Thus the morſel that was ſweet in the mouth, turning bitter in the belly, is vomited up.

2. Self-condemning. Hence ſaid the returning prodigal, Luke xv. 18, 19. 'Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy ſon.' The penitent looks to the law, and the demerit of his ſin, reads his own doom, and paſſeth ſentence on himſelf. He owns that all the evil he ſmarts under for the preſent, is juſt and righteous with God; Dan. ix. 14. 'Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works which he doth: for we obeyed not his voice.' If his broken bones pain him, he will own that it is juſt. If his ſin find him out, ſo that he read it in his puniſhment, he will acknowledge that it is a juſt contrivance; and that he deſerves to ſink under eternal wrath for it, ſaying with the afflicted church, 'It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe his compaſſions fail not,' Lam. iii. 22. He will ſay, that God may juſtly take the filthy garments of his ſin, cover them with brimſtone, wrap him up in them, and caſt him into the pit, Pſal. li. 4.

Now, this confeſſion ſhould be ſincere, full, very particular, free, and accompanied with forſaking.

Uſe 1. Hiding and covering of ſin, and refuſing to confeſs it in the way that God calls for a confeſſion, is a ſign of an heart not humbled for it: Prov. xxviii. 13. 'He that covereth his ſins, ſhall not proſper: but whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy.' Many in our day falling into public ſcandals by the works of darkneſs, put on a forehead of braſs, and refuſe to confeſs them for the glory of God, cheating themſelves with that, that they will confeſs their ſins to God, but not to men. But little do they conſider, that by that means they put a bar in their own way to pardon, while by reſolute lying they cover one ſin with another, and by refuſing to honour God at his call. Nor do they conſider the weight of that word ſtanding in the way of their peace with God, while they refuſe to remove the ſcandal, that ſo they may be reconciled to the church: Matth. xviii. 17, 18. 'If he ſhall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican. Verily I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven.' It is true, it is but a word: yea, but it is God's word, that will be more terrible to an awakened conſcience, than any puniſhment men can inflict.

2. They that ſhun to ſee their ſins, that they may confeſs them, cannot repent of them, Jer. ix. 6, 7. 'Thine habitation is in the midſt of deceit, through deceit they refuſe to know me, ſaith the Lord. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how ſhall I do for the daughter of my people?' It is true, there are ſins which we cannot ſo ſee in ourſelves as to confeſs them particularly; but in that caſe the ſoul does not refuſe conviction, as Pſal. xix. 12. 'Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults.' But when one keeps the ſweet morſel under his tongue, and has no will to ſee the evil of it, leſt he ſhould be obliged to confeſs it before the Lord, this is quite another caſe, and ſpeaks a deceit of the heart, holding faſt ſin, and refuſing to let it go.

3. laſtly, Labour to be ſincere, full, free, &c. in confeſſing of your ſins. We are in debt to the juſtice of God, we cannot pay our debt; let us confeſs our debt, to prevent a purſuit, and that we may be capable to pray for forgiveneſs of it, which otherwiſe we cannot be. O, if we had a due ſenſe and ſorrow for our ſins, this would like an overflowing flood, bear down before them all thoſe things which now hamper us in confeſſing our ſins.

Thus far of humiliation, the firſt part of repentance.

2dly, I come now to the ſecond thing, viz. the returning of the ſoul unto God from ſin. This is the completing of repentance. Whatever ſenſe of ſin, ſhame, ſorrow, &c. for it one have, if it end not in returning to God, it is naught. It is under this notion that repentance is ſo often called for in the Old Teſtament, Return, turn ye. And it may be well put for the whole of repentance: for,

Firſt, The impenitent ſinner is out of himſelf, out of his wits; but by repentance he returns and comes to himſelf. Hence we read, that the prodigal, Luke xv. 17. came to himſelf. There is never a ſoul that is brought to repentance, but there is as great a change upon him, as on a madman that is returned to his ſound mind. He has quite other notions of things than he had before; he looks upon his ſinful courſes as the effects of ſpiritual frenzy. This is the firſt part of repentance, namely, humiliation.

Secondly, The impenitent ſinner is out of his place, like a wandering bird: Prov. xxvii. 8. 'As a bird that wandereth from her neſt: ſo is a man that wandereth from his place.' And ſo the ſoul is out of its reſt, and out of its duty. Adam ſhook himſelf and all his race out of their reſt, and out of that they wander up and down in the devil's common. Repentance is the ſinner's returning to bis place again, to take up his place again in God's houſe among his ſervants. This is the ſecond part of repentance. And whenever the ſoul comes to itſelf, it will come to God again. The grace of God finds the ſinner, as the angel found Hagar, Gen. xvi. 8, 9. and as Paul found Oneſimus, Phil. 10, 11, 12. Now, in this returning, according to the two terms,

I. There is a turning from ſin; Ezek. xiv. 6. 'Repent, and turn from your idols, and turn away your faces from all your abominations,' 2 Tim. ii. 19. 'Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity.' Pſal. xxxiv. 14. 'Depart from evil.' The ſinner changes his courſe, and gives up with his former luſts. The penitent ſinner is like a miſled traveller, who finding himſelf wrong, will go no farther on, but leave the wrong way, and ſeek the right one. To repent of ſin, and yet continue in the practice of it, is a contradiction. No; the true penitent ceaſes from ſin, he gives over his work in the ſervice of ſin and luſt, Iſ. i. 16. He forſakes his former ways, chap. lv. 7. And though ſin remains in him, yet it reigns not as before. If the queſtion be, How the penitent turns from ſin, ſince he is daily offending, and ſin abides in him, while he is here? I anſwer,

1. True penitents turn from it in their heart and affection. There is a bond in the impenitent ſtate, whereby the ſinner's heart is knit to his luſts, as ever the ſucking child's heart is to the breaſt, which he can by no means want. Repentance looſeth that bond; Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall 'deliver me from the body of this death!' So though ſin cleaves to the ſoul, yet the ſoul cleaves not to it as formerly. It hangs on him, it is true, but only as the chains on the captive, which are his burden; as the grave-cloaths on Lazarus raiſed, which he is working to put off. Thus repentance makes a change of the heart, And,

1ſt, His eſteem of ſin is turned to deſpite. His judgment is ſet againſt it, Iſa. ii. 20. 'In that day a man 'ſhall caſt his idols of ſilver, and his idols of gold, which 'they made, each one for himſelf to worſhip, to the 'moles and to the bats.' What he approved before, now he condemns: for the ſcales are turned, and what was higheſt before is now loweſt. Grace and holineſs get the aſcendant of ſin and wickedneſs in his eſteem. Thoſe he counted moſt happy ſometimes, becauſe they took the greateſt liberty in ſinful courſes, he now accounts moſt miſerable, as ſlaves to ſin, and in the road to deſtruction; and therefore takes up Joſhua's reſolution, chap. xxiv. 15. 'As for me and my houſe we will ſerve 'the Lord.'

2dly, His love of ſin is turned to hatred of it, Ezek. xiv. 6. forecited, Pſal. cxix. 113. 'I hate vain thoughts.' Verſe 104. 'I hate every falſe way.' It was good in his eyes before, better than the favour of God, and communion with him. He knew nothing good and deſirable but the world and luſts, and what might ſatisfy the corrupt cravings of the ſoul. But repentance turns his ſoul againſt it, and he hates it as an evil thing, as the worſt of evils, worſe than ſuffering and afflictions. Were he left to his choice without fear of puniſhment, he would never chuſe it; for he hates it for itſelf, its contrariety to God's nature and will.

3dly, His liking of ſin is turned to loathing of it. Hence repentance is called a caſting away of ſin, Ezek. xviii. 31. as one would do ſome filthy thing that he cannot endure to have near him. For the penitent looks not only on ſin as an ill thing, but as a loathſome thing which his heart ſtands at, Iſa. xxx. 22. And this is the ground of that ſelf-loathing which the penitent is filled with.

Laſtly, His cleaving to ſin is turned into a longing to be rid of it, Rom. vii. 24. The man longs to be free of it, as ever the priſoner for the opening of his priſon-doors, the captive for his being ſet at liberty, and the dropping off of his chains. It is a burden on his back, which he grones under, a ſickneſs to his ſoul, that he would fain have the cure of. And therefore Chriſt with all his ſalvation is lovely in his eyes; his ſanctifying Spirit, as well as his juſtifying blood.

2. They turn from it in their life and converſation. He that ſtood in the way of ſinners before, now leaves it, when once the grace of God toucheth the heart, Iſa. lv. 7. The penitent not only has a pure heart, but clean hands. Repentance will make a viſible change on one's life; for it ſets men to mortify the members of the body of death, Rom. viii. 13. to refuſe compliance with luſts and temptations, Tit. ii. 12. to ſtarve the luſts of the fleſh, Rom. xiii. 14. and to nail the body of ſin with all its members to the croſs of Chriſt, Gal. v. 24. And,

1ſt, They turn from the groſs pollutions of the outward man, Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. An elect ſoul before converſion may be a habitual profane perſon, as well as others: but if he may be ſo after converſion, where is the difference betwixt Chriſt's ſheep and the devil's goats? It is true, they may make groſs ſlips, as David and Peter did; but they do not lie in them, they recover again by repentance. But a profane life is the mark of an impenitent ſtate, Gal. v. 21. And it is a wonder how men can pretend to repentance, while they live in the habitual practice of drunkenneſs, ſwearing, Sabbath-breaking, lying, diſhoneſty, and other groſs pollutions of the outward man, where one would think the profane devil is not ſo much as gone out, far leſs caſt out.

2dly, They become tender with reſpect to the ſins of common infirmity, labouring to make conſcience of their words and actions, Acts xxiv. 16. What others account light of, they will ſtand at a diſtance from, as having felt the ſmart of ſin; and that not only before the world, but even in ſecret, where no eye ſees but God's. They will ſtand aloof from temptations, and even from the appearance of evil: and wherein they are overtaken through the frailty of the fleſh, they will mourn for it before the Lord.

3. In reſpect both of heart and life. They turn againſt ſin to oppoſe and reſiſt it, in the inner and outward man, as taking now the contrary ſide to the devil, the world, and the fleſh. The ſpiritual combat is begun in the true penitent, Gal. v. 17. The war with ſin is proclaimed and begun, which never ends till death. They revolt from, caſt off the yoke, and ſtand up againſt their old maſters, 2 Tim. ii. 19.

1ſt, They reſiſt the motions of ſin in their hearts, and endeavour after heart purity, as well as life purity, Pſal. cxix. 113. 'I hate vain thoughts: but thy law do I love.' The phariſaical profeſſor may cleanſe the outſide of the platter, while he is little troubled about its being within full of ravening. But the hardeſt work a gracious ſoul has againſt ſin, is with the heart, with what the world neither ſees nor can ſee in him. And the guiding of the heart is the hardeſt piece of management in his religion.

2dly, They reſiſt the outbreakings of ſin in the life; Pſal. xviii. 23. 'I was alſo upright before him: and I 'kept myſelf from mine iniquity.' They ſee they are in a world where ſnares are thick laid; they ſee their own weakneſs, and how ready they are to be intrapped, and therefore labour to be on their guard, leſt they be carried away with the ſtream. Hence they are afraid of temptations, and therefore labour to ſhut their eyes from beholding vanity: ſometimes fearing to fall one day by the hand of temptation, and therefore longing to be beyond the reach of ſin.

4. and laſtly, Becauſe their turning from ſin is never perfect till death, therefore ſo long they are ay turning, and renewing their repentance, John xiii. 10. They are not true penitents who look on it as the work only of ſome days or weeks, at the ſoul's firſt converſion to God. A true penitent will ay be repenting, as long as he is ſinning. He ſees that he is often falling into the mire, and therefore muſt be often waſhing; daily contracting new debt, therefore muſt be daily crying for forgiveneſs. And the more heinous his after miſcarriages be, the longer he lives ſecure, his repentance will be the more bitter when he riſeth up again.

Now, this turning from ſin has theſe properties.

1. It is voluntary, as ſpringing from an inward principle ſet up in the heart againſt ſin, Job xlii. 6. 'I abhor myſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.' The penitent does not only caſt away ſin as a live-coal out of his boſom, that would burn him, but as ſome loathſome thing, that would defile him. Some turn from their ſins againſt their will; they part with their ſins as Phaltiel did with his unlawful wife Michal, 2 Sam. iii. 15. They dwell in the tents of ſin, till the rigging tree break, and there is no abiding longer there for them; they part with their ſins, as the covetous man with his riches at death, when, nill he will he, he muſt let it go. But true repentance is a turning from ſin out of choice: and a forced reformation neither is ſincere nor will laſte, Pſal. lxxviii. 34.

2. It is ſincere, as being a turning from ſin as ſin, a turning from it becauſe it is turning away from God, a turning from it for its contrariety to God's holy nature and law, Luke xv. 18. The man leaves his ſin, not from the inferior motives only of danger to himſelf by it, but from the higher motives, namely, becauſe it is offenſive to God, diſhonours his Son, grieves his Spirit, tranſgreſſes his law, and defaces his image. If your turning from ſin proceed not from theſe motives, God will never regard it, as acceptable in his ſight. It is done for ſelf, not for God; and God will never be the reward of that work whereof he is not the end.

Queſt. What ſhould one do with reſpect to thoſe ſins he has turned from, from theſe lower motives of ſelf, or thoſe ſins that have left him before, before he left them? Anſw. Do not turn back to them; but do with them as they uſe to do with thoſe that die by their own hands, bury them diſgracefully, and throw ſtones on their grave. Look on them and loath them, riſe higher in your motives to forſake them than before. Ye left them for your own ſake, put them farther away for the ſake of God's honour. Set them before your eyes again, and ſee how provoking they have been to a holy God, how diſhonouring to his Son, &c.; repent and mourn over them on theſe accounts. And then your turning from them will be ſincere.

3. This turning from ſin is univerſal: Pſal. cxix. 104. 'I hate every falſe way.' Ezek. xviii. 31. 'Caſt away 'from you all your tranſgreſſions.' Whoever turns ſincerely from one ſin, turns from all known ſin whatſoever; becauſe the reaſon that moves the true penitent, is to be found in all as well as any one. Partial reformation is not ſincere: for God requires the whole heart, and will not be ſerved with halves. Every ſin is a deadly wound to the ſoul; and therefore though many be cured, if but one remain uncured, the man is a dead man by that one: Matth. v. 29. 'If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee: for it is 'profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into 'hell.' A drop of poiſon will make a whole cup of good wine deadly, and one ſin retained, will render all our other reformation naught: as Abimelech the ſon of Jerubaal's concubine was the death of all his ſeventy ſons by his wives except one.

4. It is ſpeedy without delays: Pſal. cxix. 60. 'I 'made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.' As long as a man is undetermined to turn from his ſin, or delays to do it, his repentance is not ſincere. It is an evidence that the lance of humiliation has not gone deep enough, when the filthy matter does not preſently ſpring forth. A man whoſe heart is truly touched with a penitent ſenſe of ſin, will delay as long the flinging a burning-coal out of his boſom, as the caſting away of his ſin. No; when it goes to the quick, it muſt off preſently; though it were an offending right hand, it muſt be cut off preſently; though it were an offending right eye, it muſt be preſently plucked out.

5. laſtly, This turning from ſin is thorough; it makes complete work evangelically, though not legally. It was a flaw in Judah's repentance, that ſhe 'turned not 'unto the Lord with her whole heart, but feignedly,' Jer. iii. 10.; and in Ephraim's, that he 'mixed himſelf 'among the people,' and was 'a cake not turned,' Hoſ. vii. 8. Men turn thoroughly from ſin in theſe four reſpects.

1ſt, The true penitent ſticks at no known ſin, but turns from all without exception, even thoſe ſins that are deareſt and neareſt to them, and which they have been moſt eaſily beſet with, Heb. xii. 1. 'I kept myſelf from 'mine iniquity,' Pſal. xviii. 23. This turning from ſin is never thorough, till it reach the ſin that is the ſin of one's conſtitution, the ſin that is the ſin which moſt attends his calling, ſtations, and relations wherein he ſtands; the ſin that he has moſt frequent and ſtrongeſt temptations unto. That is the predominant evil which the heart muſt be looſed from, the right hand and right eye ſin, the one thing lacking, which mars all other things, Mark vii. 21. Unleſs there be a turning from, a warring with this, it is all wrong; though indeed they may ſometimes loſe as well as win in the battle.

2dly, He turns from that which is the inſnaring hook in any of his ſins, the handle whereby it caught hold of him, Pſal. cxxxi. 2. Pharaoh would have been content to let Iſrael go, ſo be they would have left their little ones, which he was ſure would have brought them again. And Satan will let people turn from ſin for a time, while they retain a reigning love to the bewitching thing that is in a ſinful courſe. For while it is ſo, the tree is indeed cut, but the root is left in the ground, and will grow again.

3dly, He turns from the occaſions of ſin, Ezek. xiv. 6. Wherefore David prays, 'Turn away mine eyes 'from beholding vanity;' and Solomon gives advice in the caſe of drunkenneſs, Prov. xxiii. 31. 'Look not thou 'upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itſelf aright.' It is vain to pretend to repent and turn from ſin, while men do not watch againſt the occaſions of it, and wreſtle againſt them, as againſt the ſin itſelf. They that in a ſiege mind really to defend the town, they will defend the out works as long as they can; wilfully to let the enemy in there, ſpeaks treachery. Much lies in this point for reformation: Prov. iv. 14, 15. 'Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of 'evil men. Avoid it, paſs not by it, turn from it, and 'paſs away.'

Laſtly, He turns from the enjoyment of the fruits of his ſin. To pretend to turn from ſin, and yet to feed ſweetly on the fruits of it, is an abſolutely vain pretence. When ſin itſelf is truly quit, the profit of it is given up with. This the prophet teacheth, Iſa. xxxiii. 15. 'He 'that walketh righteouſly, and ſpeaketh uprightly, he 'that deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſions, that ſhaketh his 'hands from holding of bribes, that ſtoppeth his ears 'from hearing of blood, and ſhutteth his eyes from ſeeing evil,' &c. This is ſo evident, that even Judas in his repentance, ſuch as it was, could no longer brook the reward of his iniquity, Matth. xxviii. 3. A philoſopher had bought a pair of ſhoes, but had not paid the price of them; the tradeſman died, the philoſopher thought the money was gained; but his conſcience cauſed him bring back the money, and throw it into the ſhop; Take it, ſays he, thou art alive to me, while dead to all the world beſides. Hence two things belong to this part of repentance.

(1.) Reſtitution, or reſtoring the thing again, which has been ſinfully and wrongouſly taken away from others. He that can do it, and will not, cannot repent of that ſin: for he wilfully feeds on the fruit of that ſin; and that it is a continuing in it, inconſiſtent with turning from it. And ſince there is no pardon of that ſin which a man does not repent of, it is a maxim in divinity, Non remittitur niſi reſtituitur, namely, to a perſon that is able, but unwilling to do it. Hence Zaccheus proves himſelf a true penitent by reſtitution, Luke xix. 8. And one may as well think a thief may repent in the time he is feeding on what he has ſtolen from his neighbour, as that one may repent of what in other caſes he has unjuſtly taken from his neighbour, and can, but will not reſtore. When lovers part, they give back their tokens; and ſo, when a ſinner parts with his ſin, he reſtores all that he had unjuſtly taken from others.

(2.) Reparation as far as may be, in thoſe caſes wherein proper reſtitution cannot be made: as in the caſe of unjuſt wounding our neighbour's honour, reputation, peace, quiet and contentment, &c. Hence is that exhortation, Jam. v. 16. 'Confeſs your faults one 'to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be 'healed.' One may as well pretend to repent and go on in ſin, as wilfully to refuſe this and repent of the ſin. The like reparation is neceſſary in thoſe ſcandalous ſins, whereby the honour of God is impaired before the world, religion wounded, and expoſed to the contempt and ſcorn of profane men, and the hearts of the godly ſaddened. To repent of ſuch ſins, and yet wilfully to refuſe the way whereby the honour of God, and the credit of religion, might in ſome meaſure be repaired, is impoſſible. One may as well pretend to repent of his wounding a man while he ſtands looking on him bleeding to death, and will not, though it is in his power, bind up his wounds.

Uſe 1. Hence we may ſee what is the proper way to follow out the deſign of our congregational faſt, namely, to turn from our ſins which have provoked the Lord to wrath againſt us. For humiliation without reformation can do little ſervice. Let each of us lay our hands to our heart, and conſider what has been the coal that we have caſt in to raiſe this flame, and heartily turn from theſe things. If ſo, we would readily wear with thankfulneſs the bleſſings obtained by prayers.

2. All the trouble, grief, and ſorrow that men have for their ſin is little worth, if it iſſue not in turning from ſin. For men to be ſighing, but ſtill going backward, is not repentance, but of that ſort which may be carried on in hell, through eternity. If turning from be not joined to mourning for ſin, it is unſanctified ſorrow, that will neither be acceptable to God, nor profitable to our ſouls.

3. Turning from ſin outwardly, while the heart remains glewed to it, is not repentance either. It is an eaſy thing to reform outwardly; but the great buſineſs lies in getting the heart weaned from the world and its luſts. If we would be ſatisfied as to the truth of our repentance, we muſt likewiſe examine the motives prevailing with us to turn from ſin: for the mean and low motives that riſe no higher than ourſelves, our own advantage, eaſe, ſafety, &c. will never denominate us true penitents.

4. Repentance is not the work of a day or a year, but the work of our whole lives. For ſo turning from ſin is. Sin follows us, while we flee from it; often does it overtake us, and ſo we muſt renew our flight. The whole life of a Chriſtian is a war; in that war are many battles, ſometimes the Chriſtian gains the day, and ſometimes he loſes. If he loſe, he muſt renew the battle: if he win, he muſt purſue the victory, and lay his account with a new engagement. The great comfort is, that though he may loſe a battle, yet he ſhall be victorious in the war: ‘The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under his feet ſhortly,’ Rom. xvi. 20.

5. Laſtly, See here the neceſſity of turning from ſin. Except ye repent, ſays the text, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. Now, if ye do not turn from ſin, ye do not repent; therefore if ye turn not from it by repentance, ye ſhall periſh. Our ſins or our ſouls muſt go. Turn, or burn in the fire of God's wrath is the choice. Let us then return ſpeedily and thoroughly from all our iniquities, ſo ſhall they not be our ruin.

II. In repentance there is a returning unto God: Hoſ. vi. 1. ‘Come, and let us return unto the Lord.’ This is the term to which the ſinner comes back. Sin is a departing from God, repentance is a coming back to him again. It is a coming back, like that of a run-away ſervant to his maſter, returning to his place and duty in the family. Sin carried away mankind from God two ways.

1. Sin carried men away from God as a portion wherein to reſt. He is all ſufficient to himſelf and to his creatures, and none but he is ſo. Sin carried man away from God to the creature for happineſs and ſatisfaction: hence ſays Jehovah, Jer. iii. 13. ‘My people have committed two evils; they have forſaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out ciſterns, broken ciſterns that can hold no water.’ There he ſeeks a reſt to his heart. By faith man returns to God as a portion, unites with him again through Chriſt, and takes up his everlaſting reſt in him. Thus he returns as the dove to the ark, Iſa. lx. 8. ‘Who are theſe that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?’

2. Sin carried man away from God as a Lord and Maſter, to whom he owes obedience. In this reſpect man returns to God by repentance, returning to his duty, Pſal. cxix. 59. ‘I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies;’ as Hagar was by the angel ſent back to Sarah, Gen. xvi. 9. Men turning from God, turn their backs on his laws, and make their own luſts their laws; but the repenting ſinner turns back to the laws of God, Pſal. cxix. 59. forecited. He has ſlipt his neck out of the yoke of the commands of Chriſt, but he comes and takes it on again, never to throw it off more, Matth. xi. 29. He has gone off the road, the ſtrait way; but he comes back, and bids an eternal farewell to the broad way. And there is here, 1ſt, A return of the ſoul to God himſelf, 1 Kings xviii. 37. conſiſting in the heart's turning to the loving and liking of the Lord as a Lord and maſter. Sinners departing from God, not only miſlike their ſervice, but the maſter and his houſe: Luke xix. 14. ‘His citizens hated him, and ſent a meſſage after him, ſaying, We will not have this man to reign over us.’ They are filled with prejudices againſt him, there is a natural averſion in the heart to him, they cannot away with ſubjection to him. Hence ‘they ſay unto God, Depart from us; for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways,’ Job xxi. 14. But in repentance that averſion is cured, and the ſoul inclines and moves towards him in heart and affections. This conſiſts in three things.

(1.) The ſoul is brought to eſteem the Lord worthy to be ſerved and pleaſed in all things. The name of God is to the penitent a worthy name, James ii. 7. The ſoul ſees the tranſcendent glory and excellency of God, worthy of all adoration and obedience; and ſo ſlights and diſdains all other maſters, as unworthy of the ſervice of an immortal ſoul.

(2.) The ſoul chuſeth him as its only Lord and maſter, ſaying, as in Iſa. xxvi. 13. ‘O Lord our God, other lords beſides thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name.’ This was Joſhua's choice, chap. xxiv. 15. ‘As for me and my houſe we will ſerve the Lord.’ The enlightened mind beholds his glory, the glory and excellency of himſelf, his image, laws, ordinances, and ſervice; and the renewed will conſents and cleaves to him. It has tried many maſters, ſerving divers luſts, Tit. iii. 3. but could never have ſatisfaction in the ſervice of any of them, and therefore ſays, as Hoſ. ii. 7. ‘I will go and return to my firſt huſband, for then was it better with me than now.’

(3.) The ſoul looks upon the ſervice of God as its great happineſs. Hence ſaid the prodigal, ‘when he came to himſelf, How many hired ſervants of my father's have bread enough and to ſpare, and I periſh with hunger!’ Luke xv. 17. And therefore the ſaints are found declaring them happy who are moſt employed in his ſervice, as the queen of Sheba ſaid of Solomon's ſervants, Pſal. lxv. 4. ‘Bleſſed is the man whom thou chuſeſt, and cauſeſt to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts.’ And lxxxiv. 4. ‘Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe: they will be ſtill praiſing thee.’ And till the ſoul come to this, to account the Lord's ſervice the only true freedom and happineſs, though they may take up his ſervice, they will not abide with it, becauſe they do not like their Maſter.

2dly, There is in this returning a return of the ſoul to its duty to God. Hence ſaid Saul, ‘Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?’ Acts ix. 6. Whoever returns to God, comes home as a ſervant to enter to work: for idlers about God's houſe may be nominal ſervants, but real ones they cannot be. God's ſervants have higher relations which they ſtand in unto him; but all of them have duty annexed to them. Are they married to Chriſt? they muſt bring forth fruit, Rom. vii. 4. Are they friends? they muſt do whatſoever he commands them, John xv.

14. See Mal. i. 6. Now, the penitent returns to his duty in theſe two reſpects.

(1.) The penitent returns to his duty in his heart. He is (1.) reconciled to the whole law of God, and the whole yoke of Chriſt, ſo far as it is known to him to be his law and yoke, Pſal. cxix. 6. ‘ I have reſpect unto all thy ‘ commandments.’ He has a love and liking of the duties of piety towards God, and righteouſneſs towards men. Though there remain in him a contradicting principle, yet he can ſay, as Rom. vii. 22. ‘ I delight ‘ in the law of God, after the inward man.’ The heart enmity againſt the law and the power of godlineſs is removed, and nothing is ſo deſirable to him as to be holy as God is holy. (2.) He has a full and fixed purpoſe of new obedience: Pſal. cxix. 57. ‘ O Lord I have ſaid, ‘ that I would keep thy words.’ Verſ. 112. ‘ I have ‘ inclined mine heart to perform thy ſtatutes alway, e‘ven unto the end.’ He returns with a purpoſe never to be what he has been; to purſue holineſs, to enter upon and keep the way of duty, whatever be the hardſhips and difficulties he may meet with in it. And this purpoſe is for to day, not for to-morrow only; not to delay a minute, but preſently to fall in with every known duty, as knowing there is no time for delaying.

(2.) The penitent returns to his duty in both heart and life. He is brought to ſincere endeavours after new obedience, 2 Cor. vii. 11. ‘ Behold, this ſelf-ſame thing, ‘ that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, what carefulneſs it ‘ wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourſelves, yea, ‘ what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement ‘ deſire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! in all things ‘ ye have approved yourſelves to be clear in this matter.’ Purpoſes without endeavours are but fair bloſſoms without fruit, which will never prove a penitent. If the lame man be cured, though not perfectly cured, he will riſe and walk as he can. It is true, while here we can do nothing perfectly well; but the true penitent will endeavour to do all, and aim at no leſs than perfection. Hence ſaid Paul, ‘ I preſs toward the mark, for the prize ‘ of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus,’ Phil. iii. 14. So the penitent returning to his duty,

[1.] Returns to the practice of every known duty. Hence ſaid David, ‘ I have reſpect unto all thy com‘mandments,’ Pſal. cxix. 6. He labours to know what is duty, and is willing to know it; and when known, endeavours to perform it. He puts hand to external and internal obedience; to ſerve God in heart and life too; to perform his duty to God and to his neighbour; perſonal and relative, ſecret, private, and public.

[2.] Returns to ſpirituality in every duty: Phil. iii. 3. ‘ For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God ‘ in the ſpirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no ‘ confidence in the fleſh.’ The true penitent will not ſit in the carcaſe of duties, but will endeavour to get in to thoſe unſeen things where lies the life and ſoul of duties; namely, to have his heart oiled with love to God as the principle of his obedience, touched with regard to the honour of God as his end, raiſed above ſelfiſh ends and deſigns, and performing all in faith, leaning on the Lord for ſtrength.

Now, this returning to the Lord is,

1. A ſincere returning, not feigned and hypocritical, with the whole heart, Jer. iii. 10. Hypocrites are ſaid to have a heart and a heart, a divided heart, one for God, and another for their luſts. But the Lord ſays in this caſe, ‘ If ye take me, let theſe go away. For no man ‘ can ſerve two maſters.’ It is a returning to him to abide with him for ever, as Oneſimus to Philemon, verſ. 15. The penitent, like the ſervant under the law, his ear is nailed to God’s door-poſts, to ſerve him for ever. To return for a time is naught.

2. A voluntary return. The penitent comes back with heart and good will, Pſal. cx. 3. ‘ Thy people ſhall ‘ be willing in the day of thy power:’ as one that is going back to a good and honourable maſter, and will ſerve him with gladneſs, Pſal. c. 2. ‘ Serve the Lord ‘ with gladneſs.’ They that are only driven back to God, by heavy rods or ſharp convictions, will come away again; yet people may be driven at firſt to God, who ſeeing his glory and excellency, and the deſirableneſs of his ſervice afterwards, do voluntarily and heartily yield themſelves to him.

3. A ſpeedy return, Pſal. cxix. 60. ‘ I made haſte and ‘ delayed not to keep thy commandments.’ They that are ſincere will not delay for a moment; they will make no truce with ſin. The moment wherein true repentance touches the heart, is the preciſe term of going home to God; for they know that if they delay a moment longer, that moment may be the fatal moment to them.

4. A thorough return. The ſoul ſticks at no known duty, but embraces all, be it never ſo hard, and unpleaſant to fleſh and blood. Hence ſaid the Lord of David, Acts xiii. 22. ‘ I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe; a ‘ man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfil all my ‘ will.’ The penitent puts a blank in God’s hand, ſaying, ‘ Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Speak, ‘ Lord,’ ſays he, ‘ thy ſervant heareth.’ He is for the will of God, without diſputing. For God is an abſolute maſter, and is therefore to be obeyed without reſerve.

Uſe of this point. It lets us ſee, that negative reformation is not ſufficient for repentance. One muſt not only turn from ſin, but turn unto God. We muſt not only put away evil, but take into us the contrary good: Iſ. i. 16, 17. ‘ Waſh ye, make you clean, put away the ‘ evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceaſe to ‘ do evil, learn to do well,’ &c. We muſt not only give up with ſuch and ſuch luſts, but be endued with the contrary graces. Some people reform from the evils of their life, but they do not go forward to the poſitive ways of holineſs. They ſatisfy themſelves, with the proud Phariſee, that they ‘ are not unjuſt, no extor‘tioners,’ &c.; but, alas! they do not conſider, that when the houſe, which the devil goes out of is empty, he returns with ſeven ſpirits more wicked than himſelf, and ſo the laſt ſtate of ſuch a perſon is worſe than the firſt, Matth. xii. 44, 45.

The APPLICATION.

I come now to the APPLICATION of the whole. And here I would ſound the alarm in the ears of impenitent ſinners, to repent, and turn from their ſins unto God. O ſinners, repent, repent; ye are gone away to your luſts and idols, turn from them; ye have turned your back on God, turn to him again. In proſecuting this call to repentance, I ſhall,

1. Endeavour to convince you of the need you have to repent.
2. Lay before you a train of motives to repentance.
3. Shew you the great hindrances of repentance. And,
4. Give directions in order to your obtaining repentance.

I. I ſhall endeavour to convince you of the need you have to repent, to make way for motives to it their taking with you. There are three ſorts of perſons that will readily ſtave off all calls to repentance.

1. One ſays, I repent of my ſins daily. Well were it with thee, if it were ſo. Sure, there is need for it. But none are ſo ready to pretend to this, as thoſe that never yet knew what it is to repent. If ruing the ill thou haſt done, a ſigh for it, and a ſhort-winded wiſh for mercy, be repentance, it is eaſy work. But it is not ſo. Thou canſt not repent with a hale heart; that heart of thine muſt be rent for ſin, and rent from it; thou muſt turn from ſin unto God in all duties of obedience. If ye pretend then to repentance, bring forth fruits meet for it. But to ſuch pretended penitents we may ſay, as Samuel to Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 14. ‘ What meaneth then ‘ this bleating of the ſheep, and the lowing of the oxen?’

2. Another ſays, I have repented already. But O conſider, repentance is not the work of a day, but of thy whole lifetime, ſince thou art never free of ſin, Jer. viii. 6. New provocations require new repentance; nay, old ſins are not to be forgotten. Hence ſaid Moſes, Deut. ix. 7. ‘Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedſt the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderneſs.’ And hence prays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. xxv. 7. ‘Remember not the ſins of my youth, nor my tranſgreſſions.’ And if thou repent of them thoroughly, thou wilt be aſhamed, and the wound will bleed afreſh at the remembrance of them. Hence ſaid the apoſtle, Rom. vi. 21. ‘What fruit had ye in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed?’

3. Another ſees no need of repentance for him; for ſuch perſons are of that blinded generation, ‘that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not waſhed from their filthineſs,’ Prov. xxx. 12. They deny their ſin, inſtead of mourning over and confeſſing it, ſaying as ver. 20. ‘I have done no wickedneſs.’ They poſſibly keep free from the groſs pollutions of the outward man; and for the poſitive duties of religion, they either ſee no need of them, or if they do perform them too, they are blind to the corruption of their nature, and to heart-ſins, and the ſpirituality of the law of God. But ye need repentance as much as the proud Phariſee, Luke xviii. and as the apoſtle Paul, Rom. vii. 9. compared with Tit. iii. 3. But O conſider,

1ſt, Are there not many of us that never got a ſound awakening all their days? They have lived under the ſound of the goſpel, but it never broke their reſt effectually in a ſinful courſe. I will read the myſtery of your caſe, Luke xi. 21. ‘When a ſtrong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace.’ Repent then, or ye are undone.

2dly, Are there not many whoſe awakening has produced a partial change on them, but it has ended in a fearful apoſtacy from the way of God? 2 Pet. ii. 22. ‘It is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire.’ Their fair bloſſom they once had, has gone up as duſt. Repent, or your backſliding will be your ruin.

3dly, Are there not many ſleeping virgins at this day, who are in a courſe of departing from God? The life, vigour, and tenderneſs they ſometimes had, is gone; and death has ſettled down on their eye-lids, and they are turned to be of the colour of the earth. To theſe we muſt ſay, as Rev. ii. 5. ‘Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works.’

4thly, Are there not many living in known ſin? They know the particulars wherein they are wrong, and yet on they go, as an ox to the ſlaughter. Their corruptions are too ſtrong for conſcience. Ye muſt repent, or ye will periſh. Profane courſes will make a miſerable end, and one ſin retained will ruin the ſoul.

5thly, Look and ſee whether thou canſt perceive the footſteps of Chriſt's flock, or of the devil's drove, on the way which thou art going, Cant. i. 8. Is your caſe the caſe wherein the fair company walked with diſplayed banners to Canaan, or that wherein many have ſlept and ſlipt away to the pit?

6thly, Canſt thou deny but that there are many foul ſteps thou haſt made and art making? O then repent. Go no farther on; one ſtep more may put you beyond returning, Luke xiv. 24. Little knows the ſinner, how ſoon God may take the foot from him, either by clapping a withering curſe on him, as on the fig-tree, Hoſ. iv. 17. or by taking him red-hand in his ſin, and ſending him to the pit, Prov. xxix. 1. ‘He that being often reproved, hardneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy.’

II. I will lay before you a train of motives to repentance.

Mot. 1. Conſider the obligations that lie on you to repent. Sit down and conſider how manifold ties are on you to it.

1. The command of God obligeth you to it: Acts xvii. 30. ‘God commandeth all men every where to repent.’ And will ye not have regard to the ſovereign authority of him that made you? The command to repentance is one of the two great commands of the goſpel, Acts xx. 21. ‘Teſtifying both to the Jews, and alſo to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.’ This is the command which the prophets of old did ſo often inculcate, Ezek. xviii. 30. ‘Repent, and turn yourſelves from all your tranſgreſſions; ſo iniquity ſhall not be your ruin.’ This our Lord Jeſus and the Baptiſt preached, and his diſciples, ſaying, ‘Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.’ This the apoſtles preached, Acts ii. 38. ‘Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins.’ And this all along is the joint ſound of the preachers of the goſpel. So it is an old and new command too. No command is more peremptorily laid on, as in the text. As ye regard then God's authority, repent.

2. Your baptiſm obligeth you: Mark i. 4. ‘John did baptize in the wilderneſs, and preach the baptiſm of repentance, for the remiſſion of ſins.’ It is a ſolemn tie laid upon you to return to and ſerve God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: to die unto ſin, to live unto righteouſneſs. Ye have then taken on the Lord's badge; how dreadful muſt it be to continue runaways from your Maſter? Repent, then, and return, as ye would not be treated as runaways from your colours, as rebels that caſt off your allegiance ſworn to the King of heaven.

3. Your mercies oblige you in point of gratitude; Rom. ii. 4. ‘Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering; not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance?’ your common mercies, and ſpecial ones, preventing, reſtraining, &c. Every mercy is forfeited by ſin; yet ye are ſtill in God's debt, and every day a new load of favours is laid on, and theſe are ſtrong ties to repentance.

4. laſtly, Your profeſſion obligeth you. Ye profeſs yourſelves Chriſtians. If ye will name the name of Chriſt, then depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. ii. 19. Why do ye call God Father, if ye will needs do the works of the devil, (John viii. 14.) which Chriſt came to deſtroy? Do ye profeſs Chriſt your Redeemer, the Holy Ghoſt your Sanctifier? why then do ye continue in bondage to your ſin, in unholy courſes? Do ye believe every ſin deſerveth God's wrath? what madneſs is it then to be treaſuring up wrath againſt the day of wrath? Quit your profeſſion then, or quit your ſinful courſes.

Mot. 2. Seriouſly conſider what ſin is, that ye are ſo fond of, prefer to Chriſt, and for the enjoyment of it forfeit the favour of God. What do you ſee in it, that does ſo powerfully charm you? If you are taken with the profit of it, ye would conſider that no advantage will quit the coſt of the ſoul's ruin brought about by it: Matth. xvi. 26. ‘For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?’ Job xxvii. 8. ‘For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his ſoul?’ If you are taken with the pleaſure of it; that is dear bought, being purchaſed at the rate of eternal flames, which ſin will bring men to without repentance. The pleaſures of ſin are but momentary, Heb. xi. 25. And there is far more in God's ſervice, even in this world: Pſal. iv. 6, 7. ‘There be many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and wine increaſed.’ Conſider, I pray you,

1. Has not every bait a hook with it? Prov. xxiii. 31, 32. Is there not trap, gin, and ſnare in them all for you? How often have ye ſeen that there has been death in the pot, when ye have ſit down to feed your corruptions? Ye have ſnatched at the bait, but ye have not in the mean time felt yourſelves wounded with the hook? Ye have ſmelled the roſe, but have not the prickles mean while annoyed you? And how can it be otherwiſe? for ‘he that diggeth a pit, ſhall fall into it; and whoſo breaketh a hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him,’ Eccleſ. x. 8.

2. Is there any ſolid reſt in a ſinful courſe? No, ſurely: Iſa. lvii. 21. ‘There is no peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked.’ Do not your conſciences witneſs, that the ſting of guilt in the conſcience is like a dead fly in the ointment, cauſing all to be unſavoury? Is there not always a worm at the root of every ſinful gourd you ſit down under the ſhadow of? Do not the very may-be's of conſcience ſuck the ſap out of your luſts many times? Will any man ſay, that ever he found reſt to his ſoul in a courſe of departing from God? No, no; ten thouſand worlds will not ſatisfy an immortal ſoul.

3. Do not ye find ſin to be an inſatiable tyrant, like the grave and the barren womb, never ſaying, ‘It is enough?’ Iſ. lvii. 20. ‘The wicked are like the troubled ſea, when it cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt up mire and dirt.’ O but they have a hard taſk, that have living raging luſts to feed! James iv. 2, 3. ‘Ye luſt, and have not: ye kill, and deſire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, becauſe ye aſk not. Ye aſk and receive not, becauſe ye aſk amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts'. Pſal. lxxviii. 18, 19. ‘And they tempted God in their heart, by aſking meat for their luſt. Yea, they ſpake againſt God: they ſaid, Can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſs?’ The more they are indulged, the more they grow rampant; the more their thirſt is cared for, the greater thirſt is created. Hence men in a ſinful courſe go from evil to worſe.

4. Is not a ſinful courſe a moſt fooliſh courſe? No man is unfaithful to God, but he is unfaithful to himſelf, and his own intereſt and happineſs. The Lord offers to reaſon the matter with you, and to make your conſciences judge, Iſ. i. 18. ‘Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool.’ It ſtands betwixt you and temporal and eternal happineſs. It is a poiſonous cup, bringing death along with it. And how fooliſh is it for men to hug a ſerpent in their boſom, when called to throw it out; to drink a cup of poiſon, when called to throw it away; to take coals in their boſom, when it is told they will burn them; to court their own death and ruin?

5. Is not ſin the ſeparation wall betwixt God and you? Iſ. lix. 2. ‘Your iniquities have ſeparated between you and your God, and your ſins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.’ Does it not mar your comfort from the word, your confidence in the Lord, and your acceſs to God in duties? does it not make as it were a gulph betwixt heaven and you, that whatever communion others have with heaven, your unrepented of ſins lets you have none? Shall this be your choice? Sure then, ye need not wonder, if ye will not come back to God, he bid you at laſt depart from him, ‘into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.’

6. Laſtly, Conſider what will be the end thereof. Surely it will be bitterneſs in the end! Jer. ii. 19. ‘Thine own wickedneſs ſhall correct thee, and thy backſliding ſhall reprove thee: know therefore and ſee, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts.’ However pleaſant the cup ſeem to be at the brim, the dregs of it will be bitter: Prov. ix. 17, 18. ‘Stolen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant. But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her gueſts are in the depths of hell.’ However taking the entertainment be, the reckoning will be dreadful.

Mot. 3. Conſider ye muſt die: Heb. ix. 27. ‘It is appointed unto men once to die.’ Death is certain, and therefore repentance is neceſſary. O if men would realize death to themſelves, ſinners would ſoon find it neceſſary to turn over a new leaf. One hearing Gen. v. read in the church, was ſo impreſſed with thoughts of death, that he preſently betook himſelf to a new courſe of life, that he might die well. We muſt all meet with death, lie down in the grave; let us view it aforehand, and ſee how it calls us to repent. Look to thy dying hour, and to thy grave, O impenitent ſinner, and conſider theſe few things.

1. Wouldſt thou be content to die as thou liveſt? Thou liveſt in thy ſin, without God; wouldeſt thou deſire to die ſo? Many indeed entertain Balaam's wiſh, for the death of the righteous, while they care not for their life, Numb. xxiii. 10. ‘Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my laſt end be like his.’ But remember he did not get it, chap. xxxi. 8.——‘Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor they ſlew with the ſword.’ And while death is ſo uncertain, it is the hanging of an eternal weight on a hair, to look to get matters mended then, that are not mended now.

2. Conſider, what will a ſinful life look like on a deathbed? How will ye be able to look your unrepented-of guilt, and a long eternity in the face together? Ezek. xxii. 14. ‘Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be ſtrong in the days that I ſhall deal with thee? I the Lord have ſpoken it, and will do it.’ Sin ſits eaſy now on a ſleepy conſcience, while health and ſtrength laſtes, and death appears not. But when death ſtares thee in the face, and the awakened conſcience flies upon thee, it will cut thee to the heart, that thou haſt not repented before.

3. What will it be to die, and go to another world with a load of unrepented-of guilt on thy back? Look to your grave aforehand; think with yourſelves, how will it be to lie down there with your bones full of your iniquity? Is it not beſt now, to ſhake off and caſt away your tranſgreſſions, as knowing that however ye may live with them, ye cannot die with them well.

4. At a dying hour ye muſt part with the world, and the enjoyment of your luſts. The foul feaſt ye ſit at now, death will overthrow the table, and the ſad reckoning for it comes in then, and continues for ever. O riſe up now, and leave it by repentance. Part with theſe things at God's call, which ye muſt part with ere long, whether you will or not.

5. laſtly, There is no repentance in the grave, Eccleſ. ix. 10. Ye muſt repent, or ye periſh; and it is now or never. Mar matters now by an impenitent life, and let death catch you there, ye ſhall never be able to mend them more. The working time, and time of trial is over then. If the brittle threed of life were broke, which may be ſnapt aſunder in a moment, then ye are beyond the line of mercy. The candle burnt to ſnuff, ſhall be as ſoon brought to burn again, as time ſhall be recalled.

Mot. 4. Take a view of the tribunal of God, before which thou muſt appear, 2 Cor. v. 10, 11. ‘We muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſuade men.’ O ſinner, knoweſt thou not that there is a judgment to come, and how this calls thee to repent? Acts xvii. 30, 31. ‘God commandeth all men every where to repent: becauſe he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead.’ Were men to lie forever neglected, without a future reckoning, as the beaſts that periſh, they might live as they liſt, the hazard of condemnation for an eternity would not preſs them. But it is not ſo, Heb. ix. 27. ‘It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.’ Conſider, and the reckoning for them before the tribunal will be terrible, however little ye think of them now, Eccleſ. xi. 9. They may fall out of thy memory, but they will not fall out of the book of God's remembrance, Hoſ. xiii. 12. But now is the time to get them laid over on the cautioner's ſcore.

1. While thou art going on in ſin, thy debt to the divine juſtice is increaſing, thy accounts are ſwelling;

2. Though thou wilt not ſeek them out now to mourn over them, and turn from them, they will find thee out before the tribunal of God. Happy would the ſinner be, if his ſins would part with him at the grave; but they 'ſhall lie down with him in the duſt,' Job xx. 11.: or if they would lie down with him there, if they would lie ſtill and never riſe again; but 'God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil,' Eccleſ. xii. 14. The Judge is omniſcient, nothing can be hid from him, he is not capable to forget the leaſt injury which the ſinner has done to his glory; all muſt come into the account.

3. When thou ſeeſt Chriſt come again, and his throne ſet for judgment, when the trumpet ſhall blow, and the dead ariſe, and made to compear before that tribunal, when the heavens and earth ſhall paſs away, what will be thy thoughts of ſtaving off repentance?

4. laſtly, Thy ſtate for eternity will be determined there according to thy deeds done in the fleſh. Impenitent ſinners will get a long eternity to rue their obſtinacy in, while thoſe that repented in time ſhall be happy for ever.

Mot. 5. To move you to repentance, conſider the ſufferings of Chriſt. A Roman ſenator intending to provoke the people to revenge the death of Cæſar killed by Brutus, brought forth his bloody robe, and cried, Here is the robe of your late emperor. And O will ye look to the bloody robe of Chriſt, hung up on the pole of the goſpel, to move you to repentance? Zech. xii. 10. 'They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him,' &c. And learn here,

1. How dreadful muſt God's indignation againſt ſin be, which is written with the blood of Chriſt, pierced with the ſword of juſtice. Is it not 'a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God?' And ſhall we continue in ſin, againſt which ſuch indignation appeared?

2. Sin appeared terrible in Sodom when in flames, but yet more terrible in mount Calvary, where the juſtice of God purſued the Son of God with the ſword of vengeance. A ſpectacle of amazement, The Son of God ſet up for a mark to the arrows of God! Do ye not aſk into the cauſe of all this? It was ſin. The children ate the ſour grape, and the father's teeth were ſet on edge. They contract the debt, juſtice lays hold on him, and he 'reſtores what he took not away,' Pſal. lxix. 4. The elect took on the debt jovially, but he is put to tears and ſtrong cries in the paying of it. And will we not hate and loath ſin?

3. Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods from above nor from below drown it. 'Behold how he loved you.' He might have been happy in his Father's love, though mortals had never ſhared of it with him. But ſuch was his love to ſinners, as made him lay down his life for them, that ſo a way might be paved for the egreſs of his Father's love towards them. And will ye not hate and loath ſin which was the cauſe of his death? 'Is this your kindneſs to your friend?'

4. When Chriſt ſuffered, the earth quaked, rocks rent, the dead aroſe, the ſun was ſtruck blind with the ſight, and hid his face for ſhame: and how can we ſtand unmoved, who were the firſt movers of the bloody tragedy, whoſe ſins furniſhed a Judas to betray him, a Pilate to ſentence him, &c.? Look here, and mourn for, and turn from ſin.

5. laſtly, Did he not ſuffer enough? muſt he ſuffer more ſtill, even his ſtate of exaltation? will ye grieve his Spirit, trample on his laws, yea and his blood, continuing impenitent in your ſins?

Mot. 6. Conſider the wrong done to God by your ſin, in which you may ſee the ugly picture of it. This kept Joſeph from yielding to a ſtrong temptation, Gen. xxxix. 9.; and pierced David's heart with repentance for his ſin, Pſal. li. 4.; and lay heavy on the prodigal ſon, Luke xv. 18. Every ſin reacheth the throne of God in heaven, and him that ſits on it. It is true, the malice of ſinners againſt God is impotent malice, and can do him no real prejudice, do their worſt. They cannot make him leſs happy, they cannot diſturb his peace, Job xxxv. 6, 7. But the ſinner is like the beggar full of ſores lying on a dunghill, venting his ſpite againſt the prince on the throne. He wrongs the honour of God, his declarative glory, though he can do nothing againſt his eſſential glory. Sinner, thou wrongeſt God by thy ſin.

1. By ſetting thyſelf in oppoſition to his nature and will. What is ſin continued in without repentance? A walking contrary to God, Lev. xxvi. 21.; and interpretative aim to throw him down from his ſovereignty, Pſal. xiv. 1. 'The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God.' Thou mayeſt put what fair colours thou pleaſeſt upon it; but it is a throwing out the flag of defiance againſt the God that made thee. For doſt thou not thereby in effect, diſregard his all-ſeeing eye, and preſence every where bid defiance to his juſtice, and call in queſtion his truth, deſpiſe his goodneſs and mercy, and run counter to his holy nature and will, while thou run ſtill on that of which he has ſaid, Jer. xliv. 4. 'O do not this abominable thing that I hate?' And is this a courſe to be perſiſted in?

2. Thou wrongeſt God by trampling on his laws, Iſ. xxxiii. 22. He has given thee a law to be the rule of thy life, he has ſtamped it with his own ſovereign authority, fenced it with puniſhments threatened, ſuitable to his infinite greatneſs; but thou makes no more of theſe than if they were cob-webs, fit only only to catch flies. Thou breakeſt through the fences, and in contempt of his authority, will be over into the forbidden ground. Thus thou affronteſt the God that made thee: will he ſit with it think ye? No; he can avenge the affront, James iv. 12. 'There is one lawgiver, who is able to deſtroy;' and he will do it, Luke xix. 27. 'Thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.'

3. Thou wrongeſt God by deſpiſing his Son, John v. 40. Ye wrong God at the rate Heathens cannot do, and therefore your condemnation will be greater than theirs, John iii. 19. God has ſent his Son into the world, by his death to procure reconciliation betwixt God and ſinners; he has exalted him to give repentance, Acts v. 31. but by your continuing in ſin, ye ſlight his death, and the purchaſe of his blood: you love your diſeaſe ſo, as you loath the Phyſician. What will be the end of theſe things? Acts xiii. 41. 'Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh.'

4. Thou wrongeſt God by grieving his Spirit, Eph. iv. 30. Hear God's complaints of impenitent ſinners, Ezek. vi. 9. 'I am broken with their whoriſh heart which hath departed from me, and with their eyes which go a-whoring after their idols.' Amos ii. 13. 'Behold, I am preſſed under you, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves.' How often has the Spirit of the Lord been at work with you to turn you from your ſins, ſpeaking to you by the word, providences, the ſecret checks of your own conſcience, and ſecret motions and whiſpers within your own breaſt, but all to no purpoſe? This will not laſte, Gen. vi. 3. 'And the Lord ſaid, My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, for that he alſo is fleſh.' And it will have a doleful end, if ye do not repent, Iſa. lxiii. 10. 'They rebelled and vexed his holy Spirit; therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought againſt them.' If ſinners continue to be a burden to the Spisit of God, and do not take off the burden by repentance, God will throw it off to their coſt, Iſa. i. 24. 'Therefore ſaith the Lord, the Lord of hoſts, the mighty One of Iſrael, Ah, I will eaſe me of mine adverſaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.'

5. Thou wrongeſt God by defacing the remains of his image in thy own ſoul. 'God made man upright, after his own image.' Adam's ſin ruined this image in us. But the more we go on in ſin, we render ourſelves ſtill the more unlike God, and the more contrary to him. How fearful is this, to be ſtill blotting out any appearance of the tracts of God's image in us?

6. laſtly, Thou wrongeſt God by the ill influence your example has on others. Hence ſays our Lord, Matth. xxiv. 12. 'Becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold.' Every impenitent ſinner is an agent for the devil, and invites and encourages others to deſpiſe God and his ways, and ſo will be made to reckon for the miſchief his ſin does that way. The rich man in hell was ſenſible of this, though it would ſeem not before, Luke xvi. 27, 28. 'I pray thee, father, (ſaid he to Abraham,) that thou wouldſt ſend him [Lazarus] to my fathers houſe: for I have five brethren; that he may teſtify unto them, leſt they alſo come into this place of torment.'

Now, will ye go on, thus wronging God by your ſin, and not turn from it unto him? Conſider, I pray you,

1. He is your Creator, Eccleſ. xii. 1. He gave you a being, and brought you out of the womb of nothing, and will ye not be for him? will ye be againſt him? Has not he that made you a right to rule you? does not reaſon itſelf ſay, that God's creating us gives him a ſovereign dominion over us? O why will the creature thus ſet itſelf againſt the Creator? Will the potſherds ſtrive againſt the potter?

2. He is your Preſerver, Heb. i. 3. Acts xvii. 28. You live on his earth, feed on his good creatures, breathe in his air, and will ye not hearken to his voice? Who was it that preſerved thee in the womb, that brought thee out of it, ſo that it was not made thy grave? Who has kept the brittle thread of thy life from being broken hitherto, and fed thee all thy life long, did not the Lord? And wilt thou fight againſt him with his own benefits which he has beſtowed on thee, yea, is beſtowing on thee while thou goeſt on in thy ſin? Shall the life, ſtrength, comforts of life, time, &c. which he has given thee, be employed to the grieving of his Spirit? What will the end of theſe things be?

3. He can deſtroy you, and that when he will, Mat. x. 28. Your life and breath is from him, and he can ſtop it when he pleaſeth. He does not ſuffer you to go on in your ſin, becauſe he cannot help it; nay, the moment thou provokeſt him, he can ſtrike thee dead, or ſend thee down alive into the pit. But he waits to be gracious. And this one conſideration might determine ſinners to repent, if madneſs were not in their hearts, ſetting them to provoke him, who in a moment can deſtroy them, and make them ſilent in the grave.

4. He is your Witneſs, Pſal. li. 4. Luke xv. 18. Sinners that like not to retain God in their knowledge, do in effect pleaſe themſelves with the notion that God is cloſed up in heaven, Ezek. ix. 9. 'For they ſay, The Lord hath forſaken the earth, and the Lord ſeeth not.' But the day comes when they will ſee themſelves miſerably deceived. No; he is a witneſs, though many times a ſilent witneſs; but he will ſpeak in due time, Pſal. l. 21, 22. The opening of the book of conſcience, and of God's remembrance, will clear his being a witneſs of your whole way, and every ſtep of it.

5. laſtly, He will be your Judge, 2 Cor. v. 10. And he is an omniſcient one, from whom nothing can be hid; a juſt one, that will reward every one according to his works; an omnipreſent one, from whoſe preſence there can be no eſcape; an omnipotent one, who can without fail make his ſentence take effect. Will men pretend to believe a judgment to come, and yet be at no pains to make the Judge their friend aforehand, but keep up the war againſt him, and not break it off by repentance? Alas! horrid unbelief is at the bottom of impenitency.

Mot. 7. God is calling you to repentance. Be not deaf to the calls of God, leſt the Lord pay home your rebellion, by refuſing to hear you when ye call to him, Prov. i. 24. and downwards. God is calling you to repentance.

1. By the mercies wherewith he is daily loading you. Quot beneficia, tot ora. Rom. ii. 4. 'Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs and forbearance, and long ſuffering; not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance?' Theſe are the cords of a man, wherewith God is drawing you. That you have a ſparing on God's earth, that you are kept out of hell, that he gives you daily bread, and does not lock up heaven and earth, that they may not help you, call aloud to you to repent, and turn to him. And he takes notice how little theſe prevail, Jer. v. 24. 'Neither ſay they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God that giveth rain, both the former and the latter in his ſeaſon; he reſerveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harveſt.'

2. God is calling you to repentance by the croſſes and afflictions, either laid on you, or threatened. Every croſs providence is a meſſenger from heaven calling you to repentance; Mic. vi. 9. 'Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it.' They meet you in the way of ſin, as the angel did Balaam; they bid you halt, and go no farther on; nay, they bid you return to the Lord. God is ſpeaking to the land this way, to this church, and to the congregation, and to every one of us, at this day.

3. God is calling you to repentance by the preaching of the word, Acts xvii. 30. This is the great ſcope of all our preaching, that ye may repent, and turn from your ſins unto God. And while God continues the goſpel with us, it is a ſign he is waiting for our repentance: but to continue in ſin over the belly of all warnings, will have a fatal end to take us from the goſpel, or the goſpel from us; which we have ground to fear at this day on more accounts than one. Hence ſays Chriſt to the church of Epheſus, Rev. ii. 5. 'Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works: or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent.'

Mot. ult. Conſider the text, 'Except ye repent, ye ſhall periſh.' There are two things in this to preſs you to repentance.

1. If ye repent not, ye ſhall periſh. Sin unrepented of, brings ruin upon kingdoms, churches, congregations and families. And that is like to be the ruin of our land, and of our church, at this day. For alas; the face of all at this day is like that deſcribed Jer. viii. 6. 'I hearkened and heard, but they ſpake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedneſs, ſaying, What have I done! every one turned to his courſe, as the horſe ruſheth into the battle.' God has threatened us with deſolating ſtrokes, and is yet threatening; but the generation is like to thoſe ſcoffers ſpoken of, 2 Pet. iii. 4. ſaying, 'Where is the promiſe of his coming?' And becauſe God does not ſpeedily execute the ſentence, therefore men caſt off fear, and go on in their ſins, in defiance of heaven. But that concerns us nearly; Jer. ix. 9. 'Shall I not viſit them for theſe things? ſaith the Lord: ſhall not my ſoul be avenged on ſuch a nation as this?'

Sin unrepented of will ruin your ſouls; 'Except ye repent, ye ſhall periſh.' Conſider your life, your ſouls lie at ſtake. Sinner, thou haſt gone away from God, thy ſoul is left in pawn that thou ſhalt return by repentance. If thou return not, thy pawn, thy ſoul, is loſt loſt for ever. Heaven's gate is too narrow to let you in there with a burden of unrepented of ſin on thy back. Nay, heaven thou canſt never ſee; hell thou canſt not eſcape, if thou repent not. The goſpel calls you to repent; if not, 'the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on you that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.' 2 Theſ.

i. 7, 8. Have pity therefore on your ſouls, Ezek. xviii. 31, 32. 'Caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions, 'whereby you have tranſgreſſed, and make you a new 'heart and a new ſpirit; for why will ye die, O houſe 'of Iſrael? For I have no pleaſure in the death of him 'that dieth, ſaith the Lord God: wherefore turn your-'ſelves, and live ye.' To this narrow point the matter is brought, Repent, or periſh eternally; quit your ſins, or quit heaven.

Now, I pray you conſider here,

1ſt, The certainty of your ruin in an impenitent ſtate. Ye have it from the mouth of the Lord himſelf, in moſt plain and peremptory terms, that 'except ye 'repent, ye ſhall periſh.' If it were but a may be, it were ſufficient in all reaſon to determine us to repentance; for it is unaccountable to put the ſoul in hazard of everlaſting deſtruction, for all the profit or pleaſure of a ſinful courſe; a thouſand times more than for one to put himſelf in hazard of drowning to catch a fly. But it is not a may be, but certainly it ſhall be.

2dly, All other grounds of hope are cut off, if ye repent not. Tell me, O impenitent ſinner, that will not turn from thy ſin, what wilt thou truſt to for ſalvation from the wrath of God? Wilt thou truſt to the mercy of God? I tell thee thou art a deſpiſer of mercy, Rom. ii. 4. and thou cannot have it in this caſe, but over the belly of the truth of God; for he has ſaid, 'Except ye 'repent, ye ſhall periſh.' Pray conſider, if thou would have mercy, thou muſt ſeek it in God's way: If. lv. 7. 'Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous 'man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, 'and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, 'for he will abundantly pardon.'

Wilt thou truſt to Jeſus Chriſt, his blood and merits? Do not deceive yourſelf. Is not this Chriſt's own word, 'Except ye repent, ye ſhall periſh?' does not the Saviour tell thee this? q. d. None of my blood ſhall be wared on a ſinner to ſave him from wrath, that will not repent and turn from his ſin. Why does any body at all periſh that hears the goſpel, if folk may continue impenitent, and yet ſhare of Chriſt's blood? No, no; to whom Chriſt will be a Saviour from wrath, he will be firſt a Saviour from ſin, Math. i. 21. He will firſt give repentance, before he give acceſs to heaven; for Chriſt's blood was never ſhed to bring in dogs and ſwine into his Father's houſe, but ſhed, 'that he might redeem us 'from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar 'people, zealous of good works,' Tit. ii. 14.

3dly, Where will the fruit of ſin be, when this dear reckoning begins? Heb. x. 31. 'It is a fearful thing to 'fall into the hands of the living God.' Thou mayeſt get a time to run thy courſe: but at length thy eye-ſtrings will break, the laſt pulſe beat, and the ſoul will take wing, and go to another world, and becauſe of unrepented of ſin, be condemned to everlaſting flames. And when thou enters there, what will abide with thee of all the ſatisfaction thou haſt had in thy ſinful courſes? No; then thou muſt bid an eternal farewell to all ſatisfaction, eaſe, or delight whatſoever, either in God or thy luſts.

4thly, How wilt thou be able to ſtand under the load of wrath in the pit of deſtruction? Iſa. xxxiii. 14. 'The 'ſinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurpriſed 'the hypocrites: who among us ſhall dwell with the de-'vouring fire? who among us ſhall dwell with everlaſt-'ing burnings?' How wilt thou be able to grapple with vengeance, the Mediator's vengeance, while God ſhall hold thee up with the one hand, and puniſh thee with the other? Think in time on the worm that never dies, and the fire that is never quenched: for either thou muſt repent now, or that worm will gnaw thee, and that fire ſcorch thee for ever.

Laſtly, Conſider the eternity of this ſtate. The pleaſure, profit, and eaſe of ſin are but for a moment; but the deſtruction for ſin unrepented of is for ever, 2 Theſſ. i. 9. O madneſs! to run the riſk of everlaſting pain for a moment's pleaſure! If ruing, ſorrow, remorſe, rage againſt one's ſelf for ſin, were repenting, there would be repentance enough in hell. Men have off repentance now for the bitterneſs of it; but there is a ſweet in it too: but then ye ſhall have the bitterneſs of it in full meaſure, but never taſte of the ſweetneſs of it; for then the hopes of mercy are razed; and a fearful ſight of an everlaſting continuance of miſery, without end.

Have pity then on your own ſouls, and throw them not away for that which cannot profit.

2. If ye repent, ye ſhall never periſh. Repentance is the way to keep off the wrath of God from nations, churches, &c. Repentance is the way for each of us to eſcape the wrath of God: Ezek. xviii. 30. 'Repent, and 'turn yourſelves from all your tranſgreſſions; ſo iniqui-'ty ſhall not be your ruin.' Acts ii. 38. 'Repent, and 'be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus 'Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins.' All the threatenings of wrath are ſummonſes to repent, and have always that clauſe underſtood in them, 'Except ye repent, ye ſhall 'periſh:' Rev. ii. 22. 'Behold, I will caſt her into a 'bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great 'tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.' Though ye have ſinned with the world, if ye repent with God's elect, ye ſhall not periſh with the world. Conſider, 1ſt, It is not falling into ſin, but lying in ſin without repentance, that ruins folk to whom the goſpel comes, John iii. 19. For there is a remedy provided; and it is for all diſeaſes of the ſoul, even the worſt and moſt deſperate: and ſo nothing can be fatal to thoſe that are willing to employ the Phyſician, and to undergo his method of cure. They are in glory this day, whoſe ſins have been of the firſt magnitude, as David, Paul, Manaſſeh, Peter, &c.; but they were repenting ſinners.

2dly, There is mercy for thee, if thou wilt repent, and come to Chriſt. Good news, O ſinners, If ye repent, all your ſins ſhall be blotted out, ye ſhall be embraced in the wide and warm arms of mercy; if, as ye have gone away from God, ſo ye will come back again: Iſa. lv. 7. 'Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous 'man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, 'and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, 'for he will abundantly pardon.' Rev. iii. 20. 'Behold, 'I ſtand at the door and knock: If any man hear my 'my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, 'and will ſup with him, and he with me.' O ſirs, will not bowels of mercy draw you? God is now on a throne of mercy; he ſtretches out the golden ſcepter to you for peace, if ye will have it in his own way: and in his name we proclaim mercy to all poor ſinners that deſire to turn from their ſins unto God. O will not the proclamation of the indemnity touch the hearts of rebel ſinners, and cauſe them to relent?

Object. 1. But my ſins are many and great ſins. Anſw. God's mercies are many, Pſal. li. 1. and great too, Pſal. lxxxvi. 13. and his mercy is magnified in pardoning of ſuch. If thy ſins were as great as mountains, as many as the catalogue of them would reach from heaven to earth, there is mercy for thee, if thou wilt repent, Iſa. i. 18. 'Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the 'Lord; though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as 'white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they 'ſhall be as wool.' There is riches of mercy, Eph. ii. 4. abundance of pardoning grace, Iſa. lv. 7.

Object. 2. I have relapſed, gone back with the dog to the vomit, and with the ſow that was waſhed to the wallowing in the mire. Anſw. There is mercy for backſliders too, Jer. iii. 14. 'Turn, O backſliding children, 'ſaith the Lord, for I am married unto you.' Verſ. 22. 'Return, ye backſliding children, and I will heal your 'backſlidings.' If it were not ſo, who could be ſafe? Men muſt forgive in that caſe, and much more God will, Luke xvii. 4. For as the heavens are above the earth, ſo are God's thoughts above ours, Jer. iii. 1. 'They ſay, If a man put away his wife, and ſhe go from 'him, and become another man's, ſhall he return unto 'her again? ſhall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou haſt played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me ſaith the Lord.'

Object. 3. But I have deſpiſed and ſlighted mercy, and the remedy of ſin. Anſw. They had gone all that length, who had ſo far deſpiſed mercy, and the remedy of ſin, as they had murdered the Lord of glory, and yet they obtained mercy, Acts ii. 36, 37, 38. Deſpiſe and ſlight it no more, and your former ſins ſhall not be remembered.

Object. 4. I have ſo long gone on in ſin, that I can have no hope. Anſw. The longer the greater is your ſin; yet God has not diſcovered to us any particular time, beyond which he will not wait. There are ſome called at the eleventh hour; and thoſe that come in then, are not rejected. So was the thief on the croſs, See Ezek. xxxiii. 10, 11. Luke xiv. 22. Joel iii. 21.

Object. 5. But there is no body's caſe like mine. Anſw. Conſider the caſe of Manaſſeh, 2 Chron. xxxiii. and of Paul, 1 Tim. i. 13. Such inſtances are deſigned to encourage ſinners to repent in hopes of mercy, Eph. ii. 17. Adam's caſe was more hopeleſs, who had ſinned againſt more light and mercy, than ye were capable to do. But ſuppoſe your caſe is a non-ſuch evil, the mercy of God and the blood of Chriſt are non-ſuch remedies. And ye may be ſure, ſince he has ſaid, John vi. 37. 'Him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out,' that he will work a new thing on the earth, rather than that your caſe be unhelped, if ye will put it in his hand. So I conclude that there is mercy for you if you will repent.

Laſtly, Thou ſhalt certainly be ſaved for ever, if thou doſt repent, Ezek. xviii. 30. 'Repent, and turn yourſelves from all your tranſgreſſions; ſo iniquity ſhall not be your ruin.' No true penitents go to hell. Heaven is the landing place of all true penitents. They that turn from their ſins now, and turn unto God, ſhall for ever be with the Lord in another world.

O look to the glory that is above, and let your ſouls be moved to repentance by it. Caſt not away the hopes of eternal happineſs for what does not profit.

Now, ſinners, conſider theſe things, and be ſtirred up to repentance, and do not adventure over the belly of fair warning to go on in a courſe of impenitency. Impenitency under the goſpel is a ſin of a deep dye; beware of it.

1. It is a continuation of ſin; it draws out the thread of a God-provoking courſe, adding ſin to ſin, till God cut the thread of life. And O are there not enough of items ſtanding in God's accounts againſt you already? why will ye ſtill be adding more, inſtead of diminiſhing and breaking off the courſe by repentance?

2. It ſeals ſin and guilt on your ſoul. Impenitency keeps all the reſt of your ſins faſt on your ſouls, John iii. 19. 'This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil.' If you would repent, no ſins whatſoever you are guilty of, would be ever able to ruin you; but if you do not, that one will keep all the reſt in life and vigour, to your utter ruin.

3. It flies in the face of the goſpel, of Chriſt himſelf, his apoſtles and miniſters, who with one voice call ſinners to repentance. If ye do this, ye do all; if ye do not this, ye do nothing; ye receive the grace of God in vain; it will be in vain to you that ever you heard the goſpel, that Chriſt died for ſinners, &c. for ye will have no benefit by any of theſe things.

4. laſtly, It is a bloody ſin, that will involve you in everlaſting miſery. For there is no eſcaping of the wrath of God, if you do not repent; ye are undone for ever. For except ye repent, ye ſhall periſh.

Now, ye have had a meſſage from the Lord, what anſwer ſhall I return to him that ſent me? I think I may rank up all in theſe ſix ſorts of ſinners.

1. The brutiſh ſinner, that hears as if he heard not. The word makes a noiſe in their ears becauſe they are capable of hearing; but alas they are no better than the beaſts, in ſo far as they make no reflections on it, with reſpect to their ſtate and caſe. What ſhall I ſay to you, but that the time comes when theſe ſouls of yours, drowned in a moſs of fleſh and blood, will be ſeparated from your bodies, and get a long eternity to reflect on the calls ye have had to repent. Iſ. i. 3. 'The ox knoweth his owner, and the aſs his maſter's crib: but Iſrael doth not know, my people doth not conſider.' Pſal. xxxii. 9, 10. 'Be not ye as the horſe or as the mule, which have no underſtanding: whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. Many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked.'

2. The ſullen deſperate ſinner, whoſe anſwer will be that, Jer. ii. 25. 'There is no hope. No, for I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go.' Their hearts are glued to their ſins, they have no will to part with them, and they have no hope that ever they ſhall be made willing, or if they were ſo, that God would receive them; and therefore they are reſolved to take their time. But O conſider, they have been reformed that have been as mad on their idols as you, as Manaſſeh and Paul. If that cannot draw you, pray anſwer that queſtion, Iſ. xxxiii. 14. 'Who among us ſhall dwell with devouring fire? Who amongſt us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings?'

3. The crafty ſubtile ſinner, whoſe anſwer will be that of Saul to Samuel, 1 Sam. xv. 15. 'Bleſſed be thou of the Lord; I have performed the commandment of the Lord.' But let the return to them be that of Samuel to Saul, verſe 14. 'What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?' What means your continuing in ſin, your not wreſtling and ſtriving againſt it in heart and life, if it be ſo?

4. The preſumptuous ſinner, whoſe anſwer will be that, Deut. xxix. 19. 'I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart.' There are ſome who have a heart of adamant, and put on a forehead of braſs, that nothing of this ſort can affect them. Let the meſſengers of the Lord be ſaying what they will, they will be doing. They will have their courſe, and perſwade themſelves all ſhall be well. To ſuch I would ſay, as verſ. 20, 21. 'The Lord will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the Lord and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man, and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him, and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under heaven. And the Lord ſhall ſeparate him unto evil, out of all the tribes of Iſrael, according to all the curſes of the covenant, that are written in this book of the law.' See Iſ. xxviii. 16. and downwards.

5. The ſlothful ſinner, whoſe anſwer will be that of Felix to Paul, Acts xxiv. 25. 'Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee.' They are convinced that they muſt repent, and reſolve to do it, but not yet. Young folk put it off to old age; old folk delay it to a deathbed. Every one puts it off from time to time. But O ſirs what certainty have ye of an hour, let be of a year? How many are there that never ſee old age? How many drop into eternity ere ever they are aware?

6. laſtly, The convinced ſinner, who being awakened, ſays, 'What ſhall I do to be ſaved?' For which reaſon I ſhall,

III. Shew you the great hindrances of repentance. And,

1. Thoughtleſſneſs is a great hindrance of it, Jer. viii. 6. 'I hearkened and heard, but they ſpake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedneſs, ſaying, What have I done? every one turned to his courſe, as the horſe ruſheth into the battle.' Men do not conſider their ſoul's ſtate, caſe, and way. They ſleep away their time careleſly without due reflection; and therefore their ſpiritual ſtate goes to wreck, and they pine away in their iniquity, and are not aware of the ſame,

2. The love and cares of the world are great hindrances of repentance, Luke viii. 14. Theſe take up mens hearts ſo, as that they have neither heart nor hand for the caſe of their ſouls. How many are there, whom the world keeps in a conſtant hurry all their life long, that they never come to conſider their way till death ſtare them in the face?

3. Prejudices againſt religion and ſeriouſneſs are great hindrances of repentance. Some ſee no profit in it; but 'godlineſs is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and that which is to come,' 1 Tim. iv. 8. Some ſee no pleaſure in it: but 'wiſdom's ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace,' Prov. iii. 17. Some think that it is needleſs to be at all that pains, far leſs will ſerve: but, alas! they do not conſider what a holy jealous God the Lord is, and how many ſhall ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able.

4. Preſumption is a great hindrance of repentance, Deut. xxix. 19. They hope ſtill all ſhall be well, however they take their liberty in a ſinful courſe. They abuſe the mercy of God as a ſcreen to their luſts; not remembering that 'he will by no means clear the guilty.'

5. Unbelief, the not embracing of Chriſt, and apprehending the mercy of God in him, is likewiſe a great impediment in the way of repentance. And,

6. laſtly, Slothfulneſs, whereby the buſineſs is ſtill put off from time to time.

IV. I ſhall give direction in order to your obtaining repentance. Suppoſing what I have ſaid before of the way to gain repentance by believing, I offer further theſe following directions.

1. Labour to ſee ſin in its own colours, what an evil thing it is, Jer. ii. 19. What makes us to cleave to ſin is falſe-apprehenſions we have about it. To ſee it in itſelf would be a means to make us fly from it. For this end conſider, 1ſt, The majeſty of God offended by ſin. Ignorance of God is the mother of impenitency, Acts xvii. 30.

2dly, The obligations we lie under to ſerve him, which by ſin we trample upon.

3dly, The wrath of God that abides impenitent ſinners.

4thly, The good things our unrepented-of ſins deprive us of.

Laſtly, The many evils which are bred by our ſin againſt the honour of God, our own and our neighbour's true intereſt.

2. Be much in the thoughts of death. Conſider how ſhort and uncertain your time is. Hopes of long life bring many into a hopeleſs caſe. And who knows when he may have outlived his day of grace, when the moment comes that God ſhall ſay, My Spirit ſhall not ſtrive any more with this man; for that he alſo is fleſh.

3. Dwell on the thoughts of a judgment to come, where ye ſhall be made to give an account of yourſelves.

4. Meditate on the ſufferings of Chriſt.

5. Pray for repentance, and believingly ſeek and long for the Lord's giving the new heart, according to his promiſe, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. 'A new heart will I give you, and a new ſpirit will I put within you, and I will take away the ſtony heart out of your fleſh, and I will give you an heart of fleſh.' Ver. 32. 'Not for your ſakes do I this, ſaith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be aſhamed and confounded for your own ways, O houſe of Iſrael.'

6. laſtly, What ye do, do quickly. The ſooner you begin, the eaſier will the work be.

Take the three following marks of true repentance.

1. Sorrow for ſin, as offenſive to a good and gracious God, Zech. xii. 10.

2. Hatred of ſin, as the moſt abominable thing, Rev. ii. 6. This will be, 1. univerſal, againſt all known ſin; 2. conſtant, without intermiſſion; 3. implacable, without reconciliation; and, 4. vehement, without tolerating of it.

3. A fixed purpoſe and deſire of eſchewing ſin, and following of duty; guarding againſt preſent ſins, and the occaſions of theſe we are in hazard of; honeſtly endeavouring after it in the uſe of means, and labouring to remove the hindrances to a holy life.

The Danger of delaying REPENTANCE.

PROV. vi. 10, 11.

Yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep. So ſhall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

I Have been preſſing ſinners to repentance from the former text, and I hope by this time all of you may be convinced of the neceſſity of it. But, alas! delays in this matter kill their ten thouſands. Men put off the work from time to time, till time be gone, and they are ſurpriſed into ruin, as we may learn from this text. Where,

1. We have the ſluggard's picture drawn, in reference to his eternal concerns; which is the main thing here aimed at. He is one that puts off his great work from time to time, 'Yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep.'

In the 6th verſe the ſlothful ſinner is ſet to ſchool to learn a leſſon of the emmot; which though ſhe has not the advantages that he has, yet has ſo much natural ſagacity, as to provide for winter, in the time of ſummer and harveſt, when meat is to be got. In the 9th verſe there is a rouſing call to the ſinner to follow that example. But behold how he entertains it; as a perſon that is loth to ariſe, he begs a little more ſleep, a little more ſlumber, a little more folding of the hands to ſleep. Here is,

1ſt, Something ſuppoſed; and that is threefold.

(1.) The ſleeper convinced that he has ſlept, and neglected his work. There are many who ſee themſelves wrong, yet have no heart to endeavour to get right. They are convinced that their great work is far behind, yet have no heart to ſtir to ſet it forward.

(2.) The ſleeper convinced that he muſt awake, and ſet to his work. Slothful ſinners may ſee that the caſe they are in, is not a caſe they would venture to die in; they ſee that it is neceſſary to turn over a new leaf, to mind their ſalvation at another rate than they have done, or are doing.

(3.) The ſleeper reſolved to awake, and mind his buſineſs. He would fain ſleep, but he does not deſign to ſleep long, to ſleep always. No; he deſigns but a little ſleep, if ye will believe him, and afterwards to awake; though, poor ſoul, he does not conſider that he is ſleeping within the ſea-mark, and may be ſwallowed up ere he awake out of his little ſleep.

2dly, Something expreſſed; and that is threefold too.

(1.) A delay craved: Yet a little ſleep, &c. He is not thinking never to waken, never to repent, but only he cannot think on doing it as yet. However long a ſleep he has taken in ſin, yet he muſt have more. For as men, the more they ſleep, the more they would ſleep; ſo the more they continue in ſin, the more they would continue. And the more they put off repentance, they are the more unfit for it.

(2.) The quantity of this delay: it is but a little in the ſluggard's conceit. Though the Spirit of the Lord be grieved and wearied with waiting on his awakening, yet he thinks that all is but little. If the ſluggard conſidered that his whole time is but little in compariſon of eternity, the leaſt time he ſpends in his ſleep would appear very great. But, alas! he conſiders it not.

(3.) The mighty concern he is in for this delay. Though his ruin be wrapt up in it, he is fond of it, his heart is ſet upon it; and he pleads for it, as a ſtarving man for bread. Eaſe is ſweet to him; and ſo he ſpeaks, A little ſleep, a little ſlumber. There are three things here he craves, each leſs than the other; which ſhows how loath he is to beſtir himſelf. (1.) A little ſleep; not a dead ſleep, but a moderate one. (2.) If that cannot be granted, let him have but a little ſlumber; a napping, as it were a middle betwixt ſleeping and waking. (3.) If he cannot get that, yet he would have a folding of the hands to ſleep; Heb. to lie a-bed. Let him but lie ſtill loitering and embracing his ſweet ſelf, and not preſently be obliged to riſe to put hand to work. Love to folded hands goes deep with him.

Obſerve, how the hearts of ſinners are glued to their ſins, and carnal ſecurity. When conſcience begins to draw them out of their bed of ſloth, they will not yield, they will diſpute every foot of ground with it. And they will take very little ere they want all. O were we as nice in the point of our ſalvation, as in the ſtate of blindneſs, in the point of our ruin, how happy might we be?

2. We have the fatal iſſue of this courſe. Delays are dangerous, but moſt of all in matters of eternal concern. The iſſue of theſe delays is, The man is ruined, he never awakes till it is out of time. His little ſleep, &c. ſpends all his little time, and throws him out quite unprovided into a long eternity. Here conſider, 1ſt, What ruin comes upon him: Poverty and want. It is held forth under theſe notions, to anſwer to the proviſion the ants make for themſelves. They provide for themſelves in ſummer and harveſt; ſo that when the winter comes, when they cannot ſtir out of their holes, they live on the proviſion they have laid in. There is a winter abiding us, a time wherein no man can work, when there will be no acceſs to God's grace and favour. Death brings in this. This time is our ſummer and harveſt, wherein matters may be ſecured for eternity: but, alas! the ſluggard ſleeps in working time; and ſo when it is over, he muſt ſtarve, and periſh for ever.

2dly, How this ruin comes upon him. It comes on,

(1.) Swiftly and ſpeedily. So the word rendered one that travelleth, imports one that walketh vigorouſly, as a man in a haſte upon the road. Though the ſinner lies at eaſe on his bed of ſloth, yet his ruin haſteth on apace, 2 Pet. ii. 3. The ſun ſtands not ſtill, though the ſluggard's work goes but ſlowly on. Every breath he fetches in his ſpiritual ſleep, draws his deſtruction a ſtep nearer.

(2.) Silently and ſurpriſingly: Thy poverty ſhall come as one that travelleth. If we ſend one an errand, we will be looking for him again at the time appointed; but we know nothing of the traveller, till he come at us. So ruin comes on the delaying ſinner ere he is aware; deſtruction is at his bedſide ere he is awakened, Prov. xxix. 1.

(3.) Irreſiſtibly: Thy want ſhall come as an armed man; Heb. a man of a buckler, who may hurt thee; but not thou him, for his buckler defends him. Were this traveller unarmed, the danger were not ſo great; or were the party attacked watching, and armed too, he might poſſibly come off ſafe. But, alas! the poor man is naked, and ſleeping too; how then can he make his part good againſt his enemy? He cannot; he muſt fall a ſacrifice to his own ſloth. Which brings me to conſider, 3dly, What all this is owing to: So ſhall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, &c. It is all owing to the curſed love of eaſe, to ſloth, to the delays and put-offs, wherewith precious time is ſquandered away, and the precious ſoul is irrecoverably loſt. They delay and delay on, till the golden opportunity is loſt, and they are ſwept away into the pit, with all their good reſolutions for the time to come, which they never ſee.

The point I intend to ſpeak to from theſe words, is,

Doct. The delaying and putting off of repentance or ſalvation-work, is a ſoul-ruining courſe among goſpel-hearers.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. Why it is that goſpel-hearers delay and put off repentance.

II. That this delaying is a ſoul-ruining courſe.

III. Laſtly, Make application.

I. I ſhall ſhew why it is that goſpel hearers delay and put off repentance. There is a generation that are not reſolved never to repent, never to ply ſalvation-work: but only they are not for it yet. They hope to mend and reform afterwards, but for the preſent they have no heart to it; ſo by cheating themſelves out of their preſent time, they put a cheat on themſelves for ever. They are called by the word, and by their own conſciences, to make ready for another world, to work out their ſalvation; but their hearts ſay, Yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep; and their practice is conform. Why is it ſo?

1. Satan has a great hand in this. If he cannot hold out the light altogether from diſturbing them, he will do what he can to lull them aſleep again, before they be fully awakened, Luke xi. 21. 'When a ſtrong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace.' Thus he did with Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. who, 'as Paul reaſoned of righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgment to come, trembled, and anſwered, Go thy way for this time: when I have a convenient ſeaſon I will call for thee.' When the ſoul begins to think on making its eſcape, all the art of hell will be employed to hold it faſt; and it is eaſier to get one to put off ſalvation-work till afterwards, than downright to refuſe it altogether. And thus Satan is always on one of the two extremes, urging either that it is too ſoon, or elſe that it is too long a-doing.

2. The cares and buſineſs of the world contribute much to this. Hence our Lord explained 'the ſeed which fell among thorns,' to be thoſe, 'who when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches, and pleaſures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection,' Luke viii. 14. How often are people in ſuch an unſanctified throng of buſineſs, that they cannot find a convenient ſeaſon for putting their ſalvation-work to a point? They have ſo many other cares upon their heads, that they juſtle out the care of their ſouls, they find themſelves wrapt up in a cloud of cares; but think with themſelves, that were they but once through that, they ſhall ply their main work. Well, but they are no ſooner out of that, than they are in to another; and ſo on, till the work being put off from time to time, is quite neglected. The truth is, perſons in ſuch a caſe will hardly find a time for that work, till they be reſolute that they ſhall take it as they can find it.

3. The predominant love of carnal eaſe; Prov. xxvi.

15. ‘The ſlothful hideth his hand in his boſom, it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth.’ We are all naturally like Iſſachar, ‘who ſaw that reſt was good, and the land that it was pleaſant; and bowed his ſhoulder to bear, and became a ſervant unto tribute,’ Gen. xlix. 15. Could people get ſleeping to heaven on the ſluggard's bed, would drowſy wiſhes carry them thither, many would be the paſſengers in that way. But that will not do. Men muſt labour, ſtrive and wreſtle; and that is hard in the eyes of carnal men; and therefore, if it cannot be altogether refuſed, it is put off as long as may be. And hence never will a ſoul ply ſalvation-work in earneſt, till it be effectually rouſed out of its lazy diſpoſition.

4. The predominant love of ſin. Why do perſons ſtave off repentance, but becauſe they are like thoſe who entertaining their friends whom they have no will to part with, do therefore put off their departure from day to day? The parting with ſin is like the cutting off of a member of the body, Matth. v. 30. which one will never yield to, unleſs he be very reſolute. No man will delay a minute to throw a burning coal out of his boſom; but they will love to keep a ſweet morſel under the tongue, who yet know that they muſt ſpit it out at length. And hence it is, that no purpoſe of reformation, which is only for afterwards, can be ſincere: becauſe it argues a love to, and loathneſs to part with ſin.

5. A natural averſion and backwardneſs to holineſs, Rom. viii. 7. ‘The carnal mind is enmity againſt God: for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.’ The heart will never be reconciled to the yoke of Chriſt, till grace make it ſo, Pſal. cx. 3. But like as the bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke is loath to ſtoop to it, and therefore ſtill draws aback; ſo will the heart of man do, till overcoming grace reach it, Jer. xxxi. 18. Hence, when light is let into the mind, but the averſion ſtill remains in the will; what can be expected, but that the buſineſs of repentance, which they dare not abſolutely refuſe, will be delayed?

6. The hope of finding the work eaſier afterwards. The ſluggard thinks with himſelf, that a little more ſleep, a little more ſlumber, a little more folding of the hands to ſleep, would make it eaſier to him to get out of his bed; though on the contrary, the more he ſleeps unſeaſonably, the more he would ſleep; and the longer perſons delay the work of repentance, it is the harder to go through with it. For ſin is a diſeaſe, which, the the longer it laſts, gathers the more ſtrength, and is harder to cure. And he that is not fit to-day to repent, will be leſs fit to morrow.

7. A large reckoning on the head of time that is to come: hence the rich man reckoned, ‘I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry.’ But let us hear the judgment of God concerning this ſpeech: ‘But God ſaid unto him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee: then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided?’ Luke xii. 19, 20. God has given no man a tack of years, no nor hours; yet every body is ready to tell what they will do to-morrow, next month, or next year. The young people think they have a great deal of time before their hand for repentance; the old people think they have enough before them for that too; and in people's conceit there is always enough, till their time be gone quite, and they be wakened out of their dream. Hopes of long life have ruined many a ſoul. O to be wiſe! Jam. iv. 13, 14. ‘Go to now, ye that ſay, To-day or to-morrow we will go into ſuch a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain: Whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow: for what is your life! it is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away.’ But what folly is it to venture eternity on ſuch uncertainty!

8. A fond conceit of the eaſineſs of ſalvation-work. There is a generation that pleaſe themſelves with the thought, that it is but to believe and repent, and that is ſoon done. What perſons can do with a touch of their hand, they think they need to be in no haſte with. But O how contrary is this to the whole ſtrain of ſcripture, and the ſaints experience? Matth. vii. 14. ‘Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.’ Luke xiii. 24. ‘Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate: for many, I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able.’ Eph. i. 19, 20. The apoſtle ſpeaks of the exceeding greatneſs of God's power toward them who believe, according to the working of his mighty power; which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead. 1 Pet. iv. 18. ‘If the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear?’ Did men believe this, that there is ſuch a difficulty in getting to heaven, they would not dare delay for a minute entering on the way.

9. A conceit of ſufficient ability in ourſelves to turn ourſelves from ſin unto God. That the doctrine advancing the power of natural reaſon and ability in ſpiritual things, does take ſo much with the world, is no wonder, ſince man naturally is ſuch a ſtranger to his own ſpiritual impotency. Hence it is obſerved, that the firſt queſtion with the awakened is, ‘What ſhall I do to be ſaved?’ It is worth obſerving how the carnal heart turns itſelf into different ſhapes, to retain its ſinful luſts. Sometimes the man ſays, that he is not able to do any good; but when his ſin cannot find ſhelter under this covert, but he is purſued hot with conviction, he puts off his reformation and repentance to another time; thereby in effect declaring that he can do it, if he had but a ſeaſon for it. He that is to uſe his oars may row at what hour he pleaſes; but he that muſt ſail by the help of the wind, muſt ſet off while it blows, becauſe he cannot command it.

II. I ſhall ſhew, that this delaying is a ſoul-ruining courſe.

This is evident, if ye conſider,

1. It is directly oppoſite to the goſpel-call; which is for to-day, not for to-morrow: Heb. iii. 7, 8. ‘To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.’ All the calls of the goſpel require preſent compliance, and do not allow ſinners to put off till another day. It is true, ſalvation-work muſt be deliberate work; but ye are not allowed a time to deliberate whether ye will come to Chriſt and be holy or no. It is like the call to quench fire in a houſe, that muſt preſently be done, yet done deliberately, ſo as the work be not marred in the making. How then can it be but a ſoul ruining courſe?

2. It is threatened with ruin. The text is very expreſs, So ſhall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man. And one with a thouſand times more ſafety might venture on a ſword-point, than the edge of ſuch a divine threatening. See Prov. xxiii. 21. Eccleſ. x. 18. And this threatening has been accompliſhed in many, whom their ſlothful delays have cauſed to periſh; as in the caſe of Ephraim, Hoſ. xiii. 13. and of Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. Many have been not far from the kingdom of God, who yet never came to it.

3. Whenever grace touches the heart, men ſee that it is ſo. Hence ſays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxix. 60. ‘I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.’ When men are in earneſt to get to Chriſt by faith, and to get back to God by repentance, they dare linger no more in the ſtate of wrath, they flee out of it, as one fleeing for his life, Matth. iii. 7. Their eyes are opened to ſee their danger, and therefore they are preſently determined.

4. It has a native tendency to ſoul-ruin, which inevitably overtakes them, if they do not at length break off all delays, and come away. This is evident, if ye conſider,

1ſt, The ſtate of ſin is a ſtate of wrath, where ruin muſt needs compaſs a man about on every hand: John

iii. 36. ‘ He that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee ‘ life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.’ To have ſtaid in Sodom that day it was to be burnt, was dangerous; but to abide a moment in the ſtate of wrath, is far more dangerous. Who would venture into a houſe that is about to fall? Who would not preſently leave it? And will men venture yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep, in a ſtate of enmity with God? Surely ſuch perſons know not God's greatneſs, nor the worth of their own ſouls.

2dly, The longer ye continue in ſin, your ſpiritual death advanceth the more upon you. Every ſin ſets you a ſtep farther from God, is a new bar in the way of your peace with him, ſtrengthens your natural enmity againſt him, and alienates you more from the life of God. And where can this natively end, but in your ſoul's ruin? Ah! are we not far enough on in that way already? Why delay more, that we may go yet farther off from God?

3dly, While ye remain in this ſtate, there is but a ſtep betwixt you and death, which you may be carried over by a delay of ever ſo ſhort a time. All that is your ſecurity in this caſe, ſo far as ye can ſee, is the brittle thread of your life, which may be broken with a touch, and then ye are ruined without remedy. So that every delay, ſhorter or longer, of repentance, is a venturing of eternity on that uncertain life of yours, which in a moment may be taken from you.

USE 1. For Information. This ſets us ſee,

1. That delayers of repentance are ſelf deſtroyers, ſelf-murderers. Well may it be ſaid to ſuch, as Ezek. xviii. 31. ‘ Why will ye die? Should a man wilfully neglect a remedy for his diſeaſe, which puts him in hazard of his life, he could not be guiltleſs of his own death; more than one who being called to riſe and quench the fire in his houſe, and yet would lie ſtill till it were conſumed to aſhes, would be blameleſs of its ruin. Self love, that is, love of ſinful ſelf, is the ſource of the greateſt cruelty; whereby luſts are ſpared to the deſtruction of the life of the ſoul.

2: By delays the intereſt of hell is advanced: where many are this day who had reſolved to repent, but death did not wait their time, and ſo they were diſappointed. No wonder new grounds of delay be ſtill laid to perſons hands, for it is Satan's great drift to get men intangled in the wilderneſs, that they may not make forward to Canaan's land. And every new intanglement ſets the ſoul a ſtep nearer to deſtruction; and who will queſtion but Satan has art enough to coin new pretences for delays?

3. No wonder Satan is moſt buſy to ply the engine of delays, when a ſinner is ſomewhat awakened by conviction, as he did with Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. ‘ A ‘ ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath;’ and delays will blunt the edge of convictions, as much as a peremptory refuſal. Under convictions, at a ſermon, or on a ſick bed, the ſinner is awakened out of his ſleep; but then nothing can ſerve Satan's purpoſe better, than yet a little ſleep; which if they get, they ſleep off the edge of convictions.

4. They are ſinners beſt friends, that give them leaſt reſt in a ſinful courſe. And whatever men think of them now, they will think ſo afterwards, Prov. v. 11, 12, 13. Every body loves eaſe, and therefore faithful preaching and dealing with ſouls, is a torment to thoſe who love to be undiſturbed in their reſt in ſin, Rev. xi. 10. But what ſuits beſt with our ſinful inclinations, is worſt for our ſouls, and will in the end be found ſo. Flattery has ruined many, when plain dealing and fair warning has brought many out of the ſnare.

Uſe 2. Of Lamentation. We may lament here the caſe of many, nay of moſt, that hear the goſpel. They put off their work from time to time, and ſo their ſpiritual caſe is going to wreck day by day. This is the caſe in natural things: Eccleſ. x. 18. ‘ By much ſlothfulneſs the building decayeth, and through idleneſs of ‘ the hands the houſe droppeth through.’ They are in a dying condition, the phyſician comes to their bedſide, and offers them a remedy; they do not abſolutely refuſe it, only they put off the taking of it. In the mean time their diſtemper increaſes, and death is advancing apace. The market of free grace is opened, and they are called to come and buy; they ſee they need to buy, yet they are not like to ſtir till the market be over. O madneſs and folly to be lamented with tears of blood! Poor ſlothful creature, that is yet for a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep, there are four things thou knoweſt not.

1. Thou knoweſt not the worth of a precious ſoul, which thou art throwing away for what will not profit. Will the ſweet ſleep in ſin quit the coſt of the ſouls ruin? No, no. ‘ For what is a man profited, if he ‘ ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? ‘ or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?’ Matth. xvi. 26. Chriſt left the boſom of the Father, and ſhed his precious blood to redeem the ſoul. He was wiſe that paid the price, and if leſs would have done, he would not have been at needleſs expence of blood: he was a Father that received it; and would not have put his Son to that, if it had not been neceſſary. Satan goes about without intermiſſion to ruin it. But what low thoughts doſt thou entertain of it, that wilt not break thy reſt to ſave it from ruin?

2. Thou knoweſt not the excellency of precious Chriſt; ſleep locks up thine eyes that thou canſt not ſee the raviſhing ſight, John i. 10. The eyes of ſaints and angels are fixed on him, as the glory of the upper houſe: the eyes opened here by grace, are arreſted by his overcoming glory. Hence are theſe rapturous expreſſions in ſcripture, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘ Whom have I ‘ in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth ‘ that I deſire beſides thee.’ Cant. i. 3. ‘ Becauſe of ‘ the ſavour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ‘ ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love ‘ thee.’ Zion's crowned king is making his progreſs through the city where thou dwelleſt; the cry to come out and behold him, reaches thine ears, Cant. iii. ult.: but while he goes by thou muſt have yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep, and ſo thou loſeſt the ſight. The royal bridegroom ſtretches forth his hand unto thee, to eſpouſe thee, ſaying, Behold me, behold me; thou openeſt thy drowſy eyes, and beginneſt to ſtretch forth the hand; but ſleep overcomes thee, thine eyes cloſe, and thy hand falls down again, and the match is marred. The chariot of the covenant that is driving on to his Father's houſe, halts at thy door, and thou art called out; the ſhip is to ſail to Immanuel's land, thou art called to come on board: but yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep, and all is loſt.

3. Thou knoweſt not the worth of precious time. The apoſtle will have time redeemed, Eph. v. 16.; but thou ſquandereſt it away, as a thing of no value: and working time is turned by thee into ſleeping time. Precious moments ſlip away, and thou regardeſt not; though once gone they can never be recalled. What would thoſe who are paſt hope, give for an hour of that time, whereof thou letteſt days, months, and years, ſlip without any improvement for eternity? O unhappy ſoul, who ‘ knoweſt not in this thy day, the things that belong ‘ unto thy peace!’

4. Thou knoweſt not the weight of the wrath of God. It is true none can have a full comprehenſion of it, Pſal. xc. 11. ‘ Who knoweth the power of thine anger?’ But all the elect of God get ſuch a notion of it, as rouſes them up to fly from it, 2 Cor. v. 11. ‘ Knowing the ‘ terror of the Lord, (ſays the apoſtle,) we perſuade ‘ men.’ And if thou hadſt tolerable apprehenſions of it, it would break off thy ſleep and ſlumber, and cauſe thee put forth thy hands to work. Didſt thou conſider what ‘ a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the ‘living God,’ and how when thou falleſt down again into thy bed of ſloth, thou art truly in hazard of it, it would give thee ſuch a gliff as would keep thee waking.

There are three things thou doſt not obſerve.

1. Thou doſt not obſerve what ſpeed thy ruin is making, while thou lieſt at eaſe; how thy ‘judgment lingereth not, and thy damnation ſlumbereth not,’ 2 Pet. ii. 3. The avenger of blood is purſuing thee, though thou art not fleeing from the wrath to come. Thou art like a man ſleeping in a leaky ſhip, which is drawing water every moment, and within a little it will be full, and ſink to the bottom of the ſea, if he do not awake and help it. Every hour thy debt is growing, the cup of wrath is filling, and fills ſo much the faſter, as thou art ſecure.

2. Thou doſt not obſerve how near thy deſtruction may be. Thou art like the old world, who ‘were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not untill the flood came, and took them all away,’ Matth. xxiv. 38, 39. Thy ſpiritual lethargy and dead ſleep hinders thee from hearing the ſound of the feet of the approaching ſtroke. Thou lieſt open to the moſt terrible ſurpriſe, to ſleep the ſleep of death, which thou mayeſt never awake out of till in hell, Luke xii. 19, 20. and xvi. 23. And O how ſad is it for men to be paſt hope, ere they begin to fear; to have the houſe falling, ere they get over their bed!

3. Thou doſt not obſerve how utterly unable thou art to ward off the blow when it comes: Iſa. xxxiii. 14. ‘The ſinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurpriſed the hypocrites; who among us ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings?’ Ezek. xxii. 14. ‘Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be ſtrong in the days that I ſhall deal with thee? I the Lord have ſpoken it, and will do it.’ Can worm man ſtand before the Almighty God, whoſe patience may be worn out ere thou awake? And if mercy and patience quit the field, juſtice will ſucceed into their room; and there ſhall be no more ſleeping, nor eaſe for ever.

Uſe 3. Of Reproof to delayers of ſalvation-work. Why do ye go on in this ſoul ruining courſe? Have ye no reſpect to the calls of the goſpel, none to your ſouls, none to eternity? Why do not ye with all your might whatever your hand findeth to do; I would apply myſelf here,

1. To delaying ſaints.
2. To delaying ſinners.

I. To delaying ſaints; for ſuch there may be, and of ſuch there are many at this day, Cant. v. 2, 3.; and our text is a general truth and warning. Spiritual ſloth is ſo interwoven with our corrupt natures, that it will never be quite rooted out, till the corrupt nature be perfectly expelled. And as it remains in great meaſure in the ſaints, ſo it is fruitful of delays. There are theſe five delays incident even to the ſaints.

1. A delay of righting their caſe when matters are wrong, by renewing their repentance, and the actings of faith. Sometimes their caſe is quite out of order; their graces are not in exerciſe; they are ſtrangers to the Spirit's influences, and to acceſs to and communion with God in duties. They have a ſecret diſſatisfaction with this, and are reſolved to get to their feet again; but ſloth maſters them, and the work is put off from time to time; as was the caſe with the ſpouſe, Cant. v. 2, 3. ‘I ſleep, but my heart waketh, (ſays ſhe:) it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, ſaying, Open to me my ſiſter, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night. I have put off my coat, how ſhall I put it on? I have waſhed my feet, how ſhall I defile them?’

2. The delaying to give up with ſome boſom-idol that mars their communion with God, Cant. iii. 1. Pſal. lxvi. 18. They are convinced, that the harbouring of it does much harm to their ſouls caſe, and many reſolutions they take to put the knife to the throat of it, but ſtill they draw back their hand. And from one time to another the crucifying of it is put off; ſo that ſtill it lives like a waſter in the candle, cauſing the ſoul's caſe go to wreck.

3. The delaying to clear their ſtate before the Lord. They ſee need to have marches rid, and to be brought to a point whether they be in Chriſt or not, whether in a ſtate of grace or not. They have reſolutions to put it to a ſolemn trial, to examine themſelves, and ſearch what evidences they have for a title to heaven; but ſtill the heart draws back, and the trial is put off.

4. The delaying of ſome particular duty, or piece of generation-work, which they are convinced God calls them to. They have often thoughts of ſetting about it in earneſt; but ſtill ſome one thing or other intervenes, and it is put off. They begin perhaps ſometimes; but it is broken off again, and they muſt yet have a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep.

5. laſtly, The delaying of actual preparation for eternity; like the virgins, Matth. xxv. 5. who, ‘while the Bridegroom tarried, all ſlumbered and ſlept.’ They ſee that it is no eaſy thing to die; they reſolve to labour to put themſelves through grace into a caſe for it; but day after day it is delayed. The lamps are not trimmed for meeting the Bridegroom. Though they be in a good ſtate, they have not a dying frame.

To all ſuch I would ſay, as Jonah i. 6. ‘What meaneſt thou, O ſleeper? ariſe, call upon thy God, if ſo be that God will think upon thee, that thou periſh not.’ Let me expoſtulate with you upon this head, O delaying ſaints,

1. Do ye find yourſelves any thing the nearer your purpoſe by all your delays? Nay, the longer ye delay, do not ye find yourſelves the farther from it? Does not your averſion and backwardneſs to duty grow upon you the more? and is not your confidence in the Lord ſtill the more leſſened? Yes, the more ye give yourſelves to ſpiritual ſleep, the more ye will deſire to ſleep.

2. Do not ye find this the way to rank poverty and want? Your conſciences will witneſs the truth of that, that where the diligent ſhall abound with bleſſings, the idle ſoul ſhall ſuffer hunger. Is it with you as in months paſt? Have ye that ſenſe and guſt of religion, that acceſs to God in duties, which ye have had when ye were doing with your might what your hand found to do?

3. Has not your poverty come upon you as one that travelleth? Have ye not been ſometimes, like Samſon, awaked out of Delilah's lap, and found your ſtrength gone from you when you had moſt to do with it? Perhaps thou haſt ſpent many days in eſtrangment from God, with much eaſe, but at length ſome ſtrong temptation, or piercing trial has overtaken you; and then you have ſucked the bitter ſap of your ſlothful delays.

4. A little more ſleep, a little more ſlumber, a little more folding of the hands to ſleep, and the occaſion may be loſt, the opportunity for doing neglected duties may be loſt. Either they may be taken from you, or ye from them. No man has a tack of his life, nor of occaſions of doing good; and therefore ‘as we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſehold of faith,’ Gal. vi. 10. And though the ſoul that is in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved ſurely, yet this will make the ſalvation to be ſo as by fire.

5. laſtly, The long-delayed work is hard work when it comes to the ſetting to, Cant. v. 5.—8. When the awakening comes, there may be little time, much oppoſition, and leſs ſtrength than otherwiſe thou wouldſt have had, and yet more to do with it than otherwiſe. The longer thy hand is from thy caſe, the more ravelled will it be. And it will readily occaſion much fear, darkneſs, and perplexity, in a dying hour.

II. I would apply myſelf to delaying ſinners, to thoſe that are yet out of Chriſt, and have all to do for eternity ſtill. They are living in a ſtate of wrath, and yet they linger, and put off their removal from Sodom. They delay repentance, and go on in their ſin. I would ſay to you, as Prov. vi. 9. ‘ How long wilt thou ſleep, O ‘ ſluggard? when wilt thou ariſe out of thy ſleep?’ I muſt expoſtulate with you on this head,

Firſt, Ye young people, why do ye delay repentance? why are ye like the wild aſſes colts, untractable and unteachable? No doubt ye think it is too ſoon for you; that it may be time enough ſeveral years after this. Ye think repentance and ſeriouſneſs ſuits beſt with the wrinkled brows, the pale face, and hollow eyes, &c. that it is pity to ſpoil the bloom of youth with ſuch work. When do ye mind to repent then? It is like, it is when ye are ſettled in the world, or when ye grow old; at leaſt the days of youth muſt be over firſt. But poor fool,

1. Is the debt of ſin ſo ſmall upon thy head, that thou muſt run thyſelf deeper in the debt of God's juſtice? Doſt not thou know that thou waſt born a child of wrath, Eph. ii. 3.; that thou broughteſt that into the world with thee, that will damn thee, if thou repent not, and come to Chriſt? And will not that ſink thee deep enough in deſtruction, though thou add no more to it, unleſs thou repent?

2. Is not the ſame holy law binding on thee, ſince thou could diſcern betwixt good and evil, that is binding on the oldeſt alive? Have the young a liberty to ſin, and to caſt off the fear of God and religion, more than the old? See Gal. iii. 10. ‘ For as many as are of ‘ the works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is ‘ written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in ‘ all things which are written in the book of the law ‘ to do them.’ Here there is no exception. The follies of youth men may paſs: but aſſure yourſelves, God will not paſs them: Eccleſ. xi. 9. ‘ Rejoice, O young ‘ man, in thy youth, and let thy heart chear thee in the ‘ days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine ‘ heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes: but know thou, ‘ that for all theſe things, God will bring thee into ‘ judgment.’ And I doubt not, but if ye ſaw your ſinful thoughts, words, and actions, whether vain or vile, laid before you, as you muſt reckon for them at length, how few ſoever your years have been, you will ſee them to be more than the hairs on your heads. And I muſt tell you, that being yet unrenewed, and ſtrangers to the life of grace, all your actions have been ſin: Prov. xxi. 4. ‘ An high look, a proud heart, and the ploughing ‘ of the wicked is ſin.’ And is it not then high time to repent.

3. Who has aſſured thee, that ever thou ſhalt ſee the age thou ſpeakeſt of? Go to the church-yard, and ye will ſee graves of all ſizes, of your length, and under. There are far more young corpſes, than there are of thoſe that carry gray hairs, ten to one. It is obſerved, by theſe who have accurately examined the records of the dead, that one half of mankind die before five years of age, and near a third more before twenty. How few then muſt arrive at old age? Moſt men and women are cut off before they come to old age. What has befallen others as young and flouriſhing as you, may befal you too. And therefore, ſince ye know not but ye may die young, repent while ye are young, leſt in the end ye find yourſelves miſerably diſappointed.

4. Who has beſt right to your youth and ſtrength? God or the devil? God is courting you for his own gift, Eccleſ. xii. 1. ‘ Remember now thy Creator in the days ‘ of thy youth.’ Satan will labour to keep his poſſeſſion. God is the firſt and laſt; and he required the firſt and beſt, the firſt-fruits, the firſt-born, the morning ſacrifice; and he requires the firſt of your days, and he takes pleaſure therein, Jer. ii. 2. ‘ I remember thee, the kindneſs of thy youth, the love of thine eſpouſals, when ‘ thou wenteſt after me in the wilderneſs, in a land ‘ that was not ſown.’ And will ye devote the firſt and beſt to ſin and Satan, reſerving the laſt and worſt to your Creator?

5. Great is the advantage of thoſe that get a grip of religion while they are young, beyond others, in many reſpects. (1.) Readily their paſſage in the pangs of the new birth will be eaſier than that of others. In none is that ſcripture fulfilled more, Mark iv. 27. of ‘ the ſeeds ſpringing and growing up, none knoweth ‘ how,’ than where grace joins with good education in young perſons. The nail lately driven draws eaſily in compariſon of that which has been long ruſted in. Where grace catches perſons before they begin to dip into the groſs pollutions of the world, it frees them of much remorſe that theſe muſt occaſion to thoſe that have been led away with them. (2.) Young people's affections are eaſieſt moved; and as they move eaſieſt, ſo they move moſt vigorouſly, whatever way they be ſet. Hence they lie moſt fair for taſting the ſweet of religion, Hoſ. ii. 14. ‘ I will allure her, and bring her into the ‘ wilderneſs, and ſpeak comfortably unto her.’ God ſometimes dandling young converts upon the knees, and giving them ſenſible taſtes of the pleaſure of religion, is agreeable to the particular promiſe made for their encouragement, Prov. viii. 17. ‘ I love them that love me, ‘ and thoſe that ſeek me early, ſhall find me.’ (3.) They are in the faireſt way to have moſt acceſs to ſerve God in their generation. Suppoſe a man to be converted when he is old, his ſalvation will be ſecure; but alas! his time for ſerving God's honour in the world is almoſt gone ere he puts hand to work.

6. laſtly, God commands you to repent preſently, and therefore it is on the peril of your ſoul, that ye venture to delay a moment longer, Heb. iii. 7, 8. ‘ To‘day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.’ Remember that word, Eccleſ. xi. 9, 10. ‘ Rejoice, O ‘ young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart chear thee ‘ in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy ‘ heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes: but know thou, ‘ that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judg‘ment. Therefore remove ſorrow from thy heart, and ‘ put away evil from thy fleſh: for childhood and youth ‘ are vanity.’ A ſinful youth will at length make a ſad ſoul. Ye know not how ſoon God may be provoked againſt you to cut you off, if you delay. Monuments of the Lord's anger have been ſet up in childhood and youth, as well as in old age. Witneſs the children at Bethel, 2 Kings ii. 23, 24.

Let not Satan deceive you, as if there were no pleaſure in religion. No; wiſdom's ‘ ways are ways of ‘ pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace.’ Prov. iii. 17. There is a ſweet in religion a thouſand times preferable to all the pleaſures and vanities youth gades after.

Secondly, Ye middle aged people, why do ye delay repentance? Why do not ye think with yourſelves ſeriouſly, where ye are like to take up your eternal lodging, and prepare for eternity by repentance? No doubt ye think ye have time enough too; but no time at preſent, for ye have another thing ado, the care of a family upon your heads, Luke xiv. 20. When is your term day of repentance? It is like it is when ye ſhall have more time than now, or when ye grow old. But, O Sirs,

1. What know ye that ever ye ſhall ſee old age? Yea, what doſt thou know, but, as Luke xii. 20. ‘ this night ‘ thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee?’ Alas! ſhall men thus from time to time venture their eternal ſtate upon a mere uncertainty? Thy life is but a day, a ſhort day, a winter day, and thou haſt a long journey to go; thy forenoon is paſt already, and wilt thou ſleep on till evening that will ſoon be upon thee? The declining ſun calls thee to awake.

2. What reaſon is there, that thy buſineſs in the world ſhould ſhuffle out thy buſineſs for eternity? Remember they had as good excuſes as you, who upon the ſending of them were rejected, and it was declared their day of grace was paſt, Luke xiv. 18, 19, 20. 24. Oh haſt thou not a ſoul to provide for, thy eternal ſtate to look after? Can ye wonder, if, as ye prefer the world to Chriſt now, he give you your portion in this life; and if ever the time come that thou ſet thyſelf to repent, he deny thee his grace, and bid thee go to the gods thou haſt ſerved?

3. Conſider the advantages thou haſt now for ſeriouſneſs, when the foam of youth has ſettled, and the infirmities of old age have not yet drawn on. O conſider, and ſhew yourſelves men. Ye have ſpent your youth in vanity, and will ye ſpend this age too that way? What is it ye deſign for God, the dregs of thy years, that age that is the ſink of infirmities? and ye will part with ſin, when ye can follow it no longer. O Sirs, what confidence can ye have, that God will accept that off your hand? Mal. i. 8. ‘ And if ye offer the blind for ſacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and ſick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governour, will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon? ſaith the Lord of hoſts.’

4. Suppoſe ye ſhould live till ye grow old, O how few are there that get grace to repent when they are old? I ſhall not ſay, there are none ſuch; but truly though they be, they are very rare. Be not ye encouraged to delay, becauſe ſome were called at the eleventh hour, Matth. xx. 6. for if ye mark the text, theſe were others than thoſe that were ſtanding there at the third ſixth, and ninth hour. We ſet no bounds to ſovereignty, but as for thoſe that live under the goſpel, and ſpend their beſt days in ſin and eſtrangedneſs from religion, common obſervation tells us, that it is God's ordinary way to plague them with hardneſs of heart, when they grow old, Job xx. 11. ‘ His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.’ About three hundred years after Chriſt, there was one that had lived a Pagan till he was an old man; when he told Simplicianus that he was a Chriſtian, he would not believe him: but when the church ſaw that he was really ſo, there was great ſhouting and gladneſs, ſaying, Caius Marius Victorius is become a Chriſtian! They wondered to ſee a man when he was old born again.

5. laſtly, Will ye ſee the deceit of delays. When ye were young, did not ye put it off to this time; and now when that is come, ye are as unready as before. Delay no more then, leſt ye ſleep the ſleep of death.

Thirdly, Old people, why do ye delay repentance: why is not your heart bowing to God's call, when ye are begun to bow to meet the grave? ye who have always thought ye had time enough all your days, ye will think there is time enough yet. But when is your term day for repentance? a death bed, it is like. And when ye come there, ye will hope it will be but a ſick bed, and ſo drive off your work to the utmoſt point. But O ſirs!

1. May not the time paſt of your life ſuffice to have wrought the will of the fleſh? Muſt ye have yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep? Well, when ye have taken it over the belly of God's call to you all your days, what confidence can ye have to look for grace or mercy then? Sin, Satan, and the world ſhall have all your time, and ye will look to God, and ſeek his favour, when ye can do no more. O, are ye not afraid, that that be accompliſhed on you? Prov. i. 24. &c. ‘ Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof; I alſo will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirlwind; when diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon you,’ &c. I trow if your conſcience were awakened juſt now, ye ſhould have enough ado to faſten your feet on a promiſe of mercy.

2. How do ye know, that ye will get a death-bed or ſick-bed? What do ye know, but that in a moment ye may drop into eternity, as many have done? Mind him who uſed to ſay, three words would do his turn at death. Death does not always ſend meſſengers to warn us of its approach. Nay, ſee what our Lord ſays expreſsly, Matth. xxiv. 48. to 51. ‘ If that evil ſervant ſhall ſay in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming. And ſhall begin to ſmite his fellow-ſervants, and to eat and drink with the drunken: the Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of; and ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.’

3. laſtly, And is dying ſuch an eaſy buſineſs, that ye muſt be laying up other work, yea your main work, for a dying time? I ſhould think, that dying itſelf, with the pains, throes, and ſickneſs that ordinarily attend it, were enough of themſelves. Surely, if we were rightly exerciſed in health, we would endeavour, that when we come to die, we ſhould have nothing ado but to die. But I pray you remember, you may come to die roving, without the exerciſe of your reaſon. But though ye ſhould have it to the laſt, I pray you conſider, is the work of repentance ſuch an eaſy work as to leave it till the time you can do nothing elſe? Will ye put off turning to God, till ye are not able to turn yourſelves on a bed, but as ye are lifted? Taking heaven by ſtorm, till your ſtrength be gone? Crying to God, till ye are not able to ſpeak two ſentences at once? Making ready for death, till it be come to your bed-ſide?

Use. ult. I exhort you all to delay repentance and ſalvation-work no longer.

Mot. 1. Conſider ye do but mock God, and cheat yourſelves by your delaying. For it is inconſiſtent with a ſincere purpoſe to repent, and turn from ſin, 1 Pet. iv. 1, 2, 3. For he that ſincerely minds to turn from ſin, will preſently turn from it.

Mot. 2. Repentance is not in your power; it is God's gift, which he gives when he will, Acts v. 31. ‘ God hath exalted Chriſt with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael.’ The time of God's grace is limited; a time wherein he will be found, and when not: Iſa. lv. 6. ‘ Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.’ Death certainly puts a period to it. But it ſeems to be clear, that men may out-live their day of grace: Luke xiv. 24. ‘ I ſay unto you, that none of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.’ Time was when Eſau might have had the bleſſing, but then he deſpiſed it; but the time came when he could not have it: Heb. xii. 17. ‘ Ye know how that afterwards when he would have inherited the bleſſing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears.’ Strike in then with the occaſion; for if wind and tide fail, there can be no ſetting to ſea.

Mot. 3. Though we knew certainly, that our day of grace were far from the end; yet it is a moſt unworthy thing ſo to deal with God. Shall men abuſe mercy and grace, becauſe the Lord waiteth to be gracious? Will men abuſe the divine patience, becauſe it ſuffers long? What a folly is it to ſtand off as long as we can from him, to whom we muſt needs ſubmit ourſelves at length?

Mot 4. The time is ſhort, the work great, and ſo is the oppoſition. Salvation-work is a great work; it is no eaſy thing to be a Chriſtian: ye muſt lay your account with all the oppoſition the devil, the world, and the fleſh can make you; ye have but an age that is as an hand-breadth, as nothing, to do it in.

Mot. 5. Your life is moſt uncertain. We are tenants at will, we have no tack for to morrow, James iv. 13, 14. forecited. We are agreed about the neceſſity of repentance; the only queſtion is, When ſhall it be done? God ſays, To day, and to morrow is not yours, but God's. How then can ye deſtinate for this uſe the time that is not yours; “ Return to God one day before thy death,” ſay the Jewiſh doctors. Wiſely ſaid; return then to day, for it may be ye ſhall die to morrow.

Mot. 6. The longer ye delay, the work will be the harder. For ſin becomes ſtronger, as the waters, the farther from the head, the greater they grow. And the arrow that going from the bow ſtrays from the mark, how far wide will it be ere it come to the utmoſt point? It is obſerved, that Chriſt groaned at the raiſing of Lazarus four days dead; but not ſo at the raiſing of the young man of Nain, or Jairus's daughter. Jer. xiii. 23. 'Can the Ethiopian change his ſkin, or the leopard his ſpots? then ye may alſo do good, that are 'accuſtomed to do evil.' Their number increaſeth; the devil who comes alone at firſt, at length his name is Legion. The heart grows harder, the mind blinder, the will more perverſe, the affections more carnal.

Mot. 7. A moment's delay may be an eternal loſs, becauſe thou knoweſt not any moment that may not be thy laſt.

Mot. ult. God commands you to repent preſently, Heb. iv. 7. Therefore upon your peril it is, if ye delay any more.

Object. The thief on the croſs repented at the laſt gaſp. Anſw. His repentance was one of the miracles at Chriſt's death; and he glorified God more at his death than ye could if ye had been a penitent all your days. But though there was one that none might deſpair, yet there was but one that none might preſume. The other thief even died as he lived.

The extraordinary Caſe of the Thief on the Croſs no Argument for delaying REPENTANCE.

Two SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in June 1717.

LUKE xxiii. 42.

And he ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom.

THE love that ſinners bear to their luſts, and the conviction men generally have of the neceſſity of repentance, each of them putting in for a ſhare, do natively produce a delay. And Satan and the corrupt heart join to ſupport the delaying temper, both by pretended reaſons, and abuſed examples: amongſt which laſt none is more ſo than this of the thief who repented on the croſs.

My great deſign being to convince you, that this inſtance can be no encouragement to delay repentance, I need not here lay for a foundation the proof of this man's ſincerity, which the text and context put beyond all doubt; nor inſiſt on explaining this his prayer, full of faith and repentance, which had a moſt gracious anſwer.

Every body knows the ſtory; and they that know very little of the Bible, will be found acquainted with this inſtance of the penitent thief on the croſs; and they abuſe it to their own ruin, drawing encouragement from it to put off repentance till they come to a death-bed.

We need not much wonder, that this becomes a ſtumbling-ſtone to many, on which they are ruined. Hearing the thief was converted near the laſt gaſp, and having led a ſinful life, the thread was ſuddenly broken, and he died happily; his day was a dark day all over, till in the evening the ſun broke out with a bright though ſhort glimpſe, and then ſet: that is, I ſay, abuſed and turned to a ſtumbling ſtone by impenitent ſinners, is no great wonder, if ye conſider the following things.

1. As a vitious ſtomach corrupts the beſt of meat; ſo impenitent ſinners abuſe the beſt things to their own ruin: ſo that what raiſes up others taught of God, is an occaſion of falling to them. The altar of God, and the whole law was ſo to the unbelieving Jews, Rom. xi. 9. Is not the very goſpel, and the preachers thereof, a ſavour of death to ſome? 2 Cor. ii. 6. Nay, Chriſt himſelf is a ſtumbling block to them, 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8.

2. There is a particular diſpoſition in the hearts of impenitent ſinners to abuſe and wreſt the ſcriptures. Hence Peter ſpeaking of Paul's epiſtles, ſays, 'In them 'are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they 'that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo 'the other ſcriptures, unto their own deſtruction,' 2 Pet. iii. 16. The ſcripture is a light, and a rule of divine authority; and it may well be expected, that if ſinners cannot but perſuade themſelves of a ſhelter there for their ſins, it will be the moſt effectual one. This is the moſt feaſible means for ſtilling the clamours of an ill conſcience, and cheating men into their own ruin.

3. Abuſed ſcripture is one of the chief pieces of Satan's armour, wherewith he maintains and promotes his kingdom among thoſe that have the ſcriptures. Thus Satan ſaid to Chriſt, Matth. iv. 6. 'If thou be the Son 'of God, caſt thyſelf down: for it is written, He ſhall 'give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their 'hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou 'daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone.' Hence unclean perſons ſtill their conſciences with the example of David, ſwearers with that of Joſeph by the life of Pharaoh, or Peter's, &c. Men that are mere moraliſts ſcreen themſelves with that, Micah vi. 8. 'He hath ſhewed thee, O man, 'what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, 'but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and walk humbly 'with thy God?' And others ſatisfy themſelves with good meanings and deſires, becauſe of that, Matth. v. 6. 'Bleſſed are they which do hunger and thirſt after 'righteouſneſs; for they ſhall be filled.' Others think, they may repent at any time, from that ſcripture, Ezek. xviii. 27. 'When the wicked man turneth away from 'his wickedneſs that he hath committed, and doth that 'which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive.' And thus it becomes harder to convince men that have ſome notional knowledge of the Bible, than thoſe that never knew it.

4. Reigning love to ſin makes people very dexterous to find out ſhifts for to preſerve their luſts; as in Saul's ſpeech to Samuel, 1 Sam. xv. 15. 'They have brought 'them from the Amalekites: for the people ſpared the 'beſt of the ſheep and of the oxen, to ſacrifice unto the 'Lord thy God, and the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed.' What people would fain have to be true, it is eaſy to perſuade them of: and what they are loath to part with, it is not hard to invent ſhifts to hold it ſtill. Were men willing to be the Lord's, they would be ſo preſently; and they would be loath to delay one moment; leſt they ſhould never ſee another.

To come to this particular inſtance in the text, I muſt tell you, That though here is ground of hope for poor trembling ſinners, that they may be brought to repentance, and be accepted of God; yet there is no ground here for crafty delaying ſinners to put off repentance, in hopes to go through with it afterwards, eſpecially in a dying hour.

I. There is ground of hope for trembling ſinners. And we may learn from this inſtance theſe following leſſons.

1. They may go long on, and far on in the way to hell, whom yet God may bring home to himſelf. Here is a man, a thief, whoſe courſe brought him to an ill end, to a violent death, and yet grace reaches him. See the following remarkable paſſage, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, 11. ‘Know ye not that the unrighteous ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abuſers of themſelves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, ſhall inherit the kingdom of God. And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.’ From this it appears, that ſome of the Corinthian converts had been formerly the vileſt of wretches, and guilty of the moſt enormous lewdneſs and impiety; and yet became famous monuments of the triumphs of ſovereign efficacious grace. What a length did Manaſſeh and Paul go; and yet what illuſtrious penitents did they afterwards become? The latter juſtly acquired the character of the greateſt of ſaints, and the moſt eminent of all the apoſtles.

2. Grace ſometimes catches them that in appearance, and to the eyes of the world, are fartheſt from it. It paſſeth by the moſt likely, and pitches on the moſt unlikely objects. While chief prieſts, ſcribes, and elders mock Chriſt, the thief on the croſs is converted. The Lord loves to ſet up the trophies of his victory in the midſt of the devil's kingdom. Hence is that promiſe, Iſa. lv. 5. ‘Behold, thou ſhalt call a nation that thou knoweſt not, and nations that knew not thee, ſhall run unto thee, becauſe of the Lord thy God, and for the holy One of Iſrael; for he hath glorified thee.’

3. Grace makes a vaſt difference betwixt thoſe betwixt whom it finds none. Here are two thieves, both on the croſs; graces touches the heart of the one, but paſſeth by the other; and makes the one a convert, while the other dies hardened. So true is Paul's obſervation, Rom. ix. 16. ‘So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy.’

4. laſtly, While there is life there is hope. Here is one converted when near the laſt gaſp; while his laſt ſand is running, grace overtakes him; opens the eyes that before were cloſed, wins the heart that had been all along hardened. But I ſtay not on theſe things. Only the uſe that is to be made of this is,

1. Let thoſe that ſeek God early be encouraged from this, that they ſhall find him, Prov. viii. 17. ‘I love them that love me, and thoſe that ſeek me early ſhall find me.’ Was he ſo ready to receive a penitent ſoul coming in at the laſt hour, then ſurely he will be very ready to receive thee that comes in before that time. He rejected him not becauſe he was long a-coming; but received him becauſe he came. Come then forward with aſſured hope of thy acceptance upon thy early return.

2. Let not thoſe whoſe day is almoſt gone, before they have begun their work, deſpair. Who knows but that may be done in the evening, that was neglected the whole day before? A gale from heaven may blow, that may put life in an old ſinner, and make his fleſh freſher than that of a child. The door of the vineyard ſtands open for labourers to come in even at the eleventh hour. Sovereignty is not penned up to times and ways, but takes a latitude in both.

3. laſtly, Let us ſow beſide all waters, in the morning and in the evening. It depends on the working of free grace, which ſhall proſper. We are ready to be hopeleſs of ſucceſs, where perſons have long ſtood out againſt the Lord. But God's heavy hand on a man, and a view of eternity, may afford a ſeaſon wherein the wild aſs may be caught.

II. But there is no ground here for the crafty delaying ſinner to put off repentance, eſpecially till a dying hour. To ſet this matter in a true light, conſider theſe following things.

1. It is a moſt rare example. There is not an inſtance like it in all the book of God, unleſs it be that of Achan, Joſh. vii. 20, 21. Yet the Lord has left that caſe of Achan's much under a cloud; ſo that it is not poſitively determined, as this is, though we may charitably hope the beſt in his caſe too. Now, here I would have you to conſider, 1ſt, What leſs could there have been to have cleared a poſſibility of acceptance with God, for a ſinner at the laſt, after he has ſpent all his days in ſin? If we had not this inſtance, what could have been ſaid to ſhew ſuch wretched miſ-ſpenders of time, that ever any that was ſo long a ſetting off in their journey to heaven did get in? And becauſe this ſays, that none ſhould deſpair; muſt it therefore import, that they may ſafely delay? The ſun once ſtood ſtill in the days of Joſhua; which ſays it is poſſible ſuch a thing may be; but will any man delay his work in hope of ſuch an extraordinary caſt again? and why will ye?

2dly, As one ſwallow makes not ſpring, ſo neither can this one event make a general rule that you or I may truſt to. The ordinary rule is, That as men live, ſo they die; a holy life, a happy end; a graceleſs, careleſs life, an unhappy and miſerable end. Becauſe providence may go off the ordinary road, and do that in a few minutes with ſome, that ordinarily coſts many years to others; can you venture eternity on that, that he will do ſo with you? Moſes faſted forty days and nights, Exod. xxxiv. 28. yet who will venture on that in hopes of having his life preſerved without food?

3dly, Are there not eminent inſtances to the contrary, wherein men living in their ſin have been ſtruck down in a moment, getting no time to repent of them, but fiery wrath has put an end to their days? Conſider the caſe of Nadab and Abihu, Lev. x. 1, 2. of whom it is thought they had erred through drink, verſe 9. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. xvi. 31. &c. Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. who died inſtantly with a lie in their mouth. But why do I inſtance in particular perſons? did not millions die together in their ſins, by the deluge that ſwept away the old world, the fire and brimſtone that burned up Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim. What multitudes were there there, who being warned, put off to the day they never ſaw? And ſhall this one inſtance encourage you to delay, over the belly of the dreadful example of millions on the other hand.

4thly, The moſt that this ſo rare an example can amount to, is a poſſibility. It is not ſo much as a probability or likelihood. That is a probable event, which though it does not always fall out, yet for the moſt part it does ſo; as the huſbandman getting more than his ſeed again. But from what is ſaid, it appears, that for the moſt part it falls out otherwiſe, namely, that people even die as they live. So that it is probable, that if thou do not repent before, God will deny thee grace to repent at the laſt. How then can a man that has any belief of a God, a heaven, a hell, venture his ſalvation on a mere poſſibility, while the probability lies the other way?

2. Though there were two thieves on the croſs at that time, yet it was but one of them that got grace to repent. The one indeed was a true penitent; but the other died as he lived, hardened in his ſin; nay perhaps worſe; for he died blaſpheming the Son of God, before whoſe tribunal he was to appear, ver. 39. Now, upon this I would make theſe rational reflections.

1ſt, Is it not poſſible that thou mayeſt die blaſpheming, if thou do not repent now in time? Thou canſt not deny the poſſibility of it, when there is ſuch a plain inſtance of it in the caſe of one of theſe thieves. Thou thinkeſt it may be thou may die a penitent with the good thief; and I ſay, it may be thou mayeſt die blaſpheming with the other. The one is even as certain, as to us, as the other. Thou liveſt impenitent all thy days; when thou comeſt to a death-bed, God may withhold his grace from thee which thou haſt all along refuſed; he may let thee ſee thy caſe hopeleſs for ever, and thou mayeſt be filled with deſpair; and in that caſe it is more than poſſible that both tongue and heart may riſe againſt God.

2dly, It is at leaſt an equal venture, that thou mayeſt die impenitent, as that thou mayeſt die a penitent. Thou hopeſt to repent at the laſt; why? becauſe the thief on the croſs repented. And I muſt ſay, that delaying repentance till then, thou runneſt the riſk of dying impenitent; for the other thief died ſo. And who has told thee, whether thy lot ſhall be with the one or with the other? Now, to repent preſently, makes thy ſalvation certain; to delay it, does at beſt leave it to a venture. And conſider with yourſelves ſeriouſly, if ſalvation and damnation be ſuch trifling things, as to be left to an uncertainty, you do not know how it may fall.

3dly, It is inconſiſtent with common ſenſe, to leave that thing to a venture, which may be made ſure, where a hit or a miſs is of the utmoſt concern. Suppoſe a rebel might certainly have his life by a willing ſubmiſſion to his prince, ſhould he chuſe to ſtay till he were apprehended by the officers, he would act moſt unreaſonably, and put his life in hazard where there is no need; as in the caſe of Shimei, 1 Kings ii. 42. A thouſand times more unreaſonable art thou in ſuch delays of repentance, for now thou mayeſt make heaven ſure: but if thou delay, thy ſoul is left to a dreadful venture; and if thou miſs when it comes to the point, thou art ruined for ever.

4thly, Nay but the venture is very unequal; for it is far more likely that delaying thou mayeſt die impenitent, than that thou mayeſt die penitent. Few took part with the good thief amongſt all the croud of ſpectators; the multitude went the other thief's way, mocking, verſe 35. And what caſts the balance here in caſe of likelihood, is,

(1.) Common obſervation, that tells us, that moſt people even die as they live. Repentance is a flower rarely ſeen ſpringing up from a death-bed. A melting of heart for ſin, becauſe of the diſhonour done to God by it, is ſeldom ſeen in ſuch as have lived a graceleſs, careleſs, preſumptuous life; but that diſpoſition even hangs about them to the end.

(2.) It is certain that few are ſaved, in compariſon of them that are left, Matth. vii. 14. 'Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' As to what ſome ſay of the infants of all mankind; all that are ſaved muſt go by the ſtrait gate, and ſtill theſe are few. It is evident, that moſt men live impenitent, yet all muſt die; and therefore it follows, that few get grace to repent at their laſt, but moſt of thoſe that live impenitent even die ſo too.

(3.) The ſad threatenings denounced againſt ſinners going on in their ſin, with reſpect to their latter end: Prov. i. 24.—27. 'Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof; I alſo will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirlwind; when diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon you.' Ezek. xxiv. 13. 'In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs: becauſe I have purged thee, and thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more, till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee.' Now, ſhow me one promiſe in all the Bible, promiſing the grace of repentance to thoſe that delay, for to balance this. It is true, the goſpel-offer is general, and excludes none while in this world: but O what a hazard is there, that theſe threatenings be accompliſhed to the denying the grace to lay hold on them then.

(4.) Corrupt nature ſticks faſt in thee; and it will harden thee in the face of death as well as it does now, unleſs thou get grace from above. Now, that corruption has poſſeſſion long continued already, thou art ſure of it; but thou haſt no certainty for the grace of God to break it in thee, and work repentance in thy ſo long impenitent heart. And therefore I muſt conclude the venture to be very unequal.

(5.) Repentance is not to be wrought by the ſinner's being brought to an extremity, as you may poſſibly imagine. Here was a man that was hanging on a croſs bleeding to death in great torment, having a preſent proſpect of eternity before him, who could have no more pleaſure in the world. But did that humble him? No, no. His heart remains obdured to the laſt gaſp. He is going into eternity; yet he is adding ſin to ſin; and going out of the world as he lived in it, if not worſe. We find from Matth. xxvii. 44. that after the chief prieſts, ſcribes, and elders had mocked and railed on Chriſt, it is added, that the thieves alſo which were crucified with him joined in the railing. Whence ſome think, that even the other too joined in this railing on Chriſt, till grace broke in upon him, and overcame his nature.

(6.) The moſt powerful and likely means of grace will not prevail, unleſs accompanied with a ſpecial operation of the Spirit. This blaſpheming thief was near Chriſt himſelf, and heard his words and groans. He had the example of his companion moving him to repent. Grace was at work working wonders upon his neighbour. He had a dying preacher to call him to repent. The ſun's light was eclipſed, the earth quaked, the rocks rent, the graves opened; yet for all theſe he died impenitent, and hard-hearted. Think on this, ye that deem it ſo eaſy to repent, if ye were come to your laſt.

(7.) They that delay repentance till a dying hour, readily find they have another thing to do then, than to repent; as is evident from the caſe of the other thief on the croſs, verſ. 39. 'And one of the malefactors which were hanged, railed on him, ſaying, If thou be Chriſt, ſave thyſelf and us.' Death is the deſtruction of nature, and therefore nature wreſtles againſt it, though there be no hope. This man was more concerned to get his body ſaved, than to get his ſoul ſaved. And, alas! is not this the caſe of the moſt part at that time? They have ſo much ado with the diſeaſe, that they can hardly get a due concern for their ſouls, or a compoſed thought.

3. There is no evidence that this thief had before ſuch means of grace as you have. Who can ſay, that ever he heard the goſpel preached by Chriſt, or any of his diſciples? It is moſt likely he was a rake; that if he heard any thing of God, it was from the ſcribes and Phariſees at times; and may be, when he might have heard either them, or Chriſt and his diſciples, he was about his thieviſh trade. Now, 1ſt, It is unreaſonable to think, that it ſhould fare at the laſt with thoſe who have had means of grace all their days, and deſpiſed them, as it may do with thoſe who never have ſuch means till they come to die. One would think it no wonder at all to ſee a man converted at his laſt, who gets the firſt notice of Chriſt and the way of ſalvation when on his death bed. But what is that to thee, who haſt all along been invited to repent, and come to Chriſt, but wouldeſt not? The former is no wonder in compariſon of the latter.

2dly, This converſion of the thief doubtleſs was a perfect ſurpriſe to him, a thing he was not looking for. But thou art ſetting tryſt with repentance at thy laſt hours, Can you believe, that ever this thief delayed repentance in hopes of what he met with, namely, to die on a croſs with Chriſt, and then to feel the power of his grace? No body can believe it. What is his example then to thee? Is it rational for thee to expect that favour which one has ſometimes been ſurprized with, and got when he was not looking for it?

4. This thief was converted, when by the hand of public juſtice he was to die. When he was made a public example to the world, and as a malefactor brought to an untimely end, for his crime, he got repentance at the gallows, not on a death-bed. He was cut off perhaps in the midſt of his days; at leaſt he died not by the courſe of nature, nor by any ſickneſs, but was execute for his evil deeds. And it is obſervable, that the one other caſe which looks likeſt to this in the Bible, was of the ſame ſort, namely, Achan's. Now, 1ſt, It is evident, that wicked men, who are running on in ſuch courſes as will bring them to an untimely death, by the laws of the land, ſuch as thieves, robbers, murderers, &c. have a fairer ground from this to delay repentance till they come to the ſcaffold, than you have, who are looking for a death-bed, and delay repentance till you come there. For their caſe is nearer a-kin to this than yours. But are not they moſt fooliſh if they ſo do, even in your eyes? No doubt they are. And ſo are ye in the eyes of others, whoſe eyes God has opened.

2dly, If we compare the caſe of this thief put to death for his crimes, and of other malefactors ſo dying, with the caſe of men that have lived impenitently dying in their beds; though grace is alike free to both, yet, humanly ſpeaking, there is more hope of the repentance of the former than of the latter. And this I ſay on theſe three grounds.

(1.) It is more eaſy to convince a malefactor upon the ſcaffold, of his crime, and the evil of it, and of thoſe other ſins that have been the inlets to it, than to convince another of his ſin on a death bed, as common obſervation ſheweth. Hence our Lord ſays 'that the 'publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God 'before' the ſelf righteous Phariſees, Matth. xxi. 31. Many a time is Sabbath breaking, diſobedience to parents, drunkenneſs, neglect of the means of grace, confeſſed and regretted on a ſcaffold, while there is not one word of them from a death bed, in caſes where there is perhaps as good ground for it. When the corruption of nature breaks out in ſome atrocious crime, that brings a perſon to an untimely end, there is more acceſs to convince them of it, than others who have the ſame plague in them, but it has not ſo appeared.

(2.) The view that the thief had of eternity upon the croſs, and that other malefactors have in ſuch a caſe, is more certain than what impenitent ſinners generally have on a death bed. The one ſee they muſt die without peradventure, the other have ſome hopes of life generally while they have breath. And ſo the terror of death muſt needs be more operative in the one than the other; foraſmuch as there is ſuch a difference in the certainty of the view of it.

(3.) If we except the time wherein both are actually grappling with death, the one with a violent death, the other with a natural one; the former have leſs hindrances from the body to prepare for death than the latter: foraſmuch as the one is toſſed with bodily ſickneſs and indiſpoſition, the other commonly is not.

5. The converſion of the thief on the croſs was an extraordinary manifeſtation of our Lord's power, made for ſpecial reaſons. And therefore though it ſhows what the Lord can do; it does not ſhow what ordinarily he will do. Conſider here, to evince this, that,

1ſt, It was done in ſuch a juncture of time, as the like never was, and the like never will be again; namely, when the Lord of glory, the Saviour of the world, was actually hanging upon the croſs, paying the ranſom for the loſt elect world: Rom. vi. 9. 'Chriſt being 'raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no 'more dominion over him.'

2dly, It was a wonder wrought in a time allotted in a particular manner beyond all times, for God's working of wonders. The time of the Lord's giving the law on mount Sinai, was a time of wonders; but not comparable to this. The leading wonder there was God's making his voice to be heard, and ſpeaking forth a holy law; and it was attended with other wonders, namely, thunders, lightnings, a thick cloud upon the mount, ſmoke, and fire, and the ſound of a terrible trumpet waxing louder and louder, Exod. xix. 16. &c. But the leading wonder on mount Calvary was yet greater, namely, the Son of God, and Saviour of the world, hanging, groaning, dying on a croſs; and therefore the attending wonders were proportionably greater. For,

(1.) The ſun was under a dreadful eclipſe, for the ſpace of not a few minutes, but three hours, Matth. xxvii. 45. The eye of the viſible world was ſtruck blind at the ſight.

(2.) The vail of the temple was, without hands, rent from the top to the bottom, Matth. xxvii. 51; to ſhew that by his death an end was put to the ceremonial law, and the way unto the holieſt of all made open.

(3.) The earth quaked at the dreadful fact of crucifying the Lord of glory, Matth. xxvii. 51.

(4.) The hard rocks rent, upbraiding the ſpectators and guilty multitude with the hardneſs of their hearts, Matth. xxvii. 51.

(5.) The graves were opened, and many of the dead ſaints aroſe, to ſhew that Chriſt by his death had overcome the power of death over his people, Matth. xxvii. 52.

(6.) The ſpectators of thoſe ſtrange things ſmote their breaſts, being ſtruck to the heart, Luke xxiii. 48.

(7.) laſtly, The centurion and his ſoldiers were convinced, that he whom they had crucified was the Son of God, Matth. xxvii. 54.

Now, upon all theſe I would make theſe reflections.

[1.] Is it reaſonable, becauſe the thief was converted at the laſt hour, in a time that the like never was, nor will be, for thee to expect that it ſhall fare ſo with thee? Thou mayeſt as well throw thyſelf into a burning fiery furnace, and hope to come forth ſafe, becauſe Daniel and his fellows were once ſo delivered. Were Chriſt to come again, and to be crucified a ſecond time between two malefactors, and thou wert one of them to be crucified with him, it might be that thou mighteſt be converted at thy laſt hour. And yet thou couldſt not be ſure; for it might be thy lot to be the hardened one, as it was the other thief's. But ſince it is not ſo, how dareſt thou truſt to ſo late a repentance?

[2.] Is it any wiſe ſtrange, that amongſt all theſe wonders of juſtice, power, and faithfulneſs, there was one wonder of mercy upon the thief on the croſs? that the ſame power that was rending the rocks, did mercifully open the heart of one of thoſe thieves to receive Chriſt and his grace? But how canſt thou think that the time of thy departure will be a time of ſuch wonders! And if not, how canſt thou deceive thyſelf into a delay of repentance, in expectation of receiving ſuch a ſignal diſplay of divine grace and mercy!

[3.] Was it not very becoming the divine wiſdom, that when the divine glory of the Son of God was vailed upon the croſs, a ray of it ſhould break forth in the converſion of one of the two that were hanging there with him; that when his judges, and the rulers and people had got him on the croſs as a malefactor, he ſhould have his glory owned by one of thoſe crucified with him: But what is that to thee in a day wherein it is long ſince Chriſt was ſet down at his Father's right hand, and his glory publiſhed through the world by the goſpel.

[4.] Is it any thing ſtrange, that when our Lord was triumphing over principalities and powers, he ſet up one trophy, one ſign of his victory, in the field of battle; Col. ii. 15. Was it not very natural, that he who when he ſhould be liſted up, was to draw all men after him, ſhould actually in the very time draw one after him! But what encouragement can that be to thee to delay to the laſt, when that nick of time is over long ago. And now there are thouſands of viſible monuments of Chriſt's conqueſt by his death ſet up, ſo that thou will never be miſſed, though thou die, as thou liveſt, impenitent.

6. laſtly, The penitent thief on the croſs was not only ſincere, but he glorified Chriſt more in his late repentance, than thou art capable to do by thine, nay more than if thou hadſt lived a penitent all thy days. For conſider, 1ſt, When our Lord was in his loweſt ſtep of humiliation, he profeſſed his faith of his divine nature, and his being king of the other world: 'Lord (ſays he) 'remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom.' What wonderful faith was this, that while Chriſt was ſo low as hanging on a croſs, he owns him king of heaven; that dying, he was going to receive a kingdom; that he has all power there; that he is full of mercy, compaſſion and faithfulneſs; ſo that the very remembrance of him would be ſufficient to ſecure his eternal welfare! Thou mayeſt believe and profeſs all this, but never at ſuch a time. He is now the exalted Redeemer, who has aſcended far above all heavens, and ſits on the right hand of God. But what is that to the glorifying of him in his loweſt humiliation.

2dly, When others had crucified him as a malefactor, and were mocking him, and railing on him, as one that deſerved not common compaſſion, he was praying to him, as Lord of the other world. If thou ſhouldeſt now do ſo too, yet remember how ſmall a thing is that in compariſon of what the good thief did in theſe circumſtances.

Laſtly, All this he did, and more, publickly before a multitude of ſpectators, which thou art not likely to have when thou comeſt to a death bed. He juſtifies God before them all; he condemns himſelf; he does what he can to convince and convert his poor graceleſs companion, who poſſibly ſinned with him as he did ſuffer; he condemns thoſe that crucified Chriſt, and gives his publick teſtimony againſt them as men that feared not God.

To conclude this matter: Repent ye timeouſly, and truſt not to a late repentance. Let not this example of the thief on the croſs, or any thing elſe, make you to delay. Many a call ye have had to return to the Lord; but, alas! to the moſt part they have been ineffectual. God is giving us a providential call to repentance, at this time; he is ſaying to us, as he did to the church of Epheſus, Rev. ii. 5. 'Remember therefore from 'whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt 'works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and 'will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except 'thou repent.' God knows what our preſent trial may end in. But in that dark diſpenſation we may clearly ſee that God is a jealous God, and makes people's ſins to find them out. Repentance would be the moſt feaſible means to extricate us out of our difficulties. If there were a ſpirit of prayer and mourning for the cauſes of the Lord's controverſy with us, it would be a token for good. But, alas! the work of repentance for the moſt part is put off from time to time, till it be put off to a death-bed; and who can ſecure the tryſt to be kept there?

There are three things I would ſay of death-bed-repentance.

1. If it be got, it is the moſt unuſeful repentance for God, and the moſt uncomfortable to one's ſelf. Unuſeful; for then men begin their work for God, when their time is ending; and ſo, though they may be ſaved, yet God gets little honour from them. And uncomfortable to perſons themſelves; for being ſaved, they are ſaved ſo as by fire; they muſt go to heaven by the brink of hell; while they ſee their laſt ſand running, and get their conſciences awakened, eternity muſt once be to them a dreadful ſpectacle.

2. Death-bed-repentance is ſeldom ſincere. The king of terrors may make a Pharaoh ſay, 'I have ſinned.' But what ſincerity is in the moſt part of thoſe things that begin on death-beds, may be learned from the caſe of many, who being paſt hopes of recovery from their ſickneſs, either as to themſelves or others, do yet recover, and turn juſt the old men and women they were before. When the beſt appearances of death-bed repentance are, it is hard to make ſuch concluſions; but as Auguſtine ſaid in ſuch a caſe, Non dico damnabitur, non dico ſalvabitur; ſed tu, dum ſanus es, pœnitentiam age. i. e. I do not ſay, that ſuch a perſon ſhall be damned, or that he ſhall be ſaved: but do thou, whilſt thou art in health, mind the buſineſs of repentance.

3. laſtly, Many truſt to deathbed repentance that never ſee it. Some are ſurpriſed into eternity; ſome are toſſed ſo with ſickneſs that they cannot have a compoſed thought; ſome quickly loſe the uſe of their ſenſes and reaſon; and moſt part die as they live: therefore repent ye in time, and delay no more, leſt ye bring the ruin on your ſouls that will never be recovered.

God's Delay of executing the Sentence of Condemnation againſt ungodly Men, often miſerably abuſed by them.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in Summer 1728.

ECCLES. viii. 11.

Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil.

THIS book of Eccleſiaſtes is in a particular manner a book of providence, wherein Solomon gives his obſerves upon it. It is a ſubject that has puzzled the beſt of men, how to reconcile it with the being and attributes of God: but there is no inconſiſtency; all odds will be made even at length.

He had obſerved ſome ſet on high to their ruin, made rulers of others to their own deſtruction, to the feeding of their own luſts, and ſo aggravating their own condemnation, ver. 9. He had obſerved them live proſperouſly in their wickedneſs, die in honour, and buried magnificently, ver. 10. He opens the ſecret of diſpenſation in the text, namely, That a reprieve is no pardon. In the words we have,

1. God's patience with, and forbearance exerciſed towards ungodly ſinners: Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily. (1.) It is ſuppoſed that ſentence is paſſed in their caſe. There is a righteous ſentence ſtanding againſt an evil work, and the evil worker for what he has done: it is not overlooked, nor forgotten. Heb. doing of the evil; by which is meant an ungodly courſe. This is plain from 1 John iii. 8, 9. 'He that committeth ſin is of the devil; for the devil ſinneth from the beginning. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the devil. Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him: and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God.' See the ſentence, Rom. ii. 9. 'Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil.' (2.) The execution is oft times delayed; it is not ſpeedily execute. Though the word is gone out of the mouth of the Judge, he does not preſently bring on the blow; he ſpares the criminal a while for holy ends. (3.) It ſuppoſeth, that though the execution be ſlow, yet it is ſure, if the ſentence be not got reverſed, and a pardon obtained. Saying, that it is not ſpeedily executed, he intimates that it will be execute at length.

2. The wretched abuſe ſinners make of this patience of God with them. Therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil. Becauſe ſentence is not execute ſpeedily, they think it never will be execute; and ſo they give themſelves the looſe. Their heart is fully ſet in them to do evil. They find providence gives them head, does not check and ſtrike them down in their courſe; and ſo they even run away with themſelves. Their impunity fills their heart for their ſinful courſes, that they drive on like a ſhip with a full ſail before a briſk gale.

Three doctrines may be deduced from the words thus explained.

Doct. I. There is a ſentence paſſed in the court of heaven, and ſtanding, againſt ungodly men, evil workers, however eaſy they be under it for a time.

Doct. II. The Lord often-times does not ſoon come to the execution of the ſentence againſt ungodly men, evil workers: but delays it for a time.

Doct. III. God's delay of execution is often miſerably abuſed by ſinners, to the filling of their hearts to do evil, and ſinning more and more.

I ſhall handle each of theſe doctrines in order.

Doct. I. There is a ſentence paſſed in the court of heaven, and ſtanding, againſt ungodly men, evil workers, however eaſy they be under it for a time.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Shew, that there is a ſentence paſſed in the court of heaven, and ſtanding againſt ungodly men, evil workers.

II. Explain the nature of this ſentence.

III. Make ſome practical improvement of the ſubject.

I. I ſhall ſhew, that there is a ſentence paſſed in the court of heaven, and ſtanding, againſt ungodly men, evil workers.

1. They are already judged and condemned of God, John iii. 18. 'He that believeth not is condemned already, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.' Ungodly men, evil workers, are unbelievers; and being unbelievers, they have not the benefit of abſolution by Chriſt; ſo they are under condemnation of the law for their evil works. For whom the goſpel doth not abſolve, the law doth condemn.

2. Only thoſe that are in Chriſt, are not under condemnation; and their freedom from it is of no older date than their believing, Rom. viii. 1. 'There is no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus.' But evil workers are not in Chriſt, 1 John iii. 8, 9. forecited. If they were in Chriſt, they would be new creatures, 2 Cor. v. 17. 'For if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature.' Therefore they are ſtill under condemnation.

3. They are in a ſtate of death, dead in ſin, Eph. ii. 1. They who are morally dead in ſin, being without a principle of ſpiritual life, Eph. iv. 18. are legally dead too; they are dead men in law, under a ſentence of death, John v. 24. Hence they are called 'children of wrath, of hell,' &c.

4. The power that Satan has over them, proves this. They are cloſe priſoners, bound hand and foot, Iſa. lxi. 1. Satan is the keeper of the priſon, Heb. ii. 14. and they are under his power, Acts xxvi. 18. What gives him the power over them, but that they are condemned in law! Let the ſentence be reverſed, and he has them no more under his power, 1 Cor. xv. 56.

5. laſtly, The Spirit of bondage witneſſeth the truth of this, convincing the ſinner that he is a dead man, Rom. vii. 9. and that he ſtands in need of a remiſſion, chap. iii. 19. This teſtimony is true; for it is the teſtimony of the Spirit of God, whereby he brings ſinners to ſee their need of Chriſt.

II. To explain the nature of this ſentence, conſider,

1. Every evil work is a breach of God's law; and every ſinful thought, word, and action is an evil work: 1 John iii. 4. 'Whoſoever committeth ſin, tranſgreſſeth alſo the law: for ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the law.' No man is lord of himſelf, but is anſwerable to God for every action of his life; and being guilty, if out of Chriſt, he is liable to vengeance, under the curſe; if in Chriſt, he is liable to temporal ſtrokes. So all ungodly ones, evil workers, are liable to the curſe for their ſins.

2. The law is the accuſer, that accuſeth the ſinner of rebellion againſt God, and demandeth vengeance on him, John v. 45. Every command broken by the ſinner accuſeth him before God; and as many breaches as he has made of it, as many articles there are of the libel againſt him. And though theſe be innumerable to men, and many of them unknown to him; they are not ſo unto an omniſcient God.

3. God is the Judge that judgeth and paſſeth the ſentence againſt the guilty, Pſal. l. 6. And he is a judge whom no artful concealment can beguile. He cannot be blinded, bribed, nor biaſſed, 1 Pet. i. 17. His ſentence, however ſevere, is always righteous, Rev. xvi. 7. And there lies no appeal from his tribunal; for there is none above him, who is the Moſt High. Only, while the ſinner is in this world, there is acceſs to a remiſſion in Chriſt.

4. The ſentence is a ſentence of death, Gen. ii. 17. death in its full latitude, comprehending all miſeries of ſoul and body, eternal death in which the gnawing worm never dies, nor is the fire quenched. The ſentence of men are at moſt the death of the body: but his ſentence adjudgeth the ſoul to die eternally. The reaſon is, the infinite dignity of the divine Majeſty offended by ſin.

5. The grounds of this heavy ſentence, are the tranſgreſſions of God's holy law: Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.' The holy law is a tranſcript of the purity of the divine nature; in it he hath ſet forth his own image. That image the ſinner does what he can to deface, by violating the law: but God will magnify the law, and make it honourable, in the deſtruction of the ſinner.

The grounds of it more particularly are,

1*ſt,* The ſin of nature, original ſin imputed, Rom. v. 12.; and original ſin inherent, that corrupt frame of ſoul that is natural to us, whereby we are prone to evil, and averſe to good, Gen. vi. 5. By reaſon of this we come into the world under the ſentence of death. And as ſerpents and vipers are objects whoſe deſtruction men ſeek on the firſt ſight of them, becauſe of their poiſonous nature; ſo it fares with men, the very ſight of whom, in reſpect of their original ſin, is loathſome unto a holy God, and thereby they become objects fit only for deſtruction.

2dly, The ſins of the heart, Pſal. xxiv. 4. Matth. v. 28, 29. Heart ſins are not liable to man's judgment: but how can they eſcape the judgment of God, to whoſe all-ſeeing eye our hearts are juſt as open as our lives? He ſees the rottenneſs that is within the whited ſepulchres, and paſſes his ſentence againſt luſts of covetouſneſs, uncleanneſs, malice, revenge, &c. burning within the heart, as well as againſt the ſame defiling the converſation.

3dly, The ſins of the tongue, Matth. xii. 37. It is a channel by which the heart vents much of its inbred corruption, contempt of God, &c. Jude 15. in his mocking, maligning, and running down of ſeriouſneſs, and agenting the cauſe of irreligion; and contempt of our neighbour, in railing, reproaching, obſcenity, lying, &c. which may ſhew why the rich man in hell is repreſented ſeeking water to cool his tongue.

4thly, The ſins of the life, wicked actions, whether of impiety againſt God, unrighteouſneſs againſt men, or intemperance againſt ourſelves, Jude 15. None of all theſe will eſcape the judgment of God, however craftily they be managed, whatever fair colours be drawn over them, Eccleſ. xii. ult. 'For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil.' Sinners may forget them and let them ſlip out of mind; but 'the Lord hath ſworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works,' Amos viii. 7.

5thly, Omiſſions of duty, Matth. xxv. 41. &c. Men will find ſentence paſſed on them by a juſt God, not only for the ill they have done, but for the good they were obliged to have done, but did it not. The man that hid his talent, and improved it not for his Lord, is doomed to utter darkneſs, Matth. xxv. 24. 30.

6. This ſentence againſt the ungodly is openly pronounced in the word, Rom. ii. 8, 9. 'But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs; indignation, and wrath; tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil.' God ſpeaks from heaven to men, Heb. xii. 25. not by a voice coming through the clouds, but by his voice in the written word, 2 Kings xxii. 19. compared with verſe 11. The Bible is God's word to us, whereby he is ſpeaking to us, and will ſpeak to men unto the end of the world, either abſolution or condemnation, according to their ſtate.

7. It is regiſtered there too, Gen. ii. 17. 'In the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.' Ezek. xviii. 4. 'The ſoul that ſinneth, it ſhall die.' The ſcripture is the record of the court of heaven, where the ungodly may read their doom, and ſee the ſentence ſtanding againſt them. And that certainly is one of the cauſes of the neglect of the ſcriptures in our day; for in it 'the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs,' Rom. i. 18. Ahab hated Micajah, becauſe he never ſpake good of him. The ſcripture never ſpeaks good of a man that is wedded to his luſts, and has no will to part with his beloved liberty in the way of ſin; and therefore he hates or neglects it.

8. It is ſecretly intimate by the conſcience ſometimes, 1 John iii. 20. Conſcience is God's deputy within the man: and when his corruption drives him full to do an ill work, and when he has done it, to defend it; conſcience will be condemning it, and him too, from the holy law, Rom. ii. 15. And when it is thoroughly awakened, it will ſo pronounce the ſentence againſt the man, as will fill him with the greateſt of terror.

9. It will be openly pronounced before all the world at the laſt day, Matth. xxv. 41. 'Then ſhall he ſay alſo unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.' Where it is obſervable, that they are declared curſed and condemned ones, before that ſolemn publiſhing of the ſentence againſt them. For none will be condemned then, but ſuch as are in this world before that in this life condemned already.

10. laſtly, Howbeit the time of the execution of the ſentence, in particular, is not now intimate to the ſinner. The Lord keeps that a ſecret, that ſinners may not adventure to live a moment in the ſtate of condemnation; but not knowing but it may be execute next moment, they may not put off a moment the ſuing for a remiſſion.

USE 1. Of Information. Hence learn,

1. The ſtate of every ungodly perſon, worker of iniquity, and all unbelievers, is a miſerable ſtate, a ſtate of condemnation. They are as really under a ſentence of death as ever any malefactor was, John iii. 18. 'He that believeth not, is condemned already; becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.' Think on this, ye young and old ungodly ones; though the ſentence is not execute againſt you, it is paſſed on you; look into your Bible, and ſee it.

2. As ſilent as God ſits in heaven, while ſinners on earth are neglecting and affronting him, he is no idle ſpectator of their way and manner of life, Pſal. l. 21. 'Theſe things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence: thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thyſelf: but I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes.' He has ſentenced them and ſees their day is coming, Pſal. xxxvii. 13. They have their ſinning day, and God ſees their day of count and reckoning is coming on them, Eccleſ. xi. 9. 'Know thou, that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgment.' They laugh at the evil day, becauſe they do not ſee it come; God laughs at them becauſe he ſees it coming: and his will be when theirs is done, Prov. i. 26. when he will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh.

3. It is not ſtrange, that the world is filled with the noiſe of mens luſts and ungodly lives. If ye were gone into a priſon filled with condemned men, ye would think it melancholy indeed, but not ſtrange to hear the iron chains rattling in every part of the room. This world is ſuch a place, crouded with condemned people: unmortified luſts are the chains on them: and that is the reaſon of the grating noiſe which the ſerious godly hear from every corner. And the jailor, the devil, is going among them.

4. laſtly, No wonder that moſt men love this life, ſo as to loath exchanging it for another, Pſal. lv. 23. 'But God ſhall bring them down into the pit of deſtruction.' The priſon is a heavy place to the condemned man; but to go out of it is more ſo, for that is to go to execution, Jer. xvii. 11. Death brings the execution of the ſentence.

USE 2. Of Trial. Try whether that ſentence is ſtanding againſt you, or whether it is reverſed, and ye juſtified.

To move you to put this to the queſtion, conſider,

1. One thing is ſure, that once it was paſſed and ſtanding againſt you, Eph. ii. 3. 'And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.' Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.' Compared with Rom. iii. 19. 'Now we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.' Now, what courſe have ye taken to get this ſentence taken off? and if you have been aiming at it, have ye carried it?

2. As your ſtate is in this life, condemned or juſtified, ſo it will be determined at death and judgment, Eccleſ. ix. 10. 'Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt.' Now, there is acceſs for a remiſſion; but when death comes, there will be no more for ever.

3. Men are apt to miſtake in this point. Many draw an abſolviture from the ſentence for themſelves, which God will never ſet his ſeal to, Luke xvi. 15. 'Chriſt ſaid unto them, Ye are they which juſtify yourſelves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly eſteemed among men, is an abomination in the ſight of God.' Iſa. xliv. 20. 'He feedeth of aſhes; a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lie in my right hand?' The fooliſh virgins called themſelves the Bridegroom's friends; but he ſhut the door on them as his enemies.

4. laſtly, A miſtake here is very fatal. By it men let the time of obtaining a remiſſion ſlip. The oil might have been got for the lamps, if they had miſſed it timely. It brings a ruining ſurpriſe: dreaming of peace, they are awaked with the noiſe of war for ever.

Mark 1. They that never ſaw themſelves in a ſtate of condemnation, are under it to this day. For they are ſtrangers to the very firſt work of the Spirit, conviction, John xvi. 8. 'The law is our ſchool-maſter, to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith,' Gal. iii. 24. They that have never been at the law's ſchool, to learn that they are curſed and condemned ſinners by nature, are not Chriſt's diſciples.

Mark 2. They only are abſolved, who laying hold on Chriſt in the covenant of grace have pled to the law's ſentence of condemnation againſt them, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt wrought by him, and offered to and accepted of by them. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Phil. iii. 7, 8. 'But what things were gain to me, thoſe I counted loſs for Chriſt. Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord:—and do count them but dung that I may win Chriſt.' They continue not in mere ſuſpenſe, but renouncing ſelf-confidence, and law-confidence, and creature-confidence, have betaken themſelves to him as their only refuge, caſting anchor on the promiſe of the goſpel.

Mark 3. If the condemning power of ſin is removed, the reigning power of ſin is removed too, and contrariwiſe: Rom. vi. 14. 'For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.' If the condemned man has got his remiſſion, he is taken out of his irons, and his priſon, and the power of the jailor. The chains of reigning luſts rattling about thee, declare thee a condemned man ſtill; but it is otherwiſe with the pardoned, Rom. viii. 1, 2. 'There is no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of ſin and death.' If ye are juſtified, ye are waſhed, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, 11.

Mark 4. If the ſentence be reverſed, ye will be habitually tender in your conſcience with reſpect to temptations, ſin and duty, and appearances of evil. Hence Paul could ſay, Acts xxiv. 16. 'Herein do I exerciſe myſelf, to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward men.' The man who under the ſentence of death, has obtained a remiſſion, will readily fear falling into the ſnare again. Hence we find this was Hezekiah's exerciſe, Iſa. xxxviii. 17. 'Behold for peace I had great bitterneſs: but thou haſt in love to my ſoul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou haſt caſt all my ſins behind thy back.' Ver. 15. 'What ſhall I ſay? he hath ſpoken unto me, and himſelf hath done it: I ſhall go ſoftly all my years in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.' Abſolved perſons may be guilty of acts of untenderneſs; but habitual untenderneſs is a black mark of condemnation.

Mark ult. The fruits of faith in a holy life follow the reverſing of the ſentence. We are juſtified by faith without works; but the faith that juſtifies produces good works. Hence we read, Acts xv. 9. 'of purifying the heart by faith.' If the curſe is removed, the fruits of the Spirit will ſpring up in the ſoul, Gal. v. 22, 23. 'love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance.' The apoſtle James ſhews that faith not to be true, that is not attended with the fruits of holineſs.

Now, if the ſentence once ſtanding againſt you is reverſed, then,

1. Love the Lord, who freely gave you your remiſſion, inſtead of leading you forth to execution; as did the woman, of whom of our Lord ſays, Luke vii. 47. 'Her ſins, which are many, are forgiven; for ſhe loved much.' Remember the day when ye ſtood ſelf-condemned, and law condemned before the Lord, and he ſaid, Job xxxiii. 24. 'Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ranſom.'

2. Pity and be concerned for thoſe that are as yet under the condemnation which ye are freed from, Tit. iii. 2, 3. Where people's contempt and diſdain have the heels of their pity, compaſſion, and concern for the welfare and recovery of ſinners, it is a ſad ſign; ſpeaking forth more of pride and preſumption, than of themſelves being in a ſtate of remiſſion.

3. Walk humbly and tenderly. The remembrance of the ſentence of death ſometime lying on you, may humble you while you live. It ſets us ill to be proud and conceity, who owe our life to a remiſſion. Stand aloof from the deadly ſnare; a pardoning God has ſaid, 'Go, and ſin no more,' John viii. 11.

4. Bear your troubles and trials in a world patiently. Your life was forfeited, and that is ſafe by grace. Why does a living man complain? This is a day wherein the Lord ſeems to be riſing up to plead againſt the generation, bringing on common calamity. Take thankfully what falls to your ſhare of it, in conſideration that the ſentence againſt your ſoul is reverſed. If the ſeed ſhould rot under the clod, and the beaſts of the field periſh under the ſtroke; kiſs the rod, and be thankful, that the execution is not upon yourſelves.

5. laſtly, Be of a forgiving diſpoſition: Eph. iv. 32. 'Be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven you.' The Saviour that brought in remiſſion of ſins, binds us to love our enemies; and the bitter revengeful ſpirit againſt others ſpeak us unforgiven, Mat. vi. 15. 'If ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes.'

But if ye are of thoſe againſt whom the ſentence ſtill ſtands in the court of heaven, lay the matter to heart, and conſider it is a moſt heavy caſe, as it is indeed, deſerving tears of blood. And ſo I proceed to USE 3. of Lamentation. We may here lament over the caſe of every ungodly one, and natural man. The ſtate of one under ſentence of death, is a lamentable caſe. O ungodly ſinner, however eaſy thou art, God's law has condemned thee, and thou art under the ſentence of eternal death, John iii. 36. 'He that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.' See thy heavy caſe in this glaſs.

1. You are forfeited of your covenant right to the creatures, as a condemned perſon. Whether thou haſt little or much in the world, it is a ſorry right you have to it; a mere providential right, ſuch as a condemned man to his meat, till the day of execution come. Therefore 'a little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked,' Pſal. xxxiv. 16. There is little ſatisfaction in that.

2. God is your enemy, befriend you who will, John iii. 36. forecited. He bears a legal enmity againſt thee, as a judge againſt a condemned man. Ye can have no communion with him; Amos iii. 3. 'Can two walk together except they be agreed?' All comfortable intercourſe betwixt God and thy ſoul, is drowned in the gulf of thy ſtate of condemnation. There can be no peace between God and you.

To allude to the conference between Joram and Jehu, 2 Kings ix. 22. ‘ And it came to paſs when Joram ſaw Jehu, that he ſaid, Is it peace, Jehu ? And he anſwered, What peace, ſo long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcrafts are ſo many ?’ How can they have peace with God, whom his law condemns ? What peace ye have in your conſciences, God allows not, Iſa. lvii. 21.

3. Nothing you do can be acceptable to God; there is a laſting cloud over your heads that never clears : Pſal. vii. 11. ‘ God is angry with the wicked every day.’ While the condemning curſe of the law lies on a man, it blaſts all the good he does : Tit. i. 15. ‘ Unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled.’ Hag. ii. 12. ‘ If one bear holy fleſh in the ſkirt of his garment, and with his ſkirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, ſhall it be holy ? And the prieſts anſwered and ſaid, No. Then anſwered Haggai, and ſaid, So is this people, and ſo is this nation before me, ſaith the Lord ; and ſo is every work of their hands, and that which they offer there is unclean.’ It mars ſanctifying influences, without which there can be no fruit, John xv. 5. ‘ for without me ye can do nothing.’ Hence all ye do is turned to ſin.

4. The ſentence againſt you is confirmed daily. The truth of God confirms it : Numb. xxiii. 19. ‘ God is not a man, that he ſhould lie, neither the ſon of man, that he ſhould repent : hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it ? or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good ?’ And the cords of thy guilt are growing ſtronger and ſtronger; for the grounds of condemnation againſt thee are multiplying; while none of the old debt is removed, but new is ſtill contracted. And though one may think, that it is but dying for all; yet the puniſhment will be increaſed, as evil works are: for men will be rewarded according to their deeds.

5. Juſtice craves execution againſt thee. There was a cry to heaven againſt Cain, and againſt Sodom : and ſo there is againſt every ungodly ſinner, Jer. ix. 9. ‘ Shall I not viſit them for theſe things ? ſaith the Lord : ſhall not my ſoul be avenged on ſuch a nation as this ?’ Mercy may ſuſpend execution a while againſt the ungodly ; but if they continue in that ſtate, it cannot reverſe it; ſince God cannot ceaſe to be juſt.

6. All is ready for the execution. The bow is bent to let fly the arrows of wrath againſt thee, the arrows of death, Pſal. vii. 12, 13. The pile of fire is ſet on, Iſa. xxx. 33. ‘ For Tophet is ordained of old : yea, for the king it is prepared ; he hath made it deep and large : the pile thereof is fire and much wood, the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone, doth kindle it. When thou lieſt down, thou has no ſecurity, that it ſhall not be execute ere thou ariſe, &c.

7. laſtly, Thy life depends, as to thee, only on God's long-waſted patience and long-ſuffering, procuring thy reprieve from day to day, if ſo thou wilt ſue out thy pardon. As ſecure as thou art, the ſword of juſtice hangs over thy head, by the worn hair of long tired patience ; which if once broken, thou art gone for ever.

USE ult. of Exhortation. Wherefore beſtir yourſelves to get out of the ſtate of condemnation, to get the ſentence reverſed.

Motive 1. It is a ſad and miſerable life to live in the ſtate of condemnation. For in effect ſuch a life is a continued death. (1) It is a diſhonourable life. Condemnation fixes a blot and ſtain on man, ſpeaks him guilty of crimes for which he is not worthy to live. And ſurely the judgment of God is according to truth. (2.) It is an uncomfortable life : Iſa. lvii. 21. ‘ There is no peace ſaith my God, to the wicked.’ There is enough in it to ſqueeze the ſap out of all created comforts; and for the conſolations of God, they can have none of them, Amos iii. 3. ‘ Can two walk together, except they be agreed ?’ The joy and comforts of a natural man is but like that of a madman ; and ſo when he comes to himſelf, all is ſwallowed up in that, he is a condemned man. This the prodigal found, Luke xv. 17. ‘ And when he came to himſelf, he ſaid, How many hired ſervants of my father's have bread enough and to ſpare, and I periſh with hunger !’ (3.) It is an unſafe life : John iii. 36. ‘ He that believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life ; but the wrath of God abideth on him.’ Amidſt all thy mirth and jollity, the ſword of juſtice is hanging over thy head by a hair, and every moment, for all that thou knoweſt, it may fall, and cleave thee aſunder. This our Lord threatens in the parable of the wicked ſervant, Matth. xxiv. 50, 51. ‘ The Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of ; and ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites : there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.’

Mot. 2. The reverſing of the ſentence by a remiſſion, is not ſo eaſily obtained as men are apt to imagine. Many think there is no more ado, but after a careleſs graceleſs life, when they come to die, to commend their ſouls to God, with a God have mercy on me ; and all will be ſafe. But they that get out a remiſſion, get it ſo as as they are taught other thoughts of it. Hence is that exclamation of the church, Micah vii. 18. ‘ Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage ? he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy.’ Conſider, 1ſt, Sin is the greateſt of evils, the deepeſt of all ſtains to waſh out. Fair words, nay tears, nay not the blood of bulls and goats, nor the blood of one's own body, will waſh it out ; only the blood of the Son of God ; Heb. ix. 22. ‘ Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion.’ Compared with 1 John i. 7. ‘ The blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.’ Sin is the moſt contrary to God's nature, Hab. i. 13. ‘ Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity.’ And therefore it is the object of his greateſt loathing. Going on in ſin, thou art engaged againſt all the attributes of God, Sin has marred the whole frame of God's workmanſhip, provoking him to break it in pieces. Can it be eaſy to get all this buried in forgetfulneſs with a jealous God ?

2dly, God's giving of remiſſions, is one of his greateſt works. Hence is that prayer of Moſes, Numb. xiv. 17. 19. ‘ And now, I beſeech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou haſt ſpoken. Pardon, I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this people, according unto the greatneſs of thy mercy, and as thou haſt forgiven this people, from Egypt, even until now.’ This is a work greater than the making of a world. That was done by a word ſpoken. But in this caſe, juſtice ſtands up for ſatisfaction, truth for the honour of a broken law, and wiſdom finds a way for mercy only by the blood of Chriſt : John iii. 16. ‘ God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’

3dly, Sad breakings of heart do ſinners ordinarily endure, ere they, being once touched with a ſenſe of ſin, get the pardon of it. This was the caſe of Peter's hearers, Acts ii. 37. ‘ They were pricked in their heart and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, Men and brethren what ſhall we do ?’ Paul can tell you from his experience of the terror of the Lord ; David of broken bones. However lightly ye think now of the way of coming at it ; a medicine given you for ſweating out the poiſon of ſin, will readily make you ſick at heart, and perhaps bring you to the laſt gaſp, Iſaiah xxxiii. 24.

Mot. 3. Howbeit God is now on a throne of grace to grant remiſſions, 2 Cor. v. 19. ‘ God is in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.' Ye may get a pardon now in the Lord's own way, Iſa. lv. 7. 'Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.' Heaven's white flag of peace yet hangs out, the market of free grace ſtands open, an indemnity is proclaimed in the goſpel, Acts xiii. 38. 'Be it known unto you, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins.'

Mot. 4. laſtly, Acceſs to remiſſions will not laſte, Iſa. lv. 6. 'Seek ye the Lord, while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.' Abuſed patience will break out into fury, Luke xiii. 24, 25. 'Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate; for many, I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able. When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, and hath ſhut to the door, and ye begin to ſtand without, and to knock at the door, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open unto us: and he ſhall anſwer, and ſay unto you, I know you not whence you are.' Beware you ſit not your day of grace, and delay not till ye will find no place for repentance, Luke xiv. 24. 'For I ſay unto you that none of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.'

Object. My ſins are great. Anſw. Neither the greatneſs, multitude, nor backſliding into them will hinder, Iſ. i. 18. 'Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: though your ſins be as ſcarlet they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool.' Iſa lv. 7. 'Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him: and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.' Jer. iii. 22. 'Return, ye backſliding children, and I will heal your backſlidings.' The Lord has ſet up inſtances of pardoning mercy, that none may deſpair; as Adam, Manaſſeh, Paul, and the Jews, crucifiers of Chriſt.

Direction 1. Be ſenſible of your ſin; of the evil of it; of the miſchief done to yourſelves, and the injury and diſhonour done to God. Look to the law, the juſtice of God, &c.

Dir. 2. Go to God, and confeſs your ſins fully and freely; and condemn yourſelves, acknowledging yourſelves juſtly condemned by the law, and God to be righteous, if he ſhould execute the ſentence.

Dir ult. Look to Jeſus Chriſt the propitiation held forth to you in the goſpel, his unſpotted righteouſneſs offered to you, and the covert of his blood, the retiring place for ſafety to guilty creatures. Believe the goſpel, that theſe are made over to you therein, and take poſſeſſion thereof, by truſting wholly thereon for your remiſſion, and the ſanctification of your nature, John iii. 16. 'God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.' So ſhall ye be united to Chriſt by faith.

Take that advice, which the ſervants of Benhadad offered to their maſter, 1 Kings xx. 31. Put on the ſackcloath of deep humiliation, ropes about your necks, acknowledging you are worthy of death, and go forth to Chriſt by faith; for the King of Zion is a merciful king, and will ſave your life.

DOCT. II. The Lord oftentimes does not ſoon come to the execution of the ſentence againſt ungodly men, evil workers, but delays it for a time.

In proſecuting this doctrine, we ſhall

I. Take a view of the method of providence in this matter.

II. Account for this ſlow method of Providence.

III. Make application of the ſubject.

I. We ſhall take a view of the method of providence in this matter. There is a twofold method of Providence with the ungodly, evil workers, in reſpect of execution againſt them; viz. a ſwift and a ſlow method.

Firſt, There is a ſwift method the Lord ſometimes takes with ſinners: Mal. iii. 5. 'I will come near to you to judgment, and I will be a ſwift witneſs againſt the ſorcerers,' &c. Sinners adventure on evil works; and God ſentences them for them preſently, and purſues them hard with execution, without delay. (1.) Sometimes the ſinner has an ill work in deſign, and the Lord counts his will for the deed, and prevents by a ſpeedy execution, as in Haman's caſe. He hatched the miſchief, but he did not ſee it come forth. (2.) Sometimes the ſinner is in actual motion to the evil work, and execution is done on him ere he get it performed. So it fared with the rebellious Iſraelites, in their attempting to go into the promiſed land, Numb. xiv. 44, 45. And ſo it fared with Jeroboam, putting forth his hand to lay hold on the prophet, 1 Kings xiii. 4.; and with Uzziah having the cenſer in his hand, 2 Chron. xxvi. 19. (3). Sometimes the execution tryſts with the very doing of the ill work, ſo that the ſinner is taken away with the ſtroke in his ſin. Thus fared it with Nadab and Abihu offering ſtrange fire, Lev. x. 1, 2.; with Zimri and Coſbi cut off in the act of uncleanneſs, Numb. xxv. 8. and with Herod, who was eaten up of worms for his atheiſm and blaſphemy, Acts xii. 23. (4.) Sometimes as the ill work is done out and ended, the execution begins. So it fared with Sennacherib's blaſphemous letter. He had writ it, and it was read: ſo his ſin was compleated: and that very night the Lord ſmote his army, and ſoon after himſelf, 2 Kings xix. 14. 35. (5.) Sometimes the execution keeps pace with the ill work, and the one goes on as the other does; judgment in the ſeveral degrees following hard at the heels of the ſin. So it fared with Hiel, in his building of Jericho, 1 Kings xvi. ult. (6.) Sometimes execution begins with the ſinner's beginning to reap the fruit of his ſin: when he leans upon his wall, a ſerpent bites him. So it fared, with Ahab taking poſſeſſion of Naboth's vineyard, 1 Kings xxi. 18, 19. And ſo it fared with the luſters in the wilderneſs, Pſalm lxxviii. 30, 31. (7.) laſtly, Sometimes when one's ſin begins to work, in its bitter fruits and effects on others, it recoils on the ſinner himſelf. So it fared with Judas the traitor, Matth. xxvii. 3, 4, 5. It is a ſport to ſome to do miſchief to others; but ere all be done, it may, in the juſt judgment of God, come as heavy on themſelves, as on their neighbour.

Secondly, There is a ſlow method the Lord takes oftentimes with ſinners, Neh. ix. 17. They commit their evil works; the ſentence is preſently paſſed on them: but then the execution is delayed, Pſal. l. 21. And that is what is particularly noticed in our text. Concerning this method I offer theſe obſerves.

1. The ſinner may get his evil work contrived and accompliſhed; without any let in his way from heaven, by any execution againſt him. There is a God in heaven who has his eye upon them all along; but that God keeps ſilence, and lets the ſinner take his ſwing, Pſal. l. 21. He could cut him off from the purpoſes of his heart, and break his arm, that he ſhould not accompliſh his work: but he does it not.

2. The ill work being done without let, the ſinner may alſo for a time paſs unpuniſhed, and as little notice may ſeem to be taken of it, as if there were not a God to judge upon the earth, Ezek. ix. 9. There are times wherein holy Providence, as it were, winks at ungodly ſinners, Acts xvii. 30. Hence God is ſaid to awake to judgment, when that time is over, Pſal. vii. 6.

3. Yea, ill works may not only for a time eſcape unpuniſhed, but undiſcovered too, Hoſ. xii. 7, 8. Prov. xxx. 20. There are many abominations that appear with open face in the world, but there are perhaps more that are not diſcovered, being reſerved unto the judgment of the great day, 1 Tim. v. 24. Rom. ii. 16. An omniſcient God could pull the vail off them, but in the ſlow method, it is long a doing.

4. Sinners finding it go thus, encourage themſelves in evil, repeat their evil works, add ſin to ſin, and give themſelves the looſe in their ſinful courſes. This is obſerved in our text. None go to the higheſt pitch of wickedneſs all of a ſudden, but by degrees. Ill works at firſt have a terror about them, and the ſinner trembles under ſome fearful expectation at firſt: but a long-ſuffering God ſtrikes not. Thence the ſinner gathers courage, Pſal. lxiv. 3. and ventures again, and the terror wears off by degrees.

5. Nay ſinners may proſper in an ill courſe. So far may they be from execution done againſt them, that they may thrive in the world in it: Pſal. xxxvii. 35. ‘I ‘ have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading ‘ himſelf like a green bay tree.’ The ſun of worldly proſperity may ſhine light and warm on men in a courſe of ſin, gone away from God, and God from them. Yea, objects of God's indignation may in that reſpect be treated as if they were the darlings of heaven; and the objects of God's ſpecial love, as if they were the buts of his wrath: Ecclеſ. viii. 14. ‘ There is a vanity ‘ which is done upon the earth, that there be juſt men ‘ unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the ‘ wicked: again, there be wicked men unto whom it ‘ happeneth according to the work of the righteous.’ This has been ſometimes puzzling to the ſaints, as to Jeremiah. See chap. xii. 1, 2.

6. More than all that, they may proſper by their ill works, they may enjoy the fruits of their ſin, and thrive by their ill courſes; as Ephraim did, Hoſ. xii. 7, 8. Riches are called the mammon of unrighteouſneſs, becauſe oft times they are got together by unrighteouſneſs. Many a fair eſtate, and great worldly wealth has been got together by oppreſſion; yea the foundation of ſome has been laid in blood, Hab. ii. 12. A plain evidence, that men may not only proſper in, but by ſin.

7. Sinners may get a long time of it, wherein they ſin, and God ſpares ſtill. The old world got a long day of one hundred and twenty years. Job obſerves, that the wicked may live, and become old, and continue proſperous too, Job xxi. 7. and Iſ. lxv. 20. Sometimes God quickly cuts off men in a courſe of ſin; but it is not always ſo; for men may grow grayheaded in the way of wickedneſs.

8. The Lord may ſeem to be in his way to execute the ſentence ſometimes, and yet may give another delay; his hand ſtretched out, he may withdraw again, Pſal. lxxviii. 38. Criminals may be ſet on the brow of the hill, and yet be returned ſafe, and make a very ill uſe of the deliverance, turning worſe on the back of it. The 120 years being out, the old world got ſeven days more reſpite, and they gave themſelves the looſe. See Matth. xxiv. 38.

9. When execution is at length begun, it may be carried on very leiſurely for a time; the drops may come very few and ſoft before the ſhower, Iſ. ix. 1. God may deal very gently with impenitent ſinners, even when he is riſen up againſt them, before he come to the full execution. God's judgments coming with iron hands, may yet proceed with leaden feet in ſlow pace.

10. laſtly, More than all that, the execution may be entirely put off during this life. Men may live wickedly and proſperouſly, die peaceably, and be buried honourably; and ſo would wholly eſcape with their ill works, were it not that there is another world and an after-reckoning, and that there is no delay of execution, there. This is plain from Ecclеſ. viii. 10. ‘ I ſaw the ‘ wicked buried, who had come and gone from the ‘ place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city ‘ where they had ſo done.’ Luke xvi. 19. 22. ‘ There ‘ was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple ‘ and fine linen, and fared ſumptuouſly every day. The ‘ rich man alſo died and was buried.’ Pſal. lxxiii. 4. ‘ There are no bands in their death: but their ſtrength ‘ is firm.’ Sometimes God makes the world witneſs to the execution of the ſentence againſt an ill work; but oft-times men get out of the world without it, in this ſlow method of providence.

II. We ſhall account for this ſlow method of providence. And there is much need to do it, becauſe there is a myſtery of providence in it that is not eaſy to unriddle, and among men there are ſad blunders about it. And,

1. It is wreſted by many a ſinner in his own caſe, to his own ruin, Prov. i. 32. We naturally have ſuch high thoughts of the world's ſmiles, that we are apt to imagine God thinks highly of them too, and that he expreſſes his ſpecial love and kindneſs by them. But quite the contrary, Rev. iii. 19. ‘ As many as I love, I re‘ buke and chaſten.’ Hence a proſperous ſinner can hardly imagine himſelf not to be a favourite of Heaven, at leaſt cannot think God is ſo angry with his way as ſome would give out; and ſo he continues ſecure in his courſe, Pſal. l. 21.

2. Being miſunderſtood, it is ruining to many ſpectators, and is in hazard of turning them atheiſtical, and contemners of religion, Mal. iii. 14, 15. ‘ Ye have ſaid, ‘ It is in vain to ſerve God: and what profit is it, that ‘ we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked ‘ mournfully before the Lord of hoſts? And now we ‘ call the proud happy: yea, they that work wicked‘ neſs are ſet up; yea, they that tempt God, are even ‘ delivered.’ There are many who have no inward principle of religion. Now, when theſe ſee that there is worldly advantage to be got by it, they embrace it, like the mixed multitude from Egypt; but when they ſee the way of wickedneſs proſperous, and ſinners to keep the road for all the threatenings againſt them, and the godly afflicted and bowed down for all the promiſes to them; they are ready to think, that the threatenings and promiſes of the word, are both but empty ſounds, and that they ſee ſo.

3. There is a difficulty in it, that has puzzled many a great ſaint, and made him to ſtagger. So ready are we to walk by ſenſe, not by faith. This was a knotty piece of the book of providence to Jeremiah, though he reſolved to believe over the belly of ſenſe, Jer. xii. 1, 2; and to Habakkuk, chap. i. 2, 3, 4. It had almoſt carried Aſaph quite off his feet, Pſal. lxxiii. 2.——13, 14.

4. There being a darkneſs on the minds of all men with reſpect to the methods of divine procedure, they are apt to imagine an inconſiſtency of this method of providence with the perfections attributed to God. And there are four divine perfections, that are apt to run a riſk with poor ſinners blind and raſh in judging.

1ſt, His omniſcience, whereby he ſeeth and noticeth all things done in the world, Prov. xv. 3. ‘ The eyes ‘ of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil ‘ and the good.’ But when men themſelves are conſcious of their own wickedneſs, and yet ſee that God does not proceed againſt them for it, they are apt to ſay, as Ezek. ix. 9. ‘ The Lord hath forſaken the earth, and ‘ the Lord ſeeth not.’ So the Pſalmiſt repreſents men going on in their wickedneſs, ſecure as to any notice to be taken of it from heaven, Pſal. xciv. 5, 6, 7. ‘ They ‘ break in pieces thy people, O Lord, and afflict thine ‘ heritage. They ſlay the widow and the ſtranger, and ‘ murder the fatherleſs. Yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall ‘ not ſee: neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it.’ Therefore Job aſſerts it on that occaſion, chap. xxiv. 1. ‘ Why, ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almigh‘ ty, do they not know him, nor ſee his days?’

2dly, His holineſs, whereby he is pure in himſelf, and cannot but hate all impurity and ſin in his creatures. It is certain that it is ſo. The angels proclaim it, Iſa. vi. 3. ‘ Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hoſts.’ The Pſalmiſt pointedly declares it, Pſal. v. 4, 5. ‘ Thou art ‘ not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs: neither ſhall evil dwell with thee. The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight; thou hateſt all workers of iniquity.' But when men ſee this method of providence with ſinners, they can hardly believe it, Pſal. l. 21. 'Theſe things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence: thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thyſelf: but I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes.' For, think they, if it were ſo, how could he bear with ſuch unholineſs in ſinners affronting him, and trampling on his laws? Therefore the prophet aſſerts it on that very occaſion, but withal owns a difficulty of reconciling this method of providence with it, Hab. i. 13. 'Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity: wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he?'

3dly, His juſtice or righteouſneſs, whereby he ſo hates ſin that he cannot but puniſh it. It is certain it is ſo, Gen. xviii. 25. 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?' He has demonſtrated it in the death of his own Son. But when men ſee ungodly ſinners going on in their ſin unpuniſhed, they are apt to think, that God is not ſo very juſt in that matter, as ſome give him out to be; for they cannot ſee ſin get a juſt recompenſe. Therefore Jeremiah aſſerts it on that occaſion, Jer. xii. 1. 'Righteous art thou, O Lord.'

4thly, His goodneſs to his own people, whereby being good in himſelf, he does good to them that are good. It is certain it is ſo, Pſal. xxxiv. 8, 9, 10. 'O taſte, and ſee, that the Lord is good: bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him. O fear the Lord, ye his ſaints; for there is no want to them that fear him. The young lions do lack, and ſuffer hunger: but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing.' The prophet got it in commiſſion Iſa. iii. 10. 'Say ye to the righteous, that it ſhall be well with them: for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings.' But when men ſee this method of providence dandling ungodly ſinners, and ſmiting the godly, they are apt to think it is not ſo. And therefore Aſaph aſſerts it on that occaſion, Pſal. lxxiii. 1. 'Truly God is good to Iſrael, even to ſuch as are of a clean heart.'

Now, to remove theſe miſconſtructions, and account for the ſlow method of providence, I offer theſe conſiderations.

Firſt, This method is taken to bring ſinners to repentance, and prevent their ruin, 2 Pet. iii. 9.; and it is becoming the perfections of a merciful God, therefore to uſe it. By this means ſinners,

1. Have time and ſpace to repent given them, Rev. ii. 21. Were they always taken away juſt in the heat of their unmortified luſts, we would be ready to cry out of ſeverity, Numb. xvii. 12. But God gives them leave to cool ordinarily, if ſo they will bethink themſelves, and turn to the Lord, and ſo prevent their own ruin.

2. They are invited to repentance, and drawn towards it with the ſofteſt methods, Rom. ii. 4. Every ſparing, preventing, bounteous mercy the impenitent meets with, calls aloud to him to repent. It ſays to him, 'Do thyſelf no harm:' it upbraids him with wilfulneſs for his own ruin, 'Why will ye die?' with ingratitude 'Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend?' And ſo hereby,

1ſt, God has the glory of ſome perfections, which otherwiſe would not ſhine forth ſo illuſtriouſly.

(1.) He has the glory of his long-ſuffering and patience: 2 Pet. iii. 9. 'The Lord is long-ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.' Grave obſervers of the ſlow method of providence muſt cry out, O wonderful long-ſuffering of a God! The patience of the meekeſt man on earth, would be quite worn out with leſs than the half of what a God bears with.

(2.) He has the glory of his univerſal good-will to poor ſinners of mankind, 2 Pet. iii. 9. forecited. 1 Tim. ii. 4. 'Who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth.' Juſtice is his act, his ſtrange act; but mercy is what he has a peculiar delight in. He is ſlow to anger, but ready to forgive. This is written in very legible characters in this method.

(3.) He has the glory of his overcoming goodneſs. To do evil for good, is deviliſh; to do good for good, is humane: but to do good for ill, is divine. Here ſhines forth the glory of the divine goodneſs, overcoming evil with good, Luke vi. 35. This is goodneſs becoming God.

2dly, As to the ſinner, it iſſues always in one of two.

(1.) His recovery, to the ſaving of his ſoul from ſin, and periſhing eternally. And God, who has a due value for immortal ſouls, ſees that a great thing; and treats it as worth the waiting on, Luke xv. 7. The ſcripture holds out this as a noble attainment, James v. 20. 'Let him know, that he which converteth a ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins.' How many are there ſinging Hallelujahs in heaven this day, by means of the ſlow method, that by the ſwift method had been roaring with the damned? "Had I died before threeſcore and ſixteen, I ſhad periſhed, for I knew not Chriſt." Turk. hiſt. p. 96.

(2.) Or elſe his being left inexcuſable, Rom. i. 20. The longer God has borne with, and the more kind he has been to impenitent ſinners, the more inexcuſable they will be; and the more will God's ſeverity againſt them be juſtified. And ſo this method tends to the clearing of God's juſtice.

Secondly, In the ſlow method God takes with ſinners, he often has an eye to poſterity; and that,

1. To poſterity in general. And it is of uſe to them, whether the ſinner ſo ſpared, repent or not. If he repent, it is of noble uſe to encourage them that come after, to turn to God. How uſeful to many one has been the ſlow method which God took with Manaſſeh and Paul! 1 Tim. i. 16. If he repent not, and vengeance ſeize him at length in ſight of the world, he becomes a warning piece to others that come after, Pſal. xxxvii. 35.—37. Though it do not, his memory rots; and the conſcience of every one that notices his wickedneſs ſilent and at an end in the grave, judges him to have ſpent his life fooliſhly, Job xxiv. 19, 20. Thus many who are of no uſe in the world to others but for miſchief, God in his providence makes good uſe of them.

2. To the ſinners own poſterity; and that,

1ſt, To their poſterity yet unborn. There may be veſſels of mercy in the loins of veſſels of wrath. Many graceleſs parents have been fathers and mothers of gracious children. It is for the elects ſake that the world is kept up: and if the laſt elect were born and brought in, the world will quickly be at an end. The law ſpares a condemned woman, if ſhe is with child, till ſhe has brought it forth: and God often ſpares long, condemned ſinners, for the elect that may be in their loins, Matth. xxiv. 22. There was a ſentence paſſed againſt the generation which came out of Egypt, which for this very reaſon was about thirty eight years ere it was execute on ſome.

2dly, To their poſterity already born; and that two ways.

(1.) As Satan gives ſome a ſurfeit of religion and ſobriety in their parents; ſo God makes repriſals on him, by giving others a horror of ſin and wickedneſs in theirs, Ezek. xviii. 14. And God ſpares them, that they may be a glaſs wherein their poſterity may have a view of the hatefulneſs of ſin. A wretched office, but it juſtifies the ſlow method of a holy God.

(2.) Men are often puniſhed in their poſterity. Many a poor child has ſmarted upon the occaſion of the parent, and many a fair and flouriſhing family has wickedneſs raſed. A holy juſt God ſometimes purſues quarrels againſt ſome evil workers through ſeveral generations, as is threatened in the ſecond command. The third and fourth generation are mentioned, becauſe men may live to ſee themſelves puniſhed in their children, grand children, and great grand children. And they may be ſpared in this ſlow method for that very end. Witneſs Zedekiah.

Thirdly, In the ſlow method God takes with ſinners, he has an eye to his own people: 2 Cor. iv. 15. ‘For all things are for your ſakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thankſgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.’ As the world is kept up for the ſake of God's people, ſo it is guided as it is by providence for their ſakes. And it is their good that is deſigned by it: Rom. viii. 28. ‘And we know, that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.’ The way that it comes to be for their good, is by means of the ſharp trial they have by it. So God takes the ſlow method with ungodly ſinners for the trial of his own children. And it is a ſharp trial to them two ways.

1. They ſmart ſore under their wickedneſs. Ungodly men are God's rod, as the Aſſyrian was God's hand againſt his people, Pſal. xvii. 14. Oft times they feel as much at their hand as makes them ſmart by the rod: Hab. i. 12. ‘O Lord, thou haſt ordained them for judgment; and O mighty God, thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for correction.’ They always ſee as much of them, as occaſions to them many a heavy heart, verſe 3. ‘Why doſt thou ſhew me iniquity, and cauſe me to behold grievance? for ſpoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raiſe up ſtrife and contention.’ Wherefore ſince God's people need the rod, it is preſerved, and not flung into the fire.

Mean while this tends to their good. The ungodly oblige them to pray, watch, live in the exerciſe of faith, more than otherwiſe they would do. Hence many times the moſt tender Chriſtians are found among the moſt notoriouſly profane neighbours, like Lot in Sodom, who carried not ſo well in the cave. For as the godly are eye ſores to the wicked, ſo the wicked are often as whetſtones and files to the godly.

2. They ſmart the ſorer under their own afflictions: Pſal. lxxiii. 10. ‘Therefore his people return hither: and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.’ The proſperity of the wicked carries the afflictions of the godly to a dangerous pitch, through the ſleight of Satan improving it againſt them. This was the caſe of Aſaph: Pſal. lxxiii. 12, 13, 14. ‘Behold, theſe are the ungodly, who proſper in the world, they increaſe in riches. Verily, I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning.’ Job's friends acted Satan's part on that bottom, endeavouring to prove him an unſound man, becauſe he was a man ſo afflicted.

But this alſo tends to their good. It makes them look more concernedly into their Bible, and find ſweet and relief where otherwiſe they would find no more than others do; as we ſee in Aſaph's caſe, Pſal. lxxiii. 16, 17. ‘When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me: untill I went into the ſanctuary of God; then underſtood I their end.’ And it makes them to look more narrowly into their own hearts, and to their ſincerity, Job x. 7. It obliges them to live more by faith, and not by ſight; to the exerciſe of hope, patience, &c.

Fourthly, In this ſlow method God often carries on his awful, yet holy work of hardening ſinners. There is ſuch a work, Rom. ix. 18. ‘Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy; and whom he will, he hardeneth.’ And it is a moſt dreadful plague and judgment, whereby God ceaſing to puniſh men for their ſins one way, puniſhes them another way in a dreadful manner. This appears, if ye conſider,

1. It is a ſpiritual ſtroke, lighting on the ſoul, and therefore more terrible than external ſtrokes on people's bodies or ſubſtance, Rom. i. 28. Hereby the mind is blinded, the will doubly enſlaved to luſts, and the conſcience ſeared; a kind of ſtroke rife this day.

2. It is a ſtroke whereby the diſeaſe of ſin is increaſed, and the goſpel remedy is rendered ineffectual. The heart being hardened, the looſe is given to luſts, that before were under ſome reſtraint, Eph. iv. 19. and the means of grace become uſeleſs, if not noxious; the hardened heart turning the food of the ſoul, as it were, to poiſon in effect, Iſa. vi. 10. 2 Cor. ii. 16.

3. It is a fearful preparative to utter deſtruction, Rom. ix. 22. A naſty earthen veſſel, that gets leave to contract more and more naſtineſs, and is not purged and cleanſed, is deſigned to be broken in pieces, and thrown away, Ezek. xxiv. 13. ‘In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs: becauſe I have purged thee, and thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more, till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee.’ So it is awful.

Yet it is a holy work in the hand of the Lord. God is holy in his hardening, as well as in his ſoftening work, Iſa. vi. 3. compared with verſe 10. For,

1. God hardens no ſoft hearts, hardens none but thoſe who firſt harden themſelves, Rom. i. 28. Men firſt ſhut their own eyes to the light, and then a juſt God blinds their eyes; they are wilful in their ſin, and God gives them their will, Hoſ. iv. 17. For who can ſay, he is obliged to ſtrive on with them ſtill?

2. Sin is a meet puniſhment of ſin, Rom. i. 27. And therefore it is juſt with God to puniſh ſin by ſin, to take off the reſtraint from thoſe who cannot endure it; to let them fall into the mire, and lie in it, that will needs be in it.

Now, God in this ſlow method often carries on this hardening work; and that both on the ſinner himſelf and others.

1. In this method oft-times the ſinner himſelf is hardened judicially. God is at much pains with ſinners to bring them back from their ſinful courſes: he tryſts them with rebukes from his word, convictions, terrors, and anxieties, and adds to theſe ſharp croſſes and afflictions. But they ſtruggle againſt all theſe, and over the belly of them purſue their ſins: ſo God judicially hardens them, and carries on that fearful work in the ſlow method.

1ſt, Denying or withdrawing his grace, and giving them up to their own luſts, Pſal. lxxxi. 12. There is reſtraining grace given to many, who never get ſanctifying grace; good motions, thoughts, and convictions are put into their hearts: theſe the Lord withdraws, and leaves men to the ſwing of their corruptions; as he did Ephraim, Hoſ. iv. 17. ‘Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone.’ They rebel againſt the light, and the Lord lets it die out. They are impatient of reſtraint, and the Lord takes it off. They like the government of their luſts, and the Lord gives them up to them.

2dly, Giving them up to Satan to be hardened by him, as the executioner of God's juſt vengeance, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. Men reſiſting, grieving, and vexing the Holy Spirit of God, provoke him to depart, and to leave them in the hand of the evil ſpirit, who then finds eaſy work with them; as in Saul's caſe. Hereby Satan's power over them is confirmed, the oppoſition to his intereſt in them is much removed, and ſo his influence over them is increaſed.

God proceeding in the ſlow method with the ſinner in this caſe, doth awfully carry on the hardening work upon him. In which we may obſerve,

(1). Their impunity hardens them. They venture on ſin, God in anger lets them go on unpuniſhed, Hoſ. iv. 14. And Satan and their own corrupt hearts improve that to the encouraging and ſtrengthening them in their ſins. Thence a wind from hell riſes that fills their ſails. Hence in the text, Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil.

(2.) Their proſperity in the world hardens them; Pſal. lxxiii. 5, 6. ‘They are not in trouble as other men: neither are they plagued as other men. Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain: violence covereth them as a garment.’ The hotter the ſun ſhines, the clay becomes the harder: and the warmer the ſun of worldly proſperity ſhines on the ſinner given up to his own luſts and the power of Satan, he, like a dunghill, becomes the harder, and ſends forth the more rank ſavour.

(3.) In the ſoft dealings of providence with them, objects, occaſions, and means to do their ill works, are juſtly laid before them: they are tempted, flattered, and encouraged by others. And thus the warm influence of providence on them in external things, which ſhould lead them to repentance, is, by means of their own luſts to which they are left, turned hardening and ruining to them: Prov. i. 32. ‘For the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, and the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them.’ Theſe are to them like a full wind to a ſhip without ballaſt, in a ſtorm.

(4.) Proper means for checking them are in the juſt judgment of God rendered ineffectual, and that hardens them. Thus it was with Pharaoh: the miracle of the rod turned into a ſerpent, waters into blood, bringing in the frogs, ſeemed to Pharaoh's eye-ſight done by the magicians too. And thus were they rendered ineffectual to him.

(5.) Laſtly, The adverſity and frowns of providence on the ſerious godly, harden them, Job xii. 4, 5, 6. Theſe are improven, by the ſleight of Satan, to the contempt of both the religious and religion.

2. In this method God carries on a hardening work upon ungodly ſpectators of it. Hence there is a ‘woe to the world, becauſe of offences,’ Matth. xviii. 7. The generality of men have ſo little ſenſe of religion, and inſight into the myſteries of providence, that they are apt to think that that is the beſt way which is the moſt proſperous, Prov. xix. 4. Hence there was a generation that would needs make that the ſtandard of religion. Jer. xliv. 17, 18. ‘But we will certainly do whatſoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incenſe unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, as we have done, we and our fathers, our kings and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem; for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and ſaw no evil. But ſince we left off to burn incenſe to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been conſumed by the ſword, and by the famine.’ And ſo the Lord doth in his holy providence lay that method of it before worldly and carnal men, at which they, by reaſon of their own wilful blindneſs, do ſtumble, to their own ruin, Mal. iii. 14, 15. forecited.

Fifthly, The general method of providence in managing the world, is ſoft to his adverſaries, and ſharp to his own children in this life: 1 Cor. xv. 19. ‘If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſerable.’ Rev. iii. 19. ‘As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten.’ This is the general rule, though it admits of exceptions, both in the caſe of the one and the other. God's adverſaries ſometimes meet with ſharp things, his children with ſoft. But the general and ordinary courſe of providence is ſoft to the former, and ſharp to the latter.

This appears particularly in two things.

1. God's children are held ſhorter by the head, in point of particular rebukes of providence, than his adverſaries are.

1ſt, God ſharply noticeth many things in his own, that he will paſs in others, and greater too. Hence ſaid Job. ‘If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity, chap. x. 14. The common proverb holds here, ‘One man had better ſteal a horſe, than another look over the hedge.’ A child of God many times pays dearer for a vain thought, than others for a vile action; for a raſh word, than others for blaſphemy and contrived wickedneſs. How did Moſes ſmart for an unadviſed word? Pſal. cvi. 32, 33. ‘They angered him alſo at the waters of ſtriſe, ſo that it went ill with Moſes for their ſakes: becauſe they provoked his ſpirit, ſo that he ſpoke unadviſedly with his lips.’ Compare Numb. xx. 10. 12. ‘And Moſes and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and ſaid unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? and the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron, Becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctify me in the eyes of the children of Iſrael; therefore ye ſhall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.’ But ſee Pſal. lxxiii. 9, 10. ‘They ſet their mouth againſt the heavens: and their tongue walketh through the earth. Therefore his people return hither; and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.’

2dly, When both meet with rebukes for an ill thing, his own oft-times get the ſharpeſt. Hence the lamenting church ſays, Lam. i. 12. ‘Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by? Behold and ſee, if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the day of his fierce anger.’ The controverſy for unworthy communicating was pleaded with ſome godly Corinthians, to the ſickening of their bodies, yea, even to death, 1 Cor. xi. 30. ‘For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep.’

2. A lot of adverſity is in a peculiar manner the lot of God's people in this life, and the world ſmiles moſt on its own friends: John xvi. 33. ‘Theſe things I have ſpoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye ſhall have tribulation: but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world,’ Pſal. lxxiii. 10. ‘Therefore his people return hither; and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.’ In the caſe of the church and people of God in this life, adverſity ſeems to be the rule and ordinary courſe, proſperity the exception; but in the caſe of the men of the world, proſperity the rule, and adverſity the exception. This appears,

1ſt, From the ſcripture, wherein we find the rod of adverſity the beaten path in which the ſaints under the Old and New Teſtament have walked: the godly often groaning under the weight of their own afflictions, and the weight of proſperous wickedneſs in their enemies. The Cainites build cities, and have the harp and the organ among them; while the church dwelt ſtill in tents: Abraham a ſtranger in the land of promiſe, while the curſed Canaanites enjoy it: Jacob's poſterity in ſlavery in Egypt, while the Edomites were ſettled in their own land, having a king of their own. Perhaps among the Jews in Canaan worldly proſperity was more annexed to piety, agreeable to the diſpenſation they were under, wherein temporal promiſes bear great bulk. But conſider that people in compariſon with other nations, and ye will find their proſperity very ſhort, in compariſon of their neighbours, and their adverſity very long: Zech. i. 11, 12. ‘And they anſwered the angel of the Lord that ſtood among the myrtle-trees, and ſaid, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and behold, all the earth ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt. Then the angel of the Lord anſwered and ſaid, O Lord of hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe threeſcore and ten years?’ But under the New Teſtament the thing is moſt clear. Our Saviour points out this as the ſtated method of providence: Luke vi. 20.—26. ‘And Jeſus lifted up his eyes on his diſciples, and ſaid, Bleſſed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God. Bleſſed are ye that hunger now: for ye ſhall be filled. Bleſſed are ye that weep now: for ye ſhall laugh. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall hate you, and when they ſhall ſeparate you from their company, and ſhall reproach you, and caſt out your name as evil, for the Son of man's ſake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets. But woe unto you that are rich: for ye have received your conſolation. Woe unto you that are full: for ye ſhall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now: for ye ſhall mourn and weep. Woe unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you: for ſo did their fathers to the falſe prophets.' chap. xvi. 25. 'But Abraham ſaid, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.'

2*dly*, From experience and obſervation. One needs but to open his eyes, and look about through the world, and he cannot miſs to ſee the world's greateſt favours beſtowed on them who have leaſt ſenſe of God and religion; wickedneſs triumphant, while ſerious godlineſs is preſſed down; ſinners often laughing, while ſaints weep.

Now, this method becomes the divine wiſdom. For,

(1.) At this rate the evil have a taſte of good, and the good a taſte of evil, Luke xvi. 25. forecited. The former, who will at length drink deep of endleſs ſorrow, are patiently born with, to bring them to repentance: the latter, who ſhall rejoice for evermore, have now the trial of a weeping time.

(2.) As a father is more concerned for, and exact in correcting the faults of his own children, than of his ſervants: ſo is our Father in heaven with reſpect to his family. The more he loves, the more he corrects with his rod: Amos iii. 2. 'You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will puniſh you for all your iniquities.' There are ſome who are to dwell with him for ever: there are others who are to depart from him for ever. What wonder, that he is at more pains to purify the former than the latter!

(3.) This is moſt agreeable to the way he took with his own Son and his enemies. While Chriſt was in the world, he was a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief; the wind blew in his face continually, till he was cruelly put to death on the croſs. The ax lay at the root of the Jewiſh church and ſtate, his enemies; yet was it not weilded againſt them all the time he was among them, nor till about forty years after. This was the pattern that is copied after in this method: Rom. viii. 29. 'For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren.'

Sixthly, Though the ſlow method ſeems ſtrange to us ſhort-ſighted creatures, it is not at all ſtrange being viewed in the glaſs of the infinite perfections of the divine nature. A thing will appear in a ſhallow river, that being caſt into the ſea, will appear no more. We wonder at the ſlow method of providence while we look to men; but we will ceaſe to wonder if we look to God, and obſerve, that,

1. God is eternal, from everlaſting to everlaſting, Pſal. xc. 2 If men do not ſoon purſue their quarrels, death may ſnatch them away, and they can have no acceſs more to do it: but however long the Lord delays pleading his quarrel, he can loſe no time, for he is eternal.

2. In God's eternal duration there are no differences of time; all is preſent to him. Time is for meaſuring created things, but not the infinite Being. So a thouſand years and one day are alike unto him, whatever odds there is betwixt them to us: Pſal. xc. 4. 'For a thouſand years in thy ſight are but as yeſterday when it is paſt, and as a watch in the night.' This conſideration the apoſtle ſuggeſts, 2 Pet. iii. 8. 'One day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day.'

3. He ſees exactly the time appointed for execution againſt every impenitent ſinner, and will not let it paſs beyond that, one moment: Hab. ii. 3. 'For the viſion is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lye: though it tarry, wait for it; becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry.' We ſee the beginning and middle of things, but cannot foreſee the end. God ſees all at once. Well he can bear with ungodly ſinners, for he ſees their day coming with ſpeed, Pſal. xxxvii. 13. What needs haſte in reſpect of God? for he ſees the ſinful creature fading, and will drop down into a grave, ere long, Pſal. lxxviii. 38, 39.

4. He knows what he minds to do, and none can let him: Dan. iv. 37. 'All the King of heaven's works are truth, and his ways judgment, and thoſe that walk in pride he is able to abaſe.' The prince that is afraid of the rebels, will ſtrive to cruſh them ere they gather a head; but he that knows he can cruſh them when he will, may let them gather all their ſtrength together. God can carry on the deſigns of his glory, by bearing long with impenitent ſinners: Rom. ix. 17. 'For the ſcripture ſaith unto Pharaoh, Even for this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.' This alſo he can laugh at the trial of the innocent: Job ix. 23. 'If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.' Like a father holding his child in his hands over a deep pool: the child cries, and the father ſmiles.

5. laſtly, He is infinitely bleſſed in himſelf; and nothing the creature can do againſt him, can hurt him; nor in the leaſt diſturb his repoſe in himſelf, Job xxxv. 6, 8. 'If thou ſinneſt what doſt thou againſt him? or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him? Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man.' If the whole creation ſhould conſpire againſt him opening their mouths againſt the heavens, and doing to the utmoſt of their power againſt him; he might contemn their impotent malice, they would be but like men running their heads againſt a rock. The longeſt interval of time cannot make him weary, Iſa. xl. 28. 'Haſt thou not known? haſt thou not heard, that the everlaſting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?'

Seventhly, There is a neceſſity for both the ſwift and ſlow methods being uſed by providence in the government of the world; it is ſo corrupt and atheiſtical. And,

1. The ſwift method is neceſſary to ſhew, that there is a God to judge upon the earth: Pſal. lviii. 10, 11. 'The righteous ſhall rejoice when he ſeeth the vengeance: he ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the wicked. So that a man ſhall ſay, Verily, there is a reward for the righteous: verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth.' For as ordinary as the ſlow method is, there are never wanting inſtances now and then of ſwift proceſs againſt ungodly ſinners; which is neceſſary to bear teſtimony to the being of a God, and of a providence concerned in human affairs. And there are as many of theſe, as may give ſufficient warning to all.

2. The ſlow method is neceſſary, to ſhew there is a judgment to come, 2 Theſſ. i. 4.—7. 'We ourſelves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your perſecutions and tribulations that ye endure. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer; ſeeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled, reſt with us; when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels,' &c. What the carnal world improves in behalf of Atheiſm, is neceſſary to prevent Sadduciſm: for if all mens wickedneſs were puniſhed in this life, it would thence be concluded, that there were no after-reckoning; but there is never a ſentence paſſed againſt an evil work, that is miſſed to be execute now, but is a pledge of the judgment to come.'

Laſtly, The ſloweſt vengeance againſt impenitent ſinners, will be ſure vengeance; and the ſlower it is in coming, it will be the ſorer when it comes, Deut. xxxii. 35. 'To me belongeth vengeance, and recompence; their foot ſhall ſlide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that ſhall come upon them make haſte.' The old world was ſpared a hundred and twenty years, but was ſwept away at length.

1. Let ſinners be ſpared never ſo long, not one of all their ill works will, or can be forgotten. They may have forgot them themſelves, but God never will. There is a book of remembrance of their ill, as well as of the ſaints good words and works, Amos viii. 7. 'The Lord hath ſworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works.' Pſal. l. 21. 'Theſe things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence: thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thyſelf: but I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes.'

2. The longer ſinners are ſpared, their counts will be the greater, and all will come on at once, Luke xi. 50, 51. 1 Sam. iii. 12. It is people's mercy, that God ceaſeth not to be a reprover to them; as it is the mercy of weak people to pay their debt by littles, whereas they are broken, if it get leave to run on.

3. When it comes on the impenitent ſinner, God will charge both the intereſt and the principal ſum together. They ſhall not only pay for their ill works, but for their mercies, and the ſparing they have gotten: Rom. ii. 4, 5. 'Or deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long ſuffering; not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up unto thyſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.' What aggravated their ſin, will aggravate their condemnation and puniſhment.

And how long ſoever the execution of the ſentence againſt ungodly ſinners, evil workers, may be delayed, and how many external favours of providence be heaped on them; all will appear but ſmall and ſhort, when one conſiders, 1ſt, The ſeverity of the execution when it comes. They will at length be cut aſunder, Matth. xxiv. 51 In flaming fire he will take vengeance on them, 2 Theſſ. i. 8. They will fall into the hands of the living God.

2dly, The eternity of it. That is a killing aggravation in the ſentence, Depart into everlaſting fire. If the worm were once awakened, and ſet on them, it dieth not: the fire once kindled, will not be quenched.

USE 1. Of Information. What has been ſaid, may inform us,

1. That preſent eaſe and proſperity in the world is not a ſure ſign of God's ſpecial favour, Eccleſ. ix. 1, 2. Indeed men are apt to conſtrue it ſo; and Satan and the deceitful heart help them to draw ſuch a concluſion. But ſo far is it from being ſuch a ſign, that it may very well conſiſt with their being in a ſtate of wrath, under a ſentence of condemnation; and is ſo with many.

2. That preſent eaſe, impunity, and proſperity, is no ſecurity againſt the time to come. Men are ready to be ſecure upon it, and to dream that to morrow will be as this day: Pſal. x. 6. 'He hath ſaid in his heart, I ſhall not be moved: for I ſhall never be in adverſity.' But the mountain may be ſtanding ſure now, that ere long may be overturned. The ſun ſhined fair on Sodom, the morning of that day in which God rained fire and brimſtone on it. The rich man was full of thoughts of eaſe in that day, in the night whereof he was ſtruck, Luke xii. 18, 19, 20.

3. There cannot be ſuch worth in outward proſperity, nor ſuch evil in affliction, as we generally imagine. For a holy, wiſe God would never heap what is really beſt on the objects of his wrath, and what is really worſt on the objects of his love. Were there as much real value in the world's wealth, eaſe and honour, health, ſtrength, ſilver, gold, &c. as we imagine, or were there as much evil in trouble, adverſity, &c. as we think, would they be ſo dealt, as that the greateſt ſhare of the former ſhould be given to the condemned, and of the latter to the juſtified? It is owing to the weakneſs of human ſight, that ſo much beauty appears in ſome human faces, and in ſome victuals we feed on. If they were looked to with a microſcope, the beauty would diſappear. Faith is the microſcope here, Eccleſ. i. 2. 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

4. God is a patient and long-ſuffering God, not ſubject to paſſions as we are, 2 Pet. iii. 9. If he were liable to the tranſports of paſſion as we are, the world would have been many times burnt to aſhes ere now; conſidering the provocations given to the eyes of his glory. But the infinite mind enjoys the profoundeſt ſerenity and calm, beholding all the confuſions of evil workers in the world.

5. laſtly, Sad and heavy ſtrokes may be abiding a land and generation, though long warded off. Long has the Lord borne with this apoſtatizing generation in principle and practice; and long have we been threatned; and through the delay we have been brought to ſay, The days are prolonged, and every viſion faileth, Ezek. xii. 22. But a reprieve is no pardon: the cloud is ſtill hanging over our heads; and it is to be feared, that ſome will live to ſee a fearful breaking of it.

USE 2. Of Exhortation. And,

1. Let ungodly ſinners be exhorted to repent of their evil works, and beware of abuſing the divine patience with them. Ye have heard the ſlow method rationally accounted for; if hereafter ye will deceive yourſelves, and turn the grace of God into wantonneſs, encouraging yourſelves in ſin from your impunity and proſperity; know, that ye are wilfully blind, that ye ſhall be inexcuſable, and your blood will be on your own heads. But,

1ſt, Let the ſenſe of gratitude move you to repentance, Rom. ii. 4. Think with yourſelves, what caſe ye had been in, if God had ſtruck you down, as he could in the very act of your evil work; how you might have been beyond all hope and poſſibility of recovery. You owe your life to the ſlow method of providence; his patience exerciſed towards you has kept your ſoul back from the pit. Therefore repent and go no farther on.

2dly, Let the account ye have heard of the ſlow method, fright you from abuſing it. I am ſure, ye cannot but ſee now, that there is no ground to take encouragement to ſin from it. Conſider what has been ſaid, and ſhew yourſelves men. If ye go on to abuſe it ſo, ye make a jeſt of a moſt ſerious and wiſe diſpenſation of providence. Ye turn your food into poiſon, and ſtumble at noon day. And it will be a ſure preſage of everlaſting ruin to you, Hoſ. xiv. 9. 'Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things? prudent, and he ſhall know them? for the ways of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in them: but the tranſgreſſors ſhall fall therein.'

2. Let all beware of cenſuring the ſlow method of providence with ungodly ſinners, evil workers. Take heed how ye ſpeak on that head; beware of riſings of the corrupt heart upon it. For however rationally ye think ye pronounce upon the matter, ſooner or later ye ſhall be made to recant that ſentence, either in mercy, as Job did, chap. xlii. 3. and as Aſaph did, Pſal. lxxiii. 22. or in wrath, Mal. iii. 14, 15. with 18. Conſider,

1ſt, There may be a myſtery in the diſpenſations of providence; but there can be no iniquity, error, or miſtake, Deut. xxxii. 4. 'He is the rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.' Silently adore that wiſdom, and the deep deſign of providence which ye cannot ſee through, that certainly are in the ſlow method God uſes with ſome ungodly ſinners, evil workers. Though ye cannot ſee how God's glory can miſs to ſuffer by it, believe that God will doubtleſs get glory by it.

2*dly*, The myſtery of that diſpenſation in the caſe of every ungodly ſinner, will be opened out before the world at length, to the ſatisfaction of all humble waiters: and the confuſion of the impenitent evil workers, ſcoffers, and murmurers, 1 Cor. iv. 5. 'Judge nothing 'before the time, untill the Lord come, who both will 'bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will 'make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts, and then ſhall 'every man have praiſe of God.' Be not raſh, wait the end, and then ye ſhall be allowed to judge: Prov. xviii. 13. 'He that anſwereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and ſhame unto him.' But why ſhould ye judge of the web of providence ere it be wrought out?

3. Fret not at it, neither envy proſperous wickedneſs, Prov. xxiii. 17. 'Let not thine heart envy ſinners: but 'be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long.' Pſal. xxxvii. 1. 'Fret not thyſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity.' Who would envy the ſtate of a condemned man, though he have a long reprieve, and enjoy many comforts in the iron houſe? Such is the caſe of the ungodly, whatever world's eaſe they have. And therefore they are juſt objects of pity and compaſſion, but not of envy. One had better be a pardoned one in the depth of worldly miſery, than in a ſtate of wrath and condemnation in the top of worldly felicity. 'For what is a man profited, if 'he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? 'or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?' Matth. xvi. 26. Conſider,

1*ſt*, Such fretting and envy proceeds from a diſtempered heart: Pſal. lxxiii. 22. 'So fooliſh was I, and 'ignorant: I was as a beaſt before thee.' See Mal. iii. 15. It is the procedure of a mixture of ignorance, raſhneſs, and inconſideration, unbelief and worldly-mindedneſs. And there needs only to cure it, to have our eyes opened, to ſee things in their true ſtate: the laying aſide of unruly paſſions; faith, and due weanedneſs from the world, Pſal. xxxvii. 1, 2. 'Fret not thy'ſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious 'againſt the workers of iniquity. For they ſhall ſoon 'be cut down like the graſs, and wither as the green 'herb.'

2*dly*, Every one's ſtate is to be rated according as it is before God. If God be one's friend, he is a happy man, though the world ſhould never give him its good word nor kind look. If God is one's enemy, he is a miſerable man, though all the men and things of the world ſhould favour him to his wiſh. For as is one's ſtate with God, ſo is his preſent ſafety; and ſo will be his well or woe through eternity.

4. Let all learn to regulate their conduct by the example of God in this his government of the world, ſo far as it is propoſed for our imitation: Eph. v. 1. 'Be 'ye therefore followers of God as dear children.' And we may learn from it,

1*ſt*, To be patient and ſlow to anger. How ill does it become us to be ſo ready to fire at every provocation, againſt our fellow-creatures; when the higheſt One uſes ſo much patience towards us? Matth. xviii. 23. &c. The more meekly and patiently one carries himſelf, he is the more like unto God who hath ſet us an example.

2*dly*, To learn to bear with ſinners, in order to the ſeeking of their recovery: Gal. vi. 1. 'Brethren, if a 'man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, 'reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſi'dering thyſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted.' Not that we are to ſuffer ſin upon him, ſo far as it is in our power to remove it. God can bring good out of evil, but we cannot do that: therefore that part of the conduct of providence towards the ungodly, we are not called to imitate. But let us be followers of God, in dealing ſtill with the worſt of ſinners to recover them, and not give them over for hopeleſs.

3*dly*, To do good to the worthleſs, unthankful, and evil: Luke vi. 35. 'Love ye your enemies, and do 'good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your 'reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the children of 'the Higheſt: for he is kind unto the unthankful, and 'to the evil.' It is a naughty world, that people had need of ſuch a principle to prompt them to do good to others. If we confine our good to thoſe that do good to us, what more do we than others? If we confine it to thoſe worthy of it, we do it only for the creature's ſake. But if we propoſe to follow the example of God, we will do good to all as we have acceſs, and act from a Chriſtian principle in it.

5. laſtly, Let us not be ſecure with reſpect to the caſe of the land and generation we live in. Let us not think that God has forgotten the iniquity of our fathers in their perfidy and cruelty againſt the godly for his cauſe; or that he approves of the courſe of apoſtaſy from the truth and holineſs of the goſpel this day, whereby the preſent generation has entered itſelf heir to the apoſtatiſing, perſecuting generation that went before. The ſentence is not execute, yet it is but delayed; therefore we may look for it, if repentance prevent it not.

Doct. III. God's delay of execution is often miſerably abuſed by ſinners, to the filling of their hearts to do evil, and ſinning more and more.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Point out the abuſe of God's patience in the delay of execution, that ungodly ſinners make, to the filling of their hearts to do evil.

II. Shew how it comes to paſs, that ſinners ſo abuſe God's patience with them.

III. Make application of the doctrine.

I. I ſhall point out the abuſe of God's patience in the delay of execution, that ungodly ſinners make, to the filling of their hearts to do evil.

1. They abuſe it to carnal ſecurity: Pſal. x. 6. 'He 'hath ſaid in his heart, I ſhall not be moved: for I ſhall 'never be in adverſity.' Finding that God does not execute his threatenings againſt them, they conclude they are in no hazard: and they begin to look on them as mere ſcarecrows, ver. 5. 'His ways are always grie'vous; thy judgments are far above out of his ſight.' And ſo they go on ſecurely in their ungodly courſes. Hence it is that the execution overtakes them quite unexpectedly, 1 Theſſ. v. 2, 3. 'The day of the Lord ſo 'cometh as a thief in the night. For when they ſhall 'ſay, Peace and ſafety; then ſudden deſtruction com'eth upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; 'and they ſhall not eſcape.'

2. They abuſe it to a ſenſual life, wherein their aim is not to keep a clean conſcience, but to gratify their ſenſes, as their circumſtances in the world will permit; as the rich man did, Luke xii. 19. 'I will ſay to my 'ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many 'years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry.' So the more that Providence favours them in external things, the more ſenſual they are, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh and of the mind: Hoſ. xii. 6. 'According to their 'paſture, ſo were they filled: they were filled, and their 'heart was exalted: therefore have they forgotten me.' Hence the lives of many are trifled away, and wholly ſpent in making proviſion for the fleſh, 'the luſt of the 'fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life.' And that is endleſs buſineſs: Eccleſ. i. 8. 'All things are 'full of labour, man cannot utter it: the eye is not ſa'tisfied with ſeeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.'

3. They abuſe it to impudence in ſin, Jer. vi. 14. 15. When God ſtrikes men in a ſinful courſe, they are aſhamed readily as pointed at by the hand of heaven, as tranſgreſſors: but when men proſper in a ſinful courſe, they put on a brow of braſs, they gather a ſtock of impudence in ſin, as if Providence had given them a patent for wickedneſs: Pſal. lxxiii. 5, 6. ‘They are not in trouble as other men: neither are they plagued like other men. Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain: violence covereth them as a garment.’

4. They abuſe it to contempt of God, and all that is ſacred: Pſal. lxxiii. 9. ‘They ſet their mouth againſt the heavens: and their tongue walketh through the earth.’ Agur ſaw the danger of this ſnare, and therefore prayed thus, Prov. xxx 8, 9. ‘Remove far from me vanity and lies: give me neither poverty, nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me; leſt I be full, and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? or leſt I be poor, and ſteal, and take the name of my God in vain.’ Iſrael fell into it: Deut. xxxii. 15. ‘Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation.’ The ungodly have not love to God: if they have any thing that way of ſuch affection, it is fear of him, a ſlaviſh fear of his wrath, ſpringing from the love of themſelves: this fear they loſe alſo, when God delays to ſtrike. And ſo it iſſues in contempt, as is natural in the caſe of one we love not, nor fear neither. And then all that is ſacred is deſpiſed.

5. They abuſe to ſinning more diffuſively, giving looſe reins to their ſeveral luſts, Jer. vii. 9, 10. One ſin makes way for another, and proſperity in ſinful courſes gives many occaſions of ſin: and as the vitious ſtomach, the more it receives, breeds the more ill humours; ſo the more one proſpers in a ſinful courſe, the more vile does he grow.

6. They abuſe it to ſinning more eagerly: Eph. iv. 19. ‘Being paſt feeling, they have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs’ The more that luſts are fed, the more ſtrong they grow, and carry out the man more violently to ſatisfy them. So that the heart in that caſe is like a ſhip having a full gale of wind, and is eagerly ſet to do evil.

7. laſtly, They abuſe it to incorrigibleneſs and obſtinacy in ſin, Jer. xxii 21. A proſperous ſinner quickly gets above reproofs, Hoſ. iv. 4. As affliction tends to humble, proſperity puffs up an ungracious heart: and the heart ſwelled with pride ſcorns to ſtoop, till God by his grace or judgments do lay it.

II. How it comes to paſs that ſinners ſo abuſe God's patience with them?

1. Sin reigning in the ungodly, fear of wrath is their higheſt motive to good, and moſt forcible reſtraint from evil; and ſo when that reſtraint is taken off by the delay of execution again and again; the heart naturally goes to its own bias, and is like the wild aſs's colt ſnuffing up the wind at her pleaſure. The love of holineſs for itſelf, and likeneſs to God, would prevent it.

2. They miſtake the deſigns of providence. They miſinterpret the ſlow method of procedure with them, Pſal. l. 21. The deſign of it is to lead them to repentance; but that they notice not. But they conſtrue it, as if God approved of their ways, or had ſuch a regard for them, that he would not be ſo angry with them, as one would make them believe: they cannot think that he is ſo very angry at their ſin, while they proſper in it by his providence.

3. There is a root of Atheiſm in the hearts of all men naturally, and it reigns in the ungodly: Pſal. xiv. 1. ‘The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God.’ Unleſs God be every now and then proving his being, providence, and juſtice to them, by his works of judgment on themſelves; they are apt to forget him, and deny him. It is the intereſt of men wedded to their luſts, that there were not a God; or if there be, that he were not ſuch as the ſcripture repreſents him. So they are ready to entertain every thing that may favour it.

4. laſtly, The Lord often in that way carries on a holy hardening work. In which caſe, Satan and the evil heart conſpire to this abuſe.

Use 1. of Information. This lets us ſee,

1. That we need not be ſurpriſed to ſee ſinners eſcaping with one evil work fall into another, and ſo on; growing ſtill more vile, the more outward favours are heaped on them. It is but a fulfilling of this ſcripture. Providence often has an odd aſpect in our view, till we carry the matter to the Bible; and there we ſee it exactly anſwering the word.

2. It is good for men to be under frequent rebukes of providence. Affliction is ſore, but it is the more ſafe lot, Pſal. cxix. 71. In the one men are put in mind of their ſins, in the other they are apt to forget both their God and themſelves. It would be profitable for the afflicted to conſider the wretched abuſe the heart is ready to make of eaſe and proſperity.

3. Slow vengeance will be ſore vengeance when it comes. For the longer it is a-coming, ſin goes the deeper: the more God ſpares impenitents, the more they treaſure up wrath againſt the day of wrath; the counts run on, and ſwell the more. So whether we conſider it coming on in time, or eternity, the heavier will it be.

4. laſtly, Great is the corruption of human nature. See it here as in a glaſs, how the mercy and goodneſs of God is deſpiſed by the corrupt heart, that will not be drawn by ſuch cords of love. See how it turns our food into poiſon, and that which ſhould be for our welfare into a ſnare and trap. See it an ungrateful nature, apt to be inſenſible of the ties of gratitude to our beſt Benefactor.

Use 2. of Exhortation. Take heed of abuſing the patience of a long ſuffering God, of turning his grace, goodneſs, and forbearance, into wantonneſs, of your heart filling to do evil, while God ſpares.

1. Conſider the evil of it. There is in it,

1*ſt*, An over-valuing of ourſelves, as if we deſerved not to be worſe treated, and therefore were nothing obliged to our Benefactor, Hab i. 16. ‘They ſacrifice unto their net, and burn incenſe unto their drag: becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous.’ Men, who are not bettered by God's goodneſs, their hearts ſwell in pride, as patience is uſed towards them, Pſal. lxxiii. 5, 6. ‘They are not in trouble as other men: neither are they plagued like other men. Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain: violence covereth them as a garment.’

2*dly*, An under-valuing of others whom providence doth not treat ſo ſoftly. Hence Job ſaid, chap. xii. 5. ‘He that is ready to ſlip with his feet, is as a lamp deſpiſed in the thought of him that is at eaſe.’ How lightly do many that are at eaſe, look on the heavy things others ſuffer? They are as unconcerned with them, as if they were creatures of an inferior rank. Were men ſenſible of God's goodneſs in his patience towards them, it would make them ſympathiſe with others, wondering that it is not worſe with themſelves, 2 Chron. xxviij. 10.

3*dly*, A monſtrous abuſe of the creature, and comforts of life, Hoſ. ii. 8. The uſe of the creature was given to man, for his comfort indeed; but always in a ſubſerviency to the glory of God. But abuſers of divine patience turn the weapons againſt God, which he has armed them with for his ſervice, Deut. xxxii. 15. ‘But Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation.’ They are called adulterers and adultereſſes, James iv. 4. becauſe they beſtow God's good gifts on their luſts, verſe 3. Hence the creation grones under the burden of the ungodly evil workers, Rom. viii. 22.

4thly, A denying the due tribute to our Sovereign Lord and King. All that we have we hold of him, in the way of free mercy, Lam. iii. 22. The king in his palace, and the beggar in his cottage, is God's tennant; our food and raiment, coarſe or fine, with all conveniencies of life are given us of God. We can pay him nothing, but the tribute of praiſe in our lips and lives: and that is denied. Hence, 5thly, Monſtrous ingratitude, a ſin of a deep dye: Deut. xxxii. 6. 'Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe? Is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee?' It is a deviliſh diſpoſition of heart, that cannot be won with benefits; a baſe ſpirit, which good done them cannot engage. But abuſers of mercies, the more God loads them with benefits, the more they load him with their provocations. Ah! ſhall men ſin, becauſe grace abounds? ſhall their hearts be filled in them to do evil, becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not ſpeedily executed?

6thly, Practical blaſphemy, as if men ſhould ſay, they are hired to be vile, Jer. vii. 9, 10. Abuſers of the doctrine of the goſpel, to licentiouſneſs, make Chriſt the miniſter of ſin: therefore abuſers of the kind providence of God to that end, make God in his government of the world ſo. While heaven ſmiles in outward favours on men, and they uſe them ſo, the language of that practice is blaſphemous.

7thly, Much Atheiſm and contempt of God. It is a denial of his providence, as if he had no concern about human affairs, Ezek. ix. 9. It makes a jeſt of his threatnings in his word, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. It miſrepreſents his holy nature, Pſal. l. 21. or bids him defiance, Iſa. v. 19. and throws off his yoke, Pſal. xii. 4.

2. Conſider the danger of it. If ye go on ſo,

1ſt, Ye will make your recovery ay more and more hopeleſs, Jer. vi. 29, 30. Sin is a current, the farther it runs, the deeper it grows; and the more goodneſs men ſin againſt, the more is their heart hardened, and their conſciences ſeared. Withal it provokes God to give up with men, leave ſtriving with them, and give them up to their luſts, and to the devil to be hardened more.

2dly, If God have any thoughts of good towards you, it will make your recovery more difficult. Strong diſeaſes muſt have ſtrong remedies: and long abuſed patience will make broken bones, at beſt; if ye be ſaved, it will be ſo as by fire. At beſt ye are but laying up for bitter repentance; the more looſe and licentious one is in an unconverted ſtate, the more ſevere pangs and throes he will readily find in the new birth. Witneſs Manaſſeh, Paul, &c.

3dly, Be it as it will, that patience will have an end: ye ſhall not ſin on and God ſpare on very long. The coupling of theſe two will be broken, and God will ſhew you that he will bear no longer with your abuſe, Eccleſ. vii. 6. 'For as the crackling of thorns under a pot, ſo is the laughter of the fool.' Ye will find God will awake to judgment, and wake you out of your dream; and ye will either be his converts or broken to pieces by him.

4thly, The breaking up of patience with you is likely to be very ſudden or ſurpriſing, 1 Theſſ. v. 2, 3. So was it with the rich man, Luke xii. 19, 20. God bore long with the old world, but at length the deluge came on like a thunder clap in the midſt of their carnal mirth and jollity. God does it in juſt recompenſe of long abuſed patience.

Laſtly, Abuſed patience, when it breaks off, will turn to fury; and the longer God has delayed execution, the more ſevere will it be when it comes on, Lev. xxvi. 28. The more a man has had in truſt, his accounts will be found the greater, and the harder, to clear off, when once the creditors fall on him. It is moſt pleaſing to the fleſh, to live in eaſe and fulneſs: but the abuſe of theſe will make a more fearful reckoning, than otherwiſe.

DOCT. IV. Though the execution be never ſo ſlow, it will be ſure, againſt impenitent ſinners, evil workers.

In handling this doctrine, it is propoſed to ſhew,

I. In what reſpects the execution againſt impenitent ſinners, evil workers, will be ſure.

II. That the execution againſt them will be ſure.

III. Apply the doctrine.

I. In what reſpects will the execution againſt impenitent ſinners, evil workers, be ſure? It will be ſure, in reſpect of,

1. The full tale of their evil works: Eccleſ. xii. 14. 'For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.' Neither the multitude of them, nor the long time they ly over unreckoned for, will cauſe any of them to be forgotten. But the ill works of the ſeveral periods of the ſinner's life, will be charged upon him exactly. God keeps a regiſter of all their evil works, a book that will be opened at the laſt day, Rev. xx. 12.; and has ſworn that none of them ſhall be forgotten, Amos viii. 7.

2. The whole aggravations of their evil works, Jude ver. 15. A juſt God will remember againſt impenitent ſinners, the manner as well as the matter of their ſins; the time, place, and other circumſtances of their ill works, will be remembered againſt them. Their abuſed mercies, the light they rebelled againſt, the warnings from the word and providence they ſlighted, the effects their ill example had on others, the ſnares others were intangled in by their means, &c. will all be charged on them.

3. The conviction of their own conſciences, Jude ver. 15. Sinners now find ways to cloke and cover their evil works, to deny or mince them: and few will now ſuffer themſelves to be admoniſhed or reproved, but they have a great deal to ſay in their own defence; but the lying lips, and tongues that ſpeak proudly, will then be put to ſilence, Matth. xxii. 12. The light of conſcience will then be like broad day light, that is now as the darkneſs of the night. It will convince them clearly of what ſhall be laid to their charge, that they can no more deny it, John viii. 9.; and of the juſtice of God in proceeding againſt them, Pſal. l. 6.

4. Juſt puniſhment brought on them for their evil works, 1 Theſſ. v. 3. While God delays, men dream with Agag, that the bitterneſs of death is paſt: but will find themſelves deceived, as he, when Samuel took the ſword and hewed him in pieces before the Lord. They cannot eſcape the due demerit of their ſin at length; but as the needle draws the thread after it, ſin will draw wrath. Judgment is ſin's ſhadow.

5. The correſpondence there will be between their ſin and puniſhment. God will write every ungodly ſinner's ſin in his puniſhment. Oft times it is ſo here with them, as in the caſe of Adonibezek, Judges i. 7. but always ſo hereafter, as in the caſe of the rich man, Luke xvi. 19. with 24. Hence the worm is ſaid never to die; ſignifying the eternal remorſe they ſhall have for their evil works. And the degrees of puniſhment will be ſuited to the degrees of their ſin. They that have committed many ſins, ſhall have many ſtripes.

6. Its inevitableneſs, when once patience is come to an end: Luke xiii. 24, 25. 'Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate: for many, I ſay unto you, ſhall ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able. When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, and hath ſhut to the door, and ye begin to ſtand without, and to knock at the door, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he ſhall anſwer and ſay unto you, I know you not whence you are.' The door of mercy may ſtand open long, but it will be ſhut at length. And then there is no more eſcaping. For,

1ſt, Omniſcience will find out the ſlier, and diſcover his moſt ſecret crimes, and overthrow all his defences: Heb. iv. 13. 'Neither is there any creature that is not 'manifeſt in his ſight: but all things are naked, and 'opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to 'do.' Pſal. cxxxix. 7. 'Whither ſhall I go from thy 'Spirit? or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence?' There is no blinding of the eye of an omniſcient judge.

2*dly*, Divine power will bring him under, and cauſe him to ſtand and receive the juſt reward of his deeds: Job ix. 4. He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength: who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? There will be no reſiſting of omnipotence: the ſtouteſt ſinner will be poured out like water before an angry God.

3*dly*, The divine ſeverity will proceed over the belly of all entreaties, made out of time: Luke xiii. 24, 25. forecited. They that ſlight mercy while God's time for it laſteth, will get no mercy when God's time is out, and theirs is come.

4. laſtly, Its eternity. The execution once on, will never be off; once begun, never will end: Mark ix. 44. In hell the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. While God is, he will purſue the quarrel. The ungodly ſin on as long as they are in the world, and live as long as they will, they will not alter their courſe; and God will purſue them for ever, when he breaks off.

II. That the execution againſt them will be ſure, appears,

1. From the inviolable regard God has to the honour of his holy law, Iſa. xlii. 21. Sinners trample on it, ſlight its commands, and deſpiſe its threatenings; but God highly regards it, as that wherein he has eminently expreſſed the holineſs of his nature. If ſinners then honour it not in the way of duty, it will be honoured upon them in a way of judgment. God's regard to his law may be ſeen clearly,

1*ſt*, In the works of providence. As ſoon as ſin entered into the world, and the law was broken, the face of providence on the world was quite changed. And it has blown continually ſince in the face of the creation leſs or more, Rom. viii. 22. Ofttimes it has riſen to violent ſtorms, to avenge the quarrel of the diſhonour of the holy law by ſinners. Remember how, in that quarrel, Adam was driven out of paradiſe, the world drowned by the flood, Sodom burnt, Jeruſalem deſtroyed, with the many awful ſtrokes brought on impenitent ſinners in latter times.

2*dly*, In the work of redemption. God choſe ſome from eternity unto ſalvation; but being breakers of the law, they behoved to be redeemed, and the price paid to the full reparation of the honour of the law. Chriſt the Son of God was their Redeemer; but that the law's honour might be ſeen to, he met with no ſparing: Rom. viii. 32. He ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. So God wrote his regard to the law in the ſalvation of his elect, and blood of his ſon.

2. The truth and veracity of God inſures the execution. He has ſaid, he will do it; Gen. ii. 17. 'In 'the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.' His Son has intimated to us from heaven, that impenitent ſinners ſhall not eſcape: Luke xiii. 3. 'I tell you, 'nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe pe'riſh.' Every leaf of the ſcripture almoſt, has ſomething to this purpoſe; and 'hath he ſaid, and ſhall he 'not do it? or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make 'it good?' Numb. xxiii. 19. God's truth muſt either fail, or ungodly ſinners be reckoned with at length.

3. The juſtice of God requires it; Gen. xviii. 25. 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?' Men may be unjuſt judges; but God cannot. He will give every tranſgreſſion a juſt recompence of reward; for it is in his power to do it, and his nature requires it. He hates ſin, and cannot but hate it; and therefore though he delay for a time, he will puniſh.

4. The conſtant conduct of providence hitherto confirms it. There have been multitudes of ungodly men in the world; but may we not put the queſtion, Job ix. 4. Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? Some have indeed been long ſpared; but did not they at length either bow or break before him? What became of the giants in the old world, of Pharaoh, of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram? Theſe things happened for warnings to us. And if any have eſcaped during life, is there not ſufficient evidence of execution on them in another world? as is evident from the caſe of the rich man, Luke xvi.

5. laſtly, The peremptory appointment of the day of general judgment, puts it out of queſtion: Acts xvii. 30, 31. 'And the times of this ignorance God winked 'at; but now commandeth all men every where to re'pent: becauſe he hath appointed a day in the which 'he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that man 'whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given aſſu'rance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from 'the dead.' The Judge is named for that effect already, the commiſſion to him for that end has paſſed the ſeals in his reſurrection; it is to be general, all muſt be judged by him; yea, the ſentence againſt the ungodly is conceived already, 'Depart from me, ye curſed, 'into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his 'angels.'

For Use, I ſhall drop a word to,

1. The ungodly, evil workers. And to you I would ſay,

1*ſt*, Let not your impunity for the preſent, make you ſecure for the time to come; as is the caſe of the wicked man, Pſal. x. 6. 'He hath ſaid in his heart, I ſhall not 'be moved: for I ſhall never be in adverſity.' As ſure as ye think your mountain now ſtands, it may ſuddenly be overturned; yea, it ſhall aſſuredly, if ye repent not. God is giving you ſpace to repent: do not trifle and dream it away, leſt ye repent it when it is too late.

2*dly*, Let not your obſervation of the proſperity of other ſinners, encourage and harden you in your ſinful courſe, as it did thoſe, Mal. iii. 15. 'And now we call 'the proud happy: yea, they that work wickedneſs are 'ſet up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered.' Ye have ſeen much of their ſinful courſe, and of God's patience. But ye have not ſeen the end of it yet: Iſa. xvii. 11. 'In the day ſhalt thou make thy plant to grow, 'and in the morning ſhalt thou make thy ſeed to flou'riſh: but the harveſt ſhall be a heap in the day of 'grief, and of deſperate ſorrow.' Many a day has begun fair, and held on long ſo, that has had a foul evening. And whatever ye have obſerved of them, their proſperity in their ill courſe ſhall either end in bitter repentance, or in their deſtruction; or elſe the word of truth fails.

3*dly*, Take the alarm in time, and flee from the wrath to come: Iſa. lv. 6, 7. 'Seek ye the Lord while he may 'be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the 'wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his 'thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he 'will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he 'will abundantly pardon.' Know ye cannot proſper to the end, in your looſe and licentious ways. Ye muſt come to Chriſt by faith, and leave the world lying in wickedneſs; muſt break off your ſins by repentance, or elſe ye will periſh. If ye do it not, ye will mind that ye have been fairly warned, and lament for ever your ſlighting of it.

2. To the godly I would ſay,

1*ſt*, Beware of entertaining any idol of jealouſy in your heart, wherewith the Lord may be provoked againſt you. He is impartial in his judgments, and even his own ſhall not eſcape: Iſa. xlii. 24. 'Who 'gave Jacob for a ſpoil, and Iſrael to the robbers? did 'not the Lord, he, againſt whom we have ſinned? for 'they would not walk in his ways, neither were they 'obedient unto his law.' Though being in Chriſt ye have ſhut the gulf as to condemnation, ye may be ſeverly chaſtiſed; and ye may get broken bones for your tranſgreſſions, though ye cannot loſe your ſouls.

2*dly*, Be not diſcouraged in the Lord's way, becauſe in it ye meet with many ſore trials, while others that are far from it go at eaſe. The work-ox goes with the yoke on his neck, while the ſlaughter-ox is full fed. But the former is preſerved, while the latter is ſlain and hewed in pieces.

3. laſtly, To all I would ſay,

1ſt, Know that God is a holy jealous God. The way of ſin is dangerous; and there will be no peace in the end of it.

2dly, Let us prepare to meet our God in the way of his judgments. God's proceedings againſt the land are ſlow, but they are like to be ſure and ſore. He has made the earth to quake beneath us, ſhewn his anger from the face of the heavens above us.

The Sin, Folly and Danger of Mens calling Chriſt their Lord, and not yielding Obedience to his Laws: Or, The Sinfulneſs and Hazard of a Profeſſion of Religion, without a correſpondent Practice.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in Summer 1728.

LUKE vi. 46.

And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay?

THERE was, together with the diſciples, a great multitude gathered to hear Chriſt, and to be healed by him, ver. 17. Many of them pretended a great regard for him; but it went no farther than good words. Our Lord here tells them, that ſuch is every man, good or bad, according as his life is, ver. 44, 45. 'For every 'tree is known by his own fruit: for of thorns men do 'not gather figs, nor of a bramble-buſh gather they 'grapes. A good man out of the treaſure of his heart, 'bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man, 'out of the treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth that 'which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart, his 'mouth ſpeaketh.' And he cloſely applies this to their conſcience in the text. Wherein we have,

1. A conceſſion. He grants they made a fair profeſſion; they called him Lord, their Lord. They owned his authority and Lordſhip over them, as if they were his ſubjects and ſervants ready to receive and obey his commands. They addreſſed themſelves to him for his help, one and another crying, Lord, help me, pleading to receive benefit by him as their Lord. And this they did at times with much ſeeming zeal and concern, Lord, Lord.

2. A charge. He charges them with being nothing like this in their practice. Though they called him their Lord, they carried not themſelves at all as his ſubjects and ſervants. Though they would have him to do for them, they would do nothing for him. In his preaching and life, he laid their duty before them: but though they owned him for their Lord, they ſhewed no regard in their practice to what he ſaid, no conformity to his doctrine and example.

3. An expoſtulation. He puts them to conſider the inconſiſtency of theſe things, and the unaccountableneſs of yoking together a profeſſion and a practice that deſtroyed one another. A lord, and a ſubject or ſervant are relatives; to the one it belongs to command, to the other to obey, Mal. i. 6. Why will ye plead the relation, and yet throw off the duty of the relation? 'If you 'call me your Lord, why do ye not what I ſay or bid 'you? If you will not do what I ſay or bid you, why 'do ye call me your Lord?'

Two doctrines are deducible from the text thus explained.

DOCT. I. There are who call Chriſt their Lord, owning his authority over them, and looking for benefit by him, who yet make not conſcience of doing the things which he as a Lord ſays to them, and requires of them.

DOCT. II. It lies on mens conſciences before the Lord, to take it home to themſelves, to conſider and anſwer it, how they come to call Chriſt their Lord, and yet make not conſcience of doing the things which he as a Lord ſays to them, and requires of them.

I ſhall handle theſe doctrines in order.

DOCT. I. There are who call Chriſt their Lord, owning his authority over them, and looking for benefit by him, who yet make not conſcience of doing the things which he as a Lord ſays to them, and requires of them.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Conſider mens calling Chriſt their Lord.

II. Conſider their not doing the things which he ſays, notwithſtanding their calling him their Lord.

III. Shew how it comes to paſs, that people do call Chriſt Lord, and their Lord, and yet make no conſcience of doing what he ſays.

IV. Apply the doctrine.

I. I will conſider mens calling Chriſt their Lord.

Under this head, I will ſhew,

1. How men call Chriſt their Lord.

2. What they do call Chriſt, that call him their Lord.

3. What is the import of their calling him Lord.

Firſt, I will ſhew how men call Chriſt their Lord. Men call him their Lord.

1. Profeſſing Chriſtianity. Chriſtians is the name of Chriſt's diſciples who owned him for their Lord and Maſter, Acts xi. 26. 'The diſciples were called Chriſ'tians firſt at Antioch.' As ye are called Chriſtians, ye are called by his name, owning him for your Lord and Maſter, Matth. xxiii. 10. 'One is your Maſter, e'ven Chriſt.' Some, that they may take to themſelves a liberty, which others may not, will pretend they do not make a profeſſion. Strange! Chriſtians and yet not profeſſors! Can there be a more holy profeſſion, than that of Chriſtianity, whereof Chriſt is the head? Heb. iii. 1. 'Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the 'heavenly calling, conſider the apoſtle and high prieſt 'of our profeſſion, Chriſt Jeſus.' Nay, at that rate ye take the name, and throw off the thing.

2. Being baptized in his name, Matth. xxviii. 19. They are thereby externally marked for his ſubjects and ſervants, and renounce the devil, the world, and the fleſh. It is a badge of ſubjection to Chriſt, which the members of the viſible church have taken on, to diſ-ſtinguiſh them from the world, whereof Satan is the god; while Chriſt is the Lord and God of the church.

3. Praying unto him, or to God in his name, Acts vii. 59. Dan. ix. 17. Every praying perſon, ſo far as he prays like a Chriſtian, calls Chriſt his Lord, and begs his help; though many do little conſider what that requires of them in their practice.

4. Attending the aſſemblies of his people to hear his word, Ezek. xxxiii. 31. The Lord Chriſt has appointed theſe aſſemblies for declaring his will to his people, as to what he will do for them, and what he will have them to do; and the very coming thither in a way of outward reverence, is a calling him Lord, from whom we are to learn our duty.

5. Conſenting perſonally to the covenant, Iſa. xliv. 5. Thereby they ſay, he is and ſhall be for ever their Lord, and that they ſhall be his only, wholly, and for ever. And at whatever time any have given ſuch conſent, they have no power to retract it after. Whether ever they ſhall renew it again or not, it ſtands recorded before God, and they will be judged before him accordingly.

6. laſtly, Partaking of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper. The very name of that ordinance bears the partakers to call him ſo, 1 Cor. xi. 23. 26. And it is a very ſolemn profeſſion before the world, angels, and men, that he is our Lord, and we give up with all other lords. We take heaven's ſeal upon it, and in a manner make oath that it is ſo.

Secondly, I will ſhew what they do call Chriſt, that call him their Lord.

1. They call him their Lord God; as Thomas did, John xx. 28. 'My Lord, and my God.' They own him to be God their Creator, who made them, and preſerves and ſuſtains them, to be their ſovereign Lord, the Moſt High God with his Father and Spirit, unleſs they declare the contrary. For ſo the univerſal church of Chriſt on earth do underſtand Chriſt to be the Lord, Rom. ix. 5. however lightly men may let of his commands.

2. Their Lord Proprietor, Maſter and Owner, however little regard they ſhow to the will of his providence and precepts, Rom. xiv. 9. For as all things are his by creation, ſo the Father has by a new title made him heir of all things, Lord of all, which is declared in the goſpel, Acts x. 36. And ſo the head of every man is Chriſt.

3. Their Lord Redeemer, Exod. xx. 2. however unſuitably they walk to the redemption purchaſed by him. For ſo his people underſtand him to be our Lord, who bought us with his precious blood, paying our ranſom while we were captives of Satan, giving himſelf for us.

4. Their lord Huſband, however refractory and diſobedient they prove to him: Jer. iii. 14. 'Turn, O 'backſliding children, ſaith the Lord, for I am married 'unto you.' Iſ. liv. 5. 'Thy Maker is thine huſband 'the Lord of hoſts is his name.' And ſo they own their obligation to be ſubject to him, faithful and obedient till death. For as he is Lord, he is a Lord Head and Huſband, to his church.

5. laſtly, Their Lord King, however rebellious they be; Iſ. xxxiii. 22. 'The Lord is our judge, the Lord 'is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King, he will ſave 'us.' They own him to be king in Zion, having power and royal dominion over them, to command, reward, and puniſh, as they carry themſelves towards him.

Thirdly, What is the import of their calling him Lord? Men calling him ſo, do in effect own, acknowledge and profeſs,

1. His undoubted authority to command and preſcribe duty to them; owning him as their Lord, Huſband, King, and God, they cannot deny but he has authority to bind them with laws. The huſband claims authority over his ſpouſe, the king over his ſubjects; and ſhall not God claim authority over his own creatures? All theſe meet together in Chriſt; ſo, by our own confeſſion, he has authority over us.

2. The juſtice and equity of his commands: Rom. vii. 12. 'The law is holy; and the commandment, 'holy, and juſt, and good.' Huſbands and kings among men, may require unjuſt things of their relatives, thro' their own perverſeneſs or blindneſs: but he being our Lord God, is eſſentially juſt, and can command nothing but what is truly good. Will we venture to attack the holineſs of God, to accuſe his commands of injuſtice, for an excuſe of our neglect of them?

3. Our abſolute obligation to obey him. If he is our Lord, we owe him an illimited ſubjection, obedience, without diſputing of his commands, Pſal. cxix. 4. and a reſignation to his providence without reſerve, Matth. xx. 15. As the clay is in the hands of the potter, ſo are we in his. The potſherds of the earth may ſtrive with one another, but ſhall they ſtrive with their Maker?

4. The ſtrongeſt ties upon us to be for him. If he is our Proprietor and Redeemer, are we not bound by all the ties of honour and gratitude to be wholly his? Do we ſay, he redeemed us from death, can we deny but we are bound to live for him? Has he redeemed us by dying for us, in our room and ſtead, and ſo ſaved us from dying eternally; what poſſible ſtronger incentive can there be to obedience?

5. laſtly, The expectation of happineſs from him. Calling him our Lord, we expect from him and by him, the pardon of our ſin, the favour of God, and a part in the kingdom of heaven, Matth. vii. 21. We know that he is not only Lord of this world, but of the other alſo: and ſo we raiſe our expectations accordingly.

II. I will conſider mens not doing the things which he ſays, notwithſtanding of all this. We may take it up in three things.

1. Chriſt as a Lord preſcribes duty to his ſubjects. He has not an empty title of lordſhip and dominion, but is a Lawgiver: Iſa. xxxiii. 22. 'He is our Lawgi'ver.' And the law of the ten commands, in their ſpirituality and extent, is his law, binding by his authority on all that call him Lord, Exod. xx. 2, 3. &c. As he is the Lord our God, he claims abſolute and illimited ſubjection and obedience of us; as he is our Proprietor, he claims the abſolute diſpoſal of us; as he is our Redeemer, he requires our living wholly to him; as he is our Huſband, he demands our being ſubject to him in love, faithfulneſs, and obedience till death, yea for ever; and as he is our King, he requires the duty of faithful ſubjects, and to have no commerce with his enemies.

2. He intimates his will to them as to their duty. He ſays what he would have them to do. We have his written laws in the Bible, which is God's word to every one into whoſe hand it comes. His miniſters, as his meſſengers, do in his name proclaim his laws, and require obedience to them. Conſcience within mens breaſts teſtifies the neceſſity of obedience. So that none can pretend ignorance. If they be ignorant of his will, it is affected; they deſire not to know it; as thoſe do, Job xxi. 14. who 'ſay unto God, Depart from us; for 'we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways.'

3. Yet men neglect it, and regard it not in their practice. They plead their relation to him, but make no conſcience of the duty of it. He has laid down their duty in laws and commands, and has intimate it to them: but they take no heed to regulate their practice according to them. He ſays what things he would have them to do, but they do them not.

1*ſt*, They have no due ſenſe of their being abſolutely bound up to his will, but fancy themſelves to be at ſome liberty to walk according to their own, as if the government were divided betwixt Chriſt and themſelves: Pſal. xii. 4. 'Who have ſaid, With our tongue will we pre'vail, our lips are our own: who is lord over us?' They do not feel the tie of the yoke of Chriſt always upon them, but are 'like bullocks unaccuſtomed to the yoke,' ſkipping at eaſe according to their own pleaſure.

2*dly*, They frame not their life according to his will.

Their habitual walk and practice is not holy, but looſe, licentious, untender, carnal, and like the world, not like the followers of Chriſt; like the Epheſians in their unconverted ſtate, Eph. ii. 2. who 'walked according to 'the courſe of this world, according to the prince of the 'power of the air, the ſpirit that now worketh in the 'children of diſobedience.' They attend ordinances, and perform ſome religious duties: but look into the ſtrain of their converſation, it is no wiſe Chriſt-like, but world-like; contrary to that exhortation, Rom. xii. 2. 'Be ye not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind.'

3dly, They never ſet themſelves to do all that he ſays; contrary to what the Pſalmiſt did, Pſal. cxix. 6. who 'had reſpect unto all God's commandments.' This one or other thing that he ſays, they do: but they were never brought to a compliance without reſerve. They pick and chuſe out ſome things, but they reject others: A clear evidence, that his authority which is ſtamped on all his commands, has little weight with them, Jam. ii. 11.

4thly, They habitually do againſt what he ſays, making their luſts and inclinations their law: like thoſe who ſaid, Jer. ii. 25. 'I have loved ſtrangers, and after them 'will I go.' They call him their Lord; but Satan and their luſts are really their lords, to whom they yield their obedience, being captives at their pleaſure.

5. laſtly, They do nothing purely becauſe he ſays it, elſe they would endeavour to do all. In what they do, they have other ends than to pleaſe him; they do it to pleaſe themſelves, for their own profit, pleaſure, or ſafety.

III. The third general head is, to ſhew how it comes to paſs, that people call Chriſt Lord, and their Lord, and yet make not conſcience of doing what he ſays. The ſprings of this ruining practice, that ſo prevails, are many. As,

1. The want of a thorough change in their nature; Luke vi. 43, 45. 'A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit: neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth 'good fruit. For every tree is known by his own fruit: 'for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble 'buſh gather they grapes.' There is ſome change made on them, therefore they call Chriſt Lord; it is not carried through, therefore they do not what he ſays. Hence they are neither cold nor hot: they are neither profeſſed enemies, nor cordial friends; like the Laodiceans, of whom our Lord ſaid, Rev. iii. 15. 'I know thy 'works, that thou art neither cold nor hot.'

1ſt, Good education and religious company embalms ſome dead ſouls; but ſtill they want the principle of the Spirit of life; like thoſe of whom the apoſtle ſays, Jude 19. 'Theſe be they who ſeparate themſelves, ſen'ſual, having not the Spirit.' So they continue dead in ſin ſtill, and their courſe of life becomes abominable with dead works, till in end they are as twice dead, verſe 12.

2dly, The goſpel being new to ſome, makes a reel among their affections; as it did among the ſtony ground hearers, Matth. xiii. 20, 21. 'He that received the ſeed 'into ſtony places, the ſame is he that heareth the word, 'and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root 'in himſelf, but dureth for a while; for when tribula'tion or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by and 'by he is offended.' So that they have ſome liking of the goſpel; and begin to look kindly towards the way of God; but it changes not their hearts, verſe 21. And the newneſs going away, theſe affections wear off, and they begin to appear in their own colours of black nature. Hence we have many, who, while they were ſpringing up in youth, bloſſomed fair, and ſolemnly gave their names to Chriſt at ſacraments; but being grown up, turn ſtark naught.

3dly, They get ſome new light into their heads, but no new life into their hearts. This was the caſe of many of John's hearers, who afterwards withered away; concerning whom Chriſt ſaid, John v. 35. 'He was a 'burning and a ſhining light; and ye were willing for 'a ſeaſon to rejoice in his light.'

4thly, Many get awakening grace, that never get converting grace. Their convictions bring them to call Chriſt Lord: but they living ſtrangers to the work of converſion, cannot do the things which he ſays.

2. Entertaining wrong notions of religion. They form to themſelves ſuch notions of religion, as leave them at liberty in the courſe of their walk. (1.) They think that is religion to call Chriſt Lord in performing duties of worſhip, praying, &c. and conſider not that the ſubſtance of religion lies in holy, tender walking, Tit. ii. 11, 12. 'The grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, 'hath appeared to all men; teaching us, that denying 'ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, 'righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world.' Hence having done theſe duties of worſhip, they are at no more care to keep their hearts in the Lord's fear all the day long; but, on the contrary, can take the greater liberty to themſelves in looſe walking; as the whore did, Prov. vii. 14, 15. 'I have peace offerings with me; this day 'have I paid my vows. Therefore came I forth to meet 'thee, diligently to ſeek thy face, and I have found thee.' Hence publicans and harlots enter into the kingdom of heaven before ſuch perſons. (2.) They think that faith will ſave them, though it be dead, idle, and unactive; contrary to what the apoſtle ſaith, James ii. 14. 'What 'doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath 'faith, and have not works? Can faith ſave him?' ver. 26. 'As the body without the ſpirit is dead, ſo faith 'without works is dead alſo.' They do not conſider, that that faith is not ſaving faith, which is ſo. Hence they can take a great deal of liberty in the way of ſin, and put off repentance from time to time, even to a deathbed, upon the confidence that their faith in Chriſt will ſave them. Such have been of old, and ſtill are, Jude 4. 'For there are certain men crept in unawars, 'who were before of old ordained to this condemna'tion, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into 'laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only Lord God, and 'our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.' There is no true faith but what purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9. and ſanctifies the whole man; and the ſalvation, is ſalvation from ſin.

3. Reigning unbelief. Of this our Lord complained, John v. 40. Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. Whatever pretences there are to believing in Chriſt, the unholineſs of the lives of men is a convincing evidence, that unbelief is reigning at bottom with moſt of us: Iſ. liii. 1. 'Who hath believed our report? and 'to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?' The holineſs of God, the ſpirituality of his law, his hatred of ſin, and how ſeverely he puniſheth, are not believed. The report concerning Chriſt, another world, heaven and hell, ſinks not deep into the hearts of many. If theſe things were truly believed, it is not poſſible that men could be ſo eaſy in a way of ſin.

4. Want of conſideration, Luke xv. 17. People may dream away their life time; and however deep they can enter into the conſideration of other things, they have no power to conſider their ſouls ſtate and caſe; Iſ. xliv. 20. He feedeth of aſhes: a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lie in my right hand? Self examination is utterly neglected; ſo there is no due reflection made on their ſouls ſtate, and the courſe of life they are leading: Iſ. i. 3. The ox knoweth his owner, and the aſs his maſter's crib: but Iſrael doth not know, my people do not conſider.

5. The natural enmity of the heart prevailing againſt conviction: Rom. viii. 7. 'The carnal mind is enmi'ty againſt God: for it is not ſubject to the law of God, 'neither indeed can be.' Hence is rebelling againſt the light, keeping the truth priſoner in the head, that it may not get into the converſation to rule there, Rom. i. 18. There are notions of truth that force their way into the mind, eſpecially under a clear goſpel miniſtry, the natural enmity yoking with theſe, fights againſt them; and getting over them, runs with a ſtronger current than otherwiſe, Rom. vii. 13.

6. laſtly, Unmortified luſts ſtill keeping the rule and dominion over the ſoul, though Chriſt has the name of their Lord. Many call Chriſt Maſter, who are ſtill ſervants to ſin, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures. Hence theſe hurry them into ſinful courſes, that they muſt do what their impetuous luſts drive them to, and cannot do the things that Chriſt ſays.

USE 1. of Information. Hence we may ſee,

1. That ungodly ſinners under the dropping of the goſpel, are ſelf condemned, and will be condemned out of their own mouths. They own Chriſt's authority over them, which Jews and Pagans do not; and yet they regard it not in their walk, Mal. i. 6.

2. They are unreaſonable and fooliſh in their expectation of benefit from Chriſt, and ſhall be diſappointed: Matth. vii. 21. 'Not every one that ſaith unto me, 'Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven: 'but he that doth the will of my Father which is in 'heaven. O how can ye expect ſalvation from Chriſt, who have no regard to what he ſays! Ye will not do his will to honour him, but diſhonour him by trampling on his commands; will not be ſaved from ſin.

3. A profeſſion of ſubjection to Chriſt, and bearing the external badges of it, is common to many of the devil's goats with Chriſt's ſheep. No body needs value themſelves upon it; for though we ſay well for Chriſt as our Lord, yet if we do not accordingly, we but deceive ourſelves.

4. laſtly, No man has reaſon to be ſtumbled at religion itſelf, becauſe of the unſuitable lives of ſome profeſſors of it. Many ſuch ſtumbling blocks are laid down this day in the way of the blind world; they that lay them ſhall bear their judgment: but why ſhould it be improven againſt the truths or practice of religion itſelf, ſince our Lord plainly forewarns that it will be ſo?

USE 2. of Exhortation. Ye do all call Chriſt your Lord, profeſs Chriſtianity, have been baptized in his name, &c. Conſider calmly and ſeriouſly, how your life anſwers your profeſſion, whether ye do what he ſays or not, what regard ye ſhew to his commands in your practice. Conſider,

1. It is expected that they who own Chriſt for their Lord, ſhould carry themſelves as his ſubjects and ſervants, that his will ſhould be their law, his commands the rule of their life. To call him Lord, and yet caſt his laws behind your backs, is to mock him, with thoſe, Matth. xxvii. 29, 30. 'And when they had platted a 'crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed 'in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before 'him, and mocked him, ſaying, Hail King of the Jews. 'And they ſpit upon him, took the reed, and ſmote 'him on the head.'

2. If he is your Lord, as he has power and authority to command you, ſo he has power to revenge your diſobedience, and to reward your obedience. His obedient children may be ſure their labour ſhall not be in vain, 1 Cor. xv. ult.: and the diſobedient will find the weight of his hand, that will grind them to powder, 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8.

3. As he is a Lord, he is Lord and Saviour, Lord Redeemer. And what is it that he redeems from, and ſaves from? Is it not ſin? Tit. ii. 14. He 'gave himſelf 'for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and 'purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good 'works.' Matth. i. 21. 'Thou ſhalt call his name Je'ſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins.' He gave his life for that end, Eph. v. 25, 26. What horrid injury muſt it then be, to pretend he is your Lord, to ſave you, and yet ye will live in your ſin, directly contrary to what his precious blood was ſhed for?

4. laſtly, Though we are not ſaved by our doing, but by believing; yet faith and holineſs are inſeparable: James ii. 14. 'What doth it profit, though a man ſay 'he hath faith, and have not works? can faith ſave him?' Where there is not holineſs of heart and life, there is no true faith in Chriſt there. Faith, if it be true, unites the ſoul to Chriſt, works by love, purifies the heart, carries the ſoul heavenward in its converſation. Doing in perfection what Chriſt ſays, is reached by no believers here; but doing in ſincerity, is what differences them ſtill from unbelievers.

Conſider well then what regard ye ſhow to what Chriſt ſays. And let your conſciences anſwer theſe queſtions.

1. Can ye ſay before the Lord, appealing to his omniſcience, that ye have renounced your own will, luſts, and inclinations, to follow whatſoever the Lord diſcovers to be his will for you to do; and ye ſincerely endeavour to ſtick by that renunciation, to conform yourſelves to his will? Acts ix. 6. I doubt moſt of us have never been brought to that length yet; and that many who have ſaid it at ſome times, have reſiled from it, and follow their own will more than Chriſt's to this day.

2. Do ye really ſo far comply with whatſoever God has diſcovered to be your duty, that ye dare not neglect it, but muſt endeavour it? Pſal. cxix. 6. Can you think ye ſhow an upright regard to the Lord's commands, when there are ſome of them that you caſt behind your back? No; if you regard them not all, ye regard none of them as ye ought. Say not, There is none can do all. It is true none can do all perfectly; but there is no upright man, but he will put hand to all he knows to be his duty, and do his endeavour in every one of them.

3. Do ye ſincerely ſet yourſelves to oppoſe and fight againſt every thing the Lord diſcovers to be ſin, and are ye longing to have the victory over it? Rom. vii. 24. Are there not ſome ſins that are your boſom-idols, which ye cannot be brought to part with? Are there not ſuch ſins with many who indulge themſelves in ſins, of the vileneſs of which none can be ignorant, that are not given up to a reprobate ſenſe, as lying, filthineſs, diſhoneſt dealing, &c.

4. Do ye really lie open to diſcoveries of ſin and duty from the Lord's word? Job xxxiv. 31, 32. An upright ſervant deſires to know his maſter's will; but the refractory and rebellious ſervant, having no mind to do it, cares not for knowing it, Job xxi. 14. Do ye read the Bible, or care for hearing it read, and attend to it as that from whence ye are to learn your duty? When ye do read or hear the word, do ye embrace it as the rule you are to regulate your practice by?

5. What weight has Chriſt's ſaying a thing with you, when a multitude of the world ſays againſt it? The world ſays there is no ill in many things, that the Bible ſays there is much ill in. It ſays, there is no harm, where the word ſays there is. In a word, the Bible ſays, the way to heaven is the way of ſtrictneſs or ſtraitneſs: the world ſays, there is no need of that ſtrictneſs of life. Now, when the world's opinion carries it in your practice againſt Chriſt's deciſion in his word, do ye do the the things which Chriſt ſays?

6. Do ye, in every part of your life and converſation, endeavour to approve yourſelves to Chriſt as your Lord? 1 Pet. i. 15. 'As he which hath called you is holy, ſo 'are ye holy in all manner of converſation?' Do ye look on him as the party with whom ye have to do in all; not only in your religious duties, but in the common affairs of life, or worldly buſineſs, not only in your perſonal walk, but in the ſeveral relations wherein ye ſtand, as huſbands, wives, children and ſervants? 1 Cor. vii. 24. Alas! moſt men ſhuffle out any regard to Chriſt's commands, out of their worldly buſineſs, and their relations, confining their religion to their religious duties of praying, &c.

7. laſtly, How do ye take any intimations of the Lord Chriſt's will made to you, to diſcover your duty or your ſin in particular caſes? Have they a ſilencing weight with your conſciences, or do they but irritate your paſſions? Iſa. xi. 6. So the Pſalmiſt ſhewed his regard, Pſal. cxli. 5. 'Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs; and let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oil, which ſhall not break my head.’ Thoſe that cannot bear an admonition, reproof, or to be told of a fault, but preſently are up in their own defence to ward off conviction, ſhew they have more regard to their credit, than their conſcience, the authority of Chriſt the Lord, and any thing he ſays, Hoſ. iv. 4.

DOCT. II. It lies on mens conſciences before the Lord, to take it home to themſelves, to conſider and anſwer it, how they come to call Chriſt their Lord, and yet not make conſcience of doing the things which he as a Lord ſays to them, and requires of them.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall only ſhew the import of the expoſtulation in the text, and then, conclude with a word of application.

I. I will ſhew the import of this expoſtulation. It imports,

1. That Chriſt is in earneſt for our obedience. He is not indifferent what regard we ſhew to what he ſays as our Lord, Pſal. cxix. 4. He ‘ hath commanded us to keep his precepts diligently.’ He is a jealous Lord, and will not endure your baulking of any of his commands, Exod. xxiii. 21. ‘ Beware of him and obey his voice, provoke him not: for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions: for my name is in him.’ Though we are not to lay the weight of our acceptance with God on our obedience, yet there is a weight of evidence lies on it. And,

1ſt, The evidence of our belonging to Chriſt, in a ſaving relation lies upon it; John xv. 14. ‘ Ye are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you.’ If ye do not what he ſays, he will diſown you as none of his, Luke xiii. 27, pretend what ye will. Chriſt ſets his ſeal on all that belong to him, as ſoon as they become his: whereby they may be diſtinguiſhed from the world lying in wickedneſs, 2 Tim. ii. 19. ‘ The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his.’ If ye want that ſeal, he will reject you as none of his.

2dly, The evidence of your right to heaven lies on it, Rev. xxii. 14. ‘ Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.’ And therefore, at the great day, the works of the ſaints, and of the wicked, are brought out before the world in judgment; the former as evidences of their title to heaven, the latter, as grounds of the ſentence of damnation. If ye baulk any of the leaſt of his commands, ye thereby baulk your evidence for heaven, and ſo periſh: Matth. v. 19. ‘ Whoſoever ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven.’

2. It is poſſible for us in this life to get the things that Chriſt ſays, done acceptably, in all the parts thereof. If it were not ſo, then, by the text, no body at all would be allowed to call him Lord; which is certainly falſe, Matth. vii. 21. ‘ Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven.’ So there are two ſorts that call him Lord; ſome that do, ſome that do not what he ſays; the former allowed, the other rejected. The doctrine of the imperfection of the ſaints obedience, is a ſtone of ſtumbling to many a blind ſoul. To prevent your ſtumbling, 1ſt, Diſtinguiſh between doing the will of Chriſt in all its parts, and in all its degrees. The latter no man in this life can do at any rate; but in every part of his obedience he fails in ſome degree, James iii. 2. ‘ For in many things we offend all.’ But the former every true believer actually does, Pſal. cxix. 6. He has reſpect unto all God’s commandments. A whole family hears ſo many particular pieces of work preſcribed to them all by the father and maſter of the family. His grown children do them all exactly to his mind; the younger children, who are but learning to work, put hand to every one of them, and baulk none of the pieces; but they do none of them exactly. Refractory ſervants do ſome of them, but others of them they never notice. Juſt ſo it is with the ſaints in heaven, true believers on earth, and hypocrites.

Now here lies the ſnare; None, ſay you, in this world can do all that is required of them, but they come ſhort in many things; and ſo do but we. Anſw. They come ſhort of the degrees of every part, it is true; but if they are believers indeed, they do not come ſhort of the parts themſelves, as ye do. The whole parts of the will of God known to them, they do, and dare not but fall in with: and this will diſtinguiſh between them and you, that baulk any part of his will made known to you, as betwixt David and Paul, Acts xii. 22. Col. iv. 12.

2dly, Diſtinguiſh between doing the will of Chriſt perfectly and acceptably. No man in this life can do the former, Phil. iii. 12. But every true believer does the latter, Acts x. 35. Ye that are maſters know very well to make this diſtinction in your own work. If a child of yours, or a pliable ſervant, ſhow a real good will to obey your orders, you accept of their work, though it is not every way as ye would have it. So does the Lord: 2 Cor. viii. 12. ‘ For if there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted, according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.’ But if a ſervant ſay, I cannot do it every way as he would have it done, and therefore I will let it alone altogether; how take ye that? And how will Chriſt take ſuch treatment off your hand, in plain inſtances of duty which ye quite neglect, and of ſin which ye indulge yourſelves in?

Here is your ſnare: None do the will of Chriſt perfectly: and I do many things, though not all. Anſw. Ay, but true believers, though they do not do it perfectly, yet they do it ſo as God for Chriſt’s ſake accepts of their doing it: and that ye do not, and that ye are not careful about, but can be eaſy whether he accept of it or not: and ſince ye are not univerſal in your obedience, ye are not ſincere, nor are accepted in any thing.

3dly, Diſtinguiſh between ability in yourſelves to do the will of Chriſt acceptably, and ability for it in Chriſt, offered to us in the goſpel, and to be brought in by faith. No man, ſaint or ſinner, has the former: 2 Cor. iii. 5. ‘ We are not ſufficient of ourſelves, to think any thing as of ourſelves.’ But all true believers do get the latter: Phil. iv. 13. ‘ I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.’ You bid a ſervant do ſuch a piece of work, and he neglecting it tells you, I wanted inſtruments for it; how take ye that? Will ye not ſay, Why did ye not come in and get the inſtruments for it? Did not my bidding you do it, ſuppoſe I allowed wherewith to do it?

Here is your ſnare: We can do nothing of ourſelves, ſay ye: and thereupon the ſluggard puts his hands in his boſom; and many a poor ſinner lies down in his bed of eaſe and ſloth, laying his head on this ſoft pillow, and ſleeps full ſound till the flames of hell awaken him. But that will not excuſe you from doing the will of Chriſt; but it will bring you under a double guilt, one of not doing what he ſays, another of ſlighting his offered grace that might have enabled you: and ſo ye will be condemned, not becauſe ye could not, but becauſe you would not do the things he ſaid.

In the covenant of works perfect obedience only could be accepted, and there was ſtrength for it allowed to Adam in that covenant, which he loſt. In the covenant of grace ſincere obedience, though imperfect, may be accepted: and there is ſtrength allowed in this covenant for it, whereby every piece of obedience that he requires may be done, though not as it ſhould be, yet ſo as it may be accepted: 2 Cor. iii. 5. ‘ Not that we are ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves: but our ſufficiency is of God.’ xii. 9. ‘ My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.’ Philip. iv. 13. ‘ I can do all 'things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.' Only this ſtrength is lodged in Chriſt, and muſt be fetched in by believing the promiſes, Pſal. xxviii. 7. Jer. xvii. 7, 8. Now the commands of Chriſt, to ſinners that hear the goſpel, import an allowance of ſufficient grace and ſtrength for them thus to be fetched in: 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is 'in Chriſt Jeſus.' Exod. xx. 2. &c. 'I am the Lord thy 'God,' &c. 'Thou ſhalt have no other gods before me.' The little noticing of this weakens believers in their obedience, and the total neglect of it by others, ruins them.

3. Notwithſtanding the things that Chriſt ſays may be got done acceptably, yet many that call him Lord will not do them: Tit. i. 16. 'They profeſs that they 'know God; but in works they deny him,' &c. He has made his yoke eaſy, but yet they will not let it come on their fair necks: they ſay, as Luke xix. 14. 'We 'will not have this man to reign over us.' The devil and their luſts get leave to ride them, but they will not be led by Chriſt. They ſay, they cannot help it; but the truth is, they will not help it, for they will have none of his help for it; as the Lord complains the Iſraelites did, Pſal. lxxxi. 11. 'My people would not hearken to 'my voice, and Iſrael would none of me.' So their ruin is lodged upon a twofold ſcore.

1ſt, Obedience to ſin, and diſobedience to Chriſt, is their choice. The way of life and death are ſet before them, and they chuſe the latter: Prov. viii. 36. 'He 'that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own ſoul; all 'they that hate me, love death.' Ezek. xviii. 31. 'Caſt 'away from you all your tranſgreſſions, whereby ye have 'tranſgreſſed, and make you a new heart, and a new 'ſpirit; for why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael?' Chriſt calls them to a holy, ſerious, humble, modeſt, and pious life. That they cannot endure; but coſt what it will, they muſt have a light, proud, unclean, ſenſual, and looſe life, wherein they may think, talk, and carry themſelves at liberty from the ſtrictneſs of a holy walk, and tender conſcience.

2dly, They have neither heart nor uſe for the grace and ſtrength that is in Chriſt Jeſus, John v. 40. Pſal. lxxxi. 11. And therefore they can live without him, John vi. 67, 68. They may have uſe for it, that really deſire to have their luſts mortified, temptations reſiſted, their heart and lives truly ſanctified: but that is not their caſe. How then can they have a heart for it? What heart can they have for cleanſing and purifying things, that love rather to be wallowing in the mire? Therefore the opened fountain of Chriſt's blood and Spirit is neglected. For as the Lord ſaith, Jer. xiii 27. 'I have 'ſeen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdneſs 'of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills 'in the fields: woe unto thee, O Jeruſalem, wilt thou 'not be made clean? when ſhall it once be?'

4. Chriſt is highly diſpleaſed with the diſobedience of thoſe that call him Lord, who will not do what he ſays, Pſal. l. 16.——22. Men will not believe this: they think little of their neglect of what he ſays, and they think that he looks on it as they do. He is their Saviour; but they conſider not, that he is, and will be their Judge. But to perſuade you of it, conſider, 1ſt, His infinite purity and holineſs, Iſ. vi. 3. He is the holy one of Iſrael. He is of the ſelf ſame numerical eſſence or nature with the Father; all the attributes of God, and particularly his holineſs, are in him, Exod. xxiii. 21. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions: for my name is in him. Therefore whatever is ſaid in ſcripture of the holineſs of God, belongs to him. And his willingneſs to receive ſinners is, not to ſave them in their ſins, but to cleanſe them from them.

2dly, The dreadful ſtrokes he has brought on ſuch as called him Lord, for not doing the things that he ſays. He has in all ages of the church ſet up ſome monuments of this his diſpleaſure. Whence came the fire that devoured Nadab and Abihu; came it not from before the Lord? Lev. x. 1, 2. and was not that the Lord Chriſt? Acts vii. 38. Who ſtruck Ananias and Sapphira dead for lying unto God; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Uzzah, &c. was it not Chriſt? John v. 22. 'For the Father judgeth no man: but hath committed 'all judgment unto the Son.'

3dly, Does he not refuſe communion with ſuch perſons in holy ordinances, and thereby teſtify his diſpleaſure againſt them? Hoſ. v. 15. 'I will go and return 'to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and 'ſeek my face.' What will it avail to attend ordinances, to come to a communion table, while we continue in ſuch a caſe? There can be no communion with Chriſt, Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. Iſ. i. 15, 16. Even particular pieces of unrepented of tenderneſs, may be a controverſy on which he will refuſe communion with thoſe that are habitually holy: Pſal. lxvi. 18. 'If I regard 'iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me.' What then can others expect? Amos iii. 3. 'Can two 'walk together, except they be agreed?'

Laſtly, Conſider how he will treat them at the laſt day: Luke xix. 27. 'Thoſe mine enemies which would 'not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and 'ſlay them before me.' He is the Lamb of God, to take away the ſins of the world; but he will be as a lion to them that will not do what he ſays, when he cometh 'in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know 'not God, and that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the 'glory of his power,' 2 Theſſ. i. 8, 9 In vain will they then call him Lord, and plead their eating and drinking in his preſence, Luke xiii. 25, 26, 27.

5. There is a great ill in calling Chriſt Lord, and not doing what he ſays; an ill that highly provokes him. as caſting diſhonour on him in a very ſpecial manner. There is ſomething in it, that, ſo to ſpeak. touches to the quick, beyond the diſhonour done to him by others: Rev. iii. 15, 16. 'I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So 'then becauſe thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor 'hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth.'

1ſt, Their ſins and looſeneſs of life reflect a peculiar diſhonour on him, as pretending a relation to him: Rom. ii. 24. 'For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles, through you.' How do ye think yourſelves touched and affronted with the miſcarriages of your children and ſervants? Learn from that, how Chriſt takes with your ſins and looſeneſs of life. They are a blaſpheming of his name and doctrine, calling him in effect, the miniſter of ſin, 1 Tim. vi. 1. Tit. ii. 4, 5. It is not in the power of open enemies to reach him ſuch a blow.

2dly, They do Satan a peculiar pleaſure. If there is any of the duſt that is the ſerpent's meat, that reliſhes better with him than the reſt, it is the ſins and miſcarriages of thoſe that call Chriſt Lord: that is a feaſt for him: he will do more for it than for other ten, Job i. 7, 8. As there is joy in heaven at a ſinner's repentance, there is a joy in hell among the devil and his angels at the fall of thoſe that call Chriſt Lord. The enemy takes a peculiar pleaſure and pride, in having not only his profeſſed ſervants, but others in Chriſt's livery following and ſerving him. In that he can vie with Chriſt for a good Maſter before the blind world, when he can ſhew them ſo many at his back, that ſometimes gave their names to Chriſt.

3dly, They wound the hearts of the real children of of God, and make the whole family ſigh more heavily, than the ſins of others would do, Pſal lv. 12. Where the ſins of open enemies do but ſcratch like a pin, theirs will pierce like a ſword. It covers them with ſhame, fills them with ſorrow and indignation, and makes them weary of their poſt; as did the prophet, Jer. ix. 2. 'Oh, 'that I had in the wilderneſs a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them: for they be all adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men.' What wonder then, that Chriſt the Maſter of the family reſent it dreadfully?

6. Chriſt will diſown them for his ſervants, that in their practice diſown him for their Lord, not doing what he ſays. They count the duty of ſervants grievous to them, and therefore he will diveſt them of the honour and privilege of his ſervants. They ſecretly loath him and his ſervice, however fair they carry it, calling him Lord; and he will let all the world ſee that his ſoul loaths them, Rev. iii. 16. 'Becauſe thou art luke warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth.' And this he doth two ways.

1ſt, Spuing them out of his mouth unto the earth; whereas before they were exalted unto heaven in reſpect of hopefulneſs of their ſouls caſe, and of external church-privileges. In ſcripture-ſtyle, the church is called heaven, profeſſors the ſons of God; the devil's kingdom, or the world lying in wickedneſs, is called the earth, the children of men, Gen. vi. 2. and xi. 1. Rev. xii. 4. The goſpel is Chriſt's call to ſinners to come out of the world lying in wickedneſs, and be ſeparate from them, joining themſelves to the church, the family of God. Many profeſs to come away, and join ſo, and ſolemnly declare it by partaking of the Lord's table: but though they ſo call him Lord, they do not the things that he ſays. And our jealous Lord being provoked with it, ſpues them out, and in the ſight of the world throws them back unto the earth they ſaid they came from; and there they lie again amidſt the world lying in wickedneſs.

Three things concur in this awful diſpenſation.

(1.) They are let fall into the mire of ſome groſs pollution of the outward man, 2 Pet. ii. 22. 'It is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned unto his own vomit again; and, The ſow that is waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire.' Cain turns a murderer, Judas a betrayer of his maſter, Ananias and Sapphira liars, Demas a lover of the world, Jezebel and her children in Thyatira fall into adultery and fornication, &c. Rev. ii. 20, 21, 22, 23. (2.) Their leaf of appearance in religion falls. Though they get ſpace, they get no grace to repent and recover, Rev. ii. 21. but they are from that time blaſted, wither, and fade away; John xv. 6. 'If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them and caſt them into the fire, and they are burned.' And they turn juſt the hue of the reſt of the world lying in wickedneſs; ſpiritual death is painted in their faces; whereof this generation affords many frightful inſtances, Luke viii. 18. 'Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given; and whoſoever hath not, from him ſhall be taken even that which he ſeemeth to have.' (3.) Hence they loſe their new name, and get their old one back again. What credit or reputation they had for religion and ſeriouſneſs, is blown up. Their name ſtinks in that caſe among the ſerious godly, and they look upon them as none of theirs, Iſa. lxv. 15. 'And ye ſhall leave your name for a curſe unto my choſen; for the Lord God ſhall ſlay thee, and call his ſervants by another name.' This is an awful caſe, Zech. xi. 8. 'Three ſhepherds alſo I cut off in one month, and my ſoul loathed them, and their ſoul alſo abhorred me.'

2dly, Spuing them out of his mouth into the pit, at the laſt day, Luke xiii. 27, 28. 'He ſhall ſay, I tell you, I know you not whence you are: depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourſelves thruſt out.' In vain will they then cry, 'Lord, Lord, open to us:' Matth. xxv. 11, 12. 'Afterward came alſo the other virgins, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he anſwered and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not.' In vain will they plead their eating and drinking in his preſence. They called him Lord; but they walked with the workers of iniquity, and they will be led forth with them; Pſal. cxxv. 5. 'As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity.' They will ſee that he will count it inconſiſtent with his honour to own them, Mark viii. 38. 'Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.' They got their names enrolled in the viſible church, among his ſervants; but he will blot them out publicly, Exod. xxxii. 33. 'And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Whoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of my book.' Compared with Rev. iii. 5. 'He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot his name out of the book of life, but I will confeſs his name before my Father, and before his angels.'

7. Men are ruined in this way, becauſe they do not conſider it. It is want of conſideration that leaves them at eaſe, calling Chriſt Lord, and yet not doing what he ſays, Iſa. xliv. 20. 'He feedeth of aſhes: a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lye in my right hand?' They are out of their place, like a wandering bird, Prov. xxvii. 8. and they are eaſy in it, becauſe they are out of themſelves, out of their wits, like the prodigal, Luke xv. 17. They conſider not the matter.

1ſt, They call Chriſt Lord, and ſo bribe and ſoothe their blind and ſleepy conſciences. If they ſhould give up with all pretenſions to Chriſt and religion, they could have no peace with their conſciences: therefore they will attend ordinances; hear the word, though they will not do it: pray in ſecret or in their families, though perhaps out of the ſame mouth come forth bleſſing and curſing; they will partake of the Lord's table, though they will not give up with the table of devils. Theſe things flatter their conſciences to be eaſy; as was the caſe with Micah, Judg. xvii. 13. 'Then ſaid Micah, Now know I that the Lord will do me good, ſeeing I have a Levite to my prieſt.'

2dly, They do not the things that he ſays however, and ſo ſatisfy their unmortified luſts. Thus they pleaſe both parties within them. Their ſaying fair pleaſes their conſcience; and their not doing what Chriſt ſays, pleaſes their luſts. They have no more ado with Chriſt, but to be called by his name. For the reſt, they will eat their own bread, and wear their own apparel, and will not make their religion burdenſome to their luſts by mortification and tender walking; and ſo they are eaſy on that ſide.

But there are three things they do not conſider.

(1.) What inconſiſtency is in this courſe: 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. 'What fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? and what communion hath light with darkneſs? and what concord hath Chriſt with Belial?' It is made up of contradictions. Their profeſſion condemns their practice as abominable; and their practice condemns their profeſſion as horrid juggling and diſſembling with God. Ye pray for pardon of ſin as a crime, and yet return to it with delight: that God would make you holy; and yet ye will not part with your luſts, but have a horror of being bound up to a holy walk: that God would at length receive you into heaven; and yet if you were there even now in the temper ye are in, you would flee out of it as from a hell, becauſe ye have not reliſh of either perſon or thing that is there, and for nothing but what is not there.

(2.) How heinouſly the Lord Chriſt takes it, that men ſhould yoke Satan's ſervice with his, 2 Cor. vi. 15. forecited. He looks on it as highly diſhonourable to him, and after a ſort more than if they ſhould profeſs themſelves none of his, Rev. iii. 16. forecited. That is an awful word of great indignation, Ezek. xx. 39. 'As for you, O houſe of Iſrael, thus ſaith the Lord God, ‘Go to, ſerve ye every one his idols, and hereafter alſo, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.’ It bears, that their duties are but a polluting of his name. Your praying, hearing, and communicating, will not cleanſe the abomination of a looſe life: but looſeneſs of converſation will defile all theſe, Hag. ii. 12, 13, 14.

(3.) What the end of ſuch a courſe will be, what it will iſſue in at length: Deut. xxxii. 29. ‘O that they were wiſe, that they underſtood this, that they would conſider their latter end!’ It cannot miſs of a fearful iſſue: Iſa. l. 11. ‘Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compaſs yourſelves about with ſparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the ſparks that ye have kindled. This ſhall ye have of mine hand, ye ſhall lie down in ſorrow.’ Pſal. cxxv. 5. ‘As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity.’ See it in the parable of the fooliſh builder, the fooliſh virgins, the tares among the wheat, the man at the marriage-ſupper without the wedding-garment, &c. It is a pity men ſhould not conſider timely.

8. laſtly, People ought to conſider it, ſee what account they can make of it, and how they will anſwer it. And,

1ſt, How they will anſwer it to their own conſciences. Conſcience may be aſleep now, but it will certainly awaken: and the longer it be in awakening, it will be the more ſevere when it is rouſed, as in the caſe of Belſhazzar and Felix. Ye cannot evite a reckoning with your conſcience. As ſilent as it is, ye will find it has noted your ways in its book: Prov. xx. 27. ‘The ſpirit of man is the candle of the Lord, ſearching all the inward parts of the belly.’ And if conſcience condemn you as hypocritical pretenders to Chriſt, what will come of you? 1 John iii. 20. ‘For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.’ And if ye die with an ill conſcience, it will be a gnawing worm for ever.

2dly, How they will anſwer it to the Lord Chriſt in the judgment. There will be a day of judgment, wherein the tribunal will be ſet, the books opened, and mens whole lives will be called over: Eccleſ. xii. 14. ‘For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.’ And every one will be judged according to his works: 2 Cor. v. 10. ‘For we muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt: that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.’ Then mens calling Chriſt Lord, will be tried by their doing or not doing the things that he ſays. And what will men then ſay to the queſtion in the text, Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I ſay? and to that queſtion, How cameſt thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment?

II. I come now to a word of Application.

Firſt, Let me examine into this matter, and aſk and put it to every one's conſcience before the Lord, Why call ye Chriſt Lord, and do not the things that he ſays? You are rational creatures; ye will not allow that ye are fools, that have no reaſon for what ye do or not do. Therefore ‘produce your cauſe, ſaith the Lord; bring forth your ſtrong reaſons, ſaith the King of Jacob,’ Iſ. xli. 21. What is your plea? Is it,

1. We are ſaved by faith, and not by good works? Anſw. I have anſwered that already, that though the weight of our acceptance with God, lies not on good works, yet the weight of our evidence does. I add, that though we are not ſaved by, yet we are ſaved to, good works and obedience: Eph. ii. 10. ‘For we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them.’ 1 Pet. i. 2. ‘Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt,’ &c. So if you are not brought to do what Chriſt ſays, you are not ſaved. But perhaps you will inſiſt, and ſay, O but we will be ſaved after death. Anſw. If ye be not ſaved while ye are in life, ye will never be ſaved after death. The notion of ſalvation begun after death, is unknown to the Bible: Eph. ii. 8. ‘For by grace are ye ſaved, through faith; and that not of yourſelves, it is the gift of God.’ 2 Tim. i. 9. ‘Who hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began.’ Tit. iii. 5. ‘Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.’

2. We have no ſtrength in ourſelves. Anſw. That alſo I have anſwered at large. If the law came to you with its commands without the goſpel, there would be ſomething in this, though not ſo much but the law would overthrow it; as in the caſe of Pagans, Rom. ii. 12. ‘For as many as have ſinned without the law, ſhall alſo periſh without the law: and as many as have ſinned in the law, ſhall be judged by the law.’ But ſince the goſpel comes with the law, telling you there is ability for it in Chriſt, which you may have by faith; your plea is rejected, and you are condemned, not only for not doing what Chriſt ſays, but for refuſing ſtrength to do it with.

3. We do ſeveral things, and there is nobody but has their failings. Anſw. Ye may do many things, as Herod, Mark vi. 20.; but if ye ſet not yourſelves to do all the parts of Chriſt's will known to you, without reſerve, ye do nothing: James ii. 10. ‘For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.’ Sound believers fail of degrees, but not of the parts: Pſal. cxix. 6. David ſaid, ‘I have reſpect unto all thy commandments.’ Acts xiii. 22. ‘I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfil all my will.’

4. God is merciful, and Chriſt is our gracious Saviour; he will not be ſevere on us for our ſins. Anſw. That is a truſt in God and Chriſt, not upon his word, but over the belly of his word; ſo that either it muſt fail and diſappoint you, or God's truth muſt fail: Heb. xii. 14. ‘Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord.’ Pſal. cxxv. 5. As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity.’ But ‘his confidence ſhall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it ſhall bring him to the king of terrors,’ Job xviii. 14. Is that the uſe ye have for the mercy of God? Pſal. cxxx. 4. and for the grace of Chriſt? See the character of ſuch, Jude 4. ‘There are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.’

5. What needs all that ſtrictneſs of life in our caſe; we are neither miniſters nor elders, to have any character of that ſort to ſupport? Anſw. It is evident, that many take a liberty in ſinful practices from this; practices which they would condemn in them, though they allow them in themſelves. Miniſters and elders untender and looſe in their life and practice, ſhall bear their judgment as betrayers of the cauſe of religion to an ungodly world. But it will be no comfort to you to go to hell with unholy miniſters and elders. And therefore ye muſt either take the ſtrait way with godly and tender miniſters and elders to heaven; or elſe, in the firſt place, find out in your Bible, where the ſtrait way to heaven is only for miniſters and elders, but there is a wide way to it for others. Ye muſt ſeek another Bible for it; for this mentions but one ſtrait way to heaven, for you and them both, Matth vii. 13, 14. ‘Enter ye in at the ſtrait

'gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat; becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' But if ye belong to Chriſt, ye bear a character as venerable as that of a miniſter; ye are prieſts, 1 Pet. ii. 9. Rev. i. 6. Heb. xiii. 15. If ye ſay, ye are not ſo much as profeſſors! Anſw. Are ye Chriſtians or not? If ye be, ſet yourſelves to anſwer that profeſſion, and no more is required of you; or elſe why do ye profeſs ſo much?

6. laſtly, But we hope to repent, reform, and find mercy ere we die. Anſw. When? The young when they grow old, and the old when they come to a death bed. And who has ſecured you that ye ſhall ſee another day? not God, I am ſure, Heb. iii. 7. 'The Holy Ghoſt ſaith, To-day, if ye will hear his voice.' And if ye ſhould be old, and get a deathbed to lie in a while, how know ye that ye will get grace to repent? Truly it is not God's ordinary way: Job xx. 11. 'His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.'

Secondly, Let me expoſtulate this matter with you, how ye come to call Chriſt Lord, and do not the things that he ſays.

1. Do ye think that religion is juſt a matter of form and fair ſhew, to ſay prayers, and come to the kirk on the Sabbath, &c. not carrying it through the whole of your walk? If ye do, ye will ſhew yourſelves void of it, 2 Tim. iii. 5. Gal. vi. 12. Iſa. lviii. 5, 6, 7.

2. Do not ye mock the Lord Chriſt by this, and, like Judas, betray him with a kiſs? Matth. xxvi. 49. But 'be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap,' Gal. vi. 7.

3. Have ye no regard to the honour of Chriſt? If he is your Lord, and ye expect ſalvation by him, what hearts have ye that cannot be moved thereby to live to his praiſe, and be uſeful for him in the world? They that have no uſe for holy walking, after ſalvation is ſecured by Chriſt, are ſurely far from ſalvation.

4. Is not the cauſe of Chriſt and religion much the worſe of you? Rom. ii. 24. 'For the name of God is blaſphemed through you.' Do ye call him Lord, that ye may have the more acceſs to affront and diſhonour him? Do ye join yourſelves to the church and kingdom of Chriſt, that ye may by ſuch compliance advance the intereſts of Satan's kingdom.

5. Has Chriſt's character as a Lord no weight on your conſciences. Do ye think it is a mere empty title. You will find it otherwiſe: Mal. i. 6. 'If I be a Father, where is mine honour: and if I be a maſter, where is my fear; ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Luke xix. 27. Thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.

6. laſtly, How will ye anſwer it at the great day. If ye think it is long to that, it will be longer after that it will ſit in your conſciences and gnaw, that you called him Lord, and did not the things that he ſaid: and it may be very ſhort while, that it may be in your power to get things put in better caſe for that day.

I ſhall conclude with a few advices.

1. Examine yourſelves, and ſearch out your ſins ſincerely, as in the ſight of God: Hag. i. 7. 'Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Conſider your ways.' Look into the ſeveral parts and periods of your life, and ſee how they have been led. Look into your publick and private walk; into your relations, how ye have carried as a huſband, wife, &c. into both tables of the law, how ye have behaved towards God and man; into your ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion, your ſecret ſins that are hid from the eyes of the world, that ſin that is your particular bias. Look into your heart ſins; and trace up all to the ſin of your nature.

2. Seeing yourſelf a ſinful, ruined creature, ſolemnly take hold of the covenant of grace, perſonally entering into it by embracing of Chriſt offered to you in the goſpel, truſting in him as your Saviour, for his whole ſalvation from ſin and wrath, on the ground of God's faithfulneſs in the promiſe; thus going to Chriſt for your ſanctification as well as juſtification; to purge you from the filth as well as the guilt of ſin, 1 Cor. i. 30. receiving and eyeing him in all his offices.

3. laſtly, Lay down an honeſt purpoſe and reſolution, in the faith of the grace and ſtrength in Chriſt Jeſus, offered and exhibited to you in the goſpel, and provided in the covenant, to comply henceforth with the whole will of Chriſt declared to you in his word, without exception or reſerve; to ſubject your ſouls wholly to the authority of his word, to comply with every duty therein made known to you, and to fight againſt every ſin there diſcovered to you. So ſhall you call him Lord, and he call you his ſervants, Acts xi. 23. Pſal. cxix. 12.

The inſeparable Connection between a Sinner's having Part with Chriſt, and being waſhed by him: Or, The Myſtery of Sanctification by Chriſt opened up.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in the Year 1728.

JOHN xiii. 8.

If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me.

THESE words are Chriſt's anſwer to Peter refuſing to let Chriſt waſh his feet. No doubt it was a kind of modeſty, reverence, and humility, that put Peter on this peremptory refuſal of Chriſt's aſtoniſhing kind offer. But all is not gold that glitters. There is much of this baſtard humility in the world, whereby people refuſe Chriſt's offers, and put them away from them with a very good grace, and great reſpect to the Lord Chriſt, as they think. Chriſt comes to ſinners in the goſpel, and offers to waſh them from their pollution: but will they offer a foul defiled ſoul to God, the infinitely holy Saviour, to be waſhed by him? No; they think they know more of their own ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs, and of Chriſt's greatneſs and holineſs, than that comes to. And ſo they affront him, under a pretence of honouring him.

There are three characters of this falſe humility.

1. It condemns the generation of the righteous, who came all to Chriſt, at his command, to be waſhed by him, received it with admiration of his condeſcenſion. The other diſciples, no doubt, were ſtruck with amazement at Chriſt's coming to waſh their feet: but true humility took Chriſt's will for law and right, and makes them ſilently yield themſelves to the Lord. But Peter's behaviour condemns them as rude and diſreſpectful, ver. 5, 6. 'After that, he poureth water into a baſon, and began to waſh the diſciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel, wherewith he was girded. Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, doſt thou waſh my feet.'

2. It keeps Chriſt at a diſtance, and ſo proceeds not from faith, but unbelief, ver. 6. No doubt, when Chriſt ſtretched out his hand to waſh Peter's feet, he drew them in quickly to him; and ſhewed by his deeds, as well as his words, that he had no mind that Chriſt's fair hand ſhould come on them. So folk, under a ſenſe of ſinfulneſs, may flee from Chriſt, while he follows them.

3. It argues a heart not duly humbled; and ſo it is but accurſed pride under the vail of a ſhew of humility. (1.) Carnal wiſdom and reaſon has the aſcendant, and will not bow to divine revelation: ver. 7, 8. 'Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, What I do, thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter. Peter ſaith unto him, thou ſhalt never waſh my feet. Jeſus anſwered him, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me.' Let the goſpel of God's grace be delivered never ſo plain, they will not give over meaſuring divine myſteries by their carnal reaſon. (2.) Inſenſibleneſs and ſelf conceit prevails. Peter doubtleſs thought either that his feet needed no waſhing, but that they might be borne with even in Chriſt's preſence, as they were; or, if they did, he would waſh them himſelf. So he is peremptory in his refuſal. And this lies at bottom in that falſe humility: either they think they are not ſo very polluted, but that they may be borne with; or elſe, that they will waſh themſelves clean before they come to Chriſt.

In the text, our Lord gives Peter a word that brings him down in a moment from all his heights, and makes him not only content, but earneſt to be waſhed all over by Chriſt, without pretending to wipe off one ſpot off himſelf by himſelf: 'If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me.' verſe 9. 'Simon Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but alſo my hands and my head.' This word ſtrikes Peter to the heart, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me. Q. d. "Peter, no waſhing by me, no part with me to ſalvation. Waſhing by me, and part with me, you nor no man ſhall ever be able to ſeparate in your caſes. Have the one, have the other; want the one, and upon heaven's truth you want the other."

I think it is an inſipid queſtion here, Why ſo ſevere a threatening for refuſing ſo ſmall a thing? For Chriſt ſays not, 'If I waſh not thy feet, thou ſhalt have no part with me,' but ſimply, 'If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me,' in the preſent time. Neither could it be drawn to the waſhing of the feet, if the queſtioniſts did not firſt ſuppoſe a change of the tenſe the Holy Ghoſt uſeth, which is not at leaſt without neceſſity to be admitted. Gr. If I waſh thee not, or, If I have not waſhed thee, thou haſt no part with me. Q. d. "Peter, if you belong to me, I have done more for you than to waſh your feet with water; I have waſhed you with my blood; if you have taken that vaſtly coſtlier waſhing off my hand, why refuſe you this? If I have not ſo waſhed you, you have no part with me; for none have part with me, but thoſe whom I ſo waſh."

The words then bear an inſeparable connection betwixt two things in the caſe of ſinners, ſtanding and falling together. (1.) The waſhing of them by Chriſt, to wit, from their ſins, Rev. i. 5. (2.) Their having part with him, partaking of his ſaving benefits, being joint-heirs of heaven with him. Compare Deut. xiv. 27. 'And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou ſhalt not forſake him: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.' The ſcripture knows no part ſinners can have of ſalvation or of heaven, but with Chriſt, Acts iv. 12. 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.' They that miſs their part with Chriſt, there is but another ſide where their part will fall: Rev. xxi. 8. 'But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone: which is the ſecond death.' Now, if a ſinner either be not waſhed at all, or be waſhed only with the nitre and ſoap of his own faithleſs endeavours and reformation; if he be not waſhed by Chriſt; he has no part with him, he is none of his; he is in a ſtate of death and deſtruction, lying ready to be caſt out as an abominable thing, into the unclean place, the ſtinking lake.

The relation betwixt theſe two, is, the former is a neceſſary conſequent of the latter; and therefore is held forth as a neceſſary evidence of it. All that have ſaving part with Chriſt, are waſhed by him: therefore if Chriſt hath not waſhed thee, thou haſt no ſaving part with him.

The doctrine deducible from the words is as follows.

DOCT. A ſinner's having any ſaving part with Chriſt, and his being waſhed by Chriſt from his ſin, are ſimply and abſolutely inſeparable.

In diſcourſing from this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Conſider a ſinner's having part with Chriſt,

II. His being waſhed by Chriſt.

III. The inſeparableneſs of the two.

IV. Improve the doctrine.

I. The firſt thing to be ſpoken to, is, A ſinner's having part with Chriſt. And this we take up in two things.

1. His being of Chriſt's myſtical body, through union with him, 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: ſo alſo is Chriſt. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free: and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. There are but two general corporations of mankind on earth, heaven, and hell: the corporation of the firſt and fallen Adam, who has diffuſed all manner of pollution and defilement over thoſe that are his, not to be waſhed off by human art; and of this ſociety we are all by nature members; the corporation of the ſecond Adam, Chriſt, who cleanſes and purifies all that are his, from that pollution and defilement: for the latter is raiſed out of the former. See the two, 1 John v. 19. 'And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedneſs.' 2 Cor. vi. 17. 'Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.' Now, if ye are not waſhed by Chriſt, ye belong not to the ſecond Adam's corporation; ye belong not to Chriſt.

2. The ſinner's having communion with Chriſt in his ſaving benefits, partaking of them in fellowſhip with him, 1 John i. 3. 'That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us; and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt.' All ſalvation is in Chriſt; ſo that they who have part with him, are complete in him, Col. ii. 9, 10. And ſalvation is in him excluſively to all others, Acts iv. 12. Now, if ye are not waſhed by Chriſt, ye have no communion with him in his ſaving benefits, no part in his ſalvation, and ſo none in ſalvation at all. Chriſt has a righteouſneſs fully anſwering the law's demands; it is ſo broad a white raiment, that it covers all his people, partaking with him in it, Rom. iii. 22. But if he waſh you not, you have no part in it. He has taken out a new right to God, as his God, and all his people partake with him in it, Rom. viii. 17. 'And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt.' John xx. 17. 'I aſcend ‘ unto my Father,’ and your Father, and to my God, and your God.’ But if Chriſt waſh you not, you have no part in him, he is not your God.

II. The next thing to be ſpoke to, is, The ſinner's being waſhed by Chriſt. This is inſeparable from his having part with Chriſt, and is the privilege of all, and only thoſe who have part with him. Concerning this waſhing, I offer theſe particulars.

1. There is a filthineſs in ſin, whereby the ſoul is polluted and defiled before the Lord. This is ſuppoſed in the waſhing from it: Ezek. xxxvi. 25. ‘Then will I ſprinkle clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean: from all your filthineſs, and from all your idols will I cleanſe you.’ Sin does not only make the ſinner guilty, but filthy and abominable. It is the abominable thing that God hates, Jer. xliv. 4. filth itſelf, Iſa. iv. 4. This filthineſs of ſin lies in its contrariety to the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law. Holineſs is the glory of God, and the beauty of the ſoul, Exod. xv. 11.: ſin the deformity and filthineſs of it. Hence,

1ſt, It makes the ſinner loathſome before God, that he cannot look on him, but with abhorrence; and with ſuch abhorrence as one looks upon a thing he has a natural antipathy at, Zech. xi. 8. ‘My ſoul loathed them.’ Hab. i. 13. ‘Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity.’ Pſal v. 4. ‘For thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs: neither ſhall evil dwell with thee.’

2dly, It fills the ſoul with ſhame before God. I mean not that holy ſhame that proceeds from a joint view of ſin's loathſomeneſs, and God's pardoning grace in Chriſt; that is a fruit of the Spirit, Ezek. xvi. 60, 61. ‘I will eſtabliſh unto thee an everlaſting covenant. Then thou ſhalt remember thy ways, and be aſhamed.’ But I mean a natural ſhame, whereby the ſinner, obliged to fix his eyes on God's holineſs, and ſeeing his own unlikeneſs to him, his countenance falls, he is damped, and filled with dread and horror, and therefore labours to make way out of his preſence; as Adam did, Gen. iii. 10. I heard thy voice (ſaid he to the Lord) in the garden: and I was afraid, becauſe I was naked: and I hid myſelf. Now, unwaſhed ſinners are filthy all over.

(1.) Their nature is filthy, Pſal. xiv. 3. ‘They are all gone aſide, they are altogether become filthy: there is none that doth good, no not one.’ Sin has ſpread its defilement over all the faculties of their ſouls, and over all the members of their bodies: Tit. i. 15. Unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled. Their very bodies, however perfumed and adorned, are filthy before God, with ſpiritual filth cleaving to them, Heb. x. 22.

(2.) Their life and converſation is filthy, 2 Pet. ii. 7. Their daily walk is a heaping new filth upon their already filthy ſouls. Their habitual filthineſs produces ſtill actual filthineſs, as the poiſoned ſpring ſends forth poiſonous ſtreams, Pſal. xiv. 1.

2. Chriſt has them all to waſh who get part in him. Hence the redeemed church ſings praiſes to him that loved them, and waſhed them from their ſins in his own blood, Rev. i. 5. They come to him in their pollution, and are waſhed by him; they come to him defiled all over, in the defilement of their nature, and of their life, that they may be waſhed; and coming to him by faith, it is done, Ezek. xvi. 8, 9. Rom. iv. 5. 2 Cor. v. 17. How can it be otherwiſe? for they cannot waſh themſelves before they come. Is it poſſible for people to waſh, before they come to the waters? or to bathe before they come into the laver?

3. All thoſe who take part in him by faith, he waſhes with his blood from their ſin, Heb. xii. 24. Rev. i. 5. He offered himſelf a ſacrifice to God for ſin, and the blood of the ſlain ſacrifice is ſprinkled on the ſinners in him, for their cleanſing: 1 John i. 7. The blood of Jeſus his Son, cleanſeth us from all ſin. The ſtain of ſin was ſo deep, that nothing elſe could waſh it out; and had he not provided the laver of his own blood, Abraham, Paul, and all the ſaints now in glory, ſince they were once filthy, would have been filthy ſtill, with Cain, Judas, and other filthy veſſels of wrath.

There are two things in his blood, that make it to waſh out this ſtain, as deep as it is.

1ſt, An infinite value; for it is the blood of an infinite perſon, the blood of God, Acts xx. 28. the Son of God, 1 John i. 7. the Father's equal, the Moſt High.

2dly, An infinite efficacy, power and energy; for the Spirit is in it, the infinite Spirit of holineſs, John vi. 53. 63. The blood was given for atonement, becauſe the life of the fleſh, or the animal ſpirits, are in the blood, Lev. xvii. 11. And therefore it was to be ſprinkled while it was yet warm with the Spirits in it. Now, Chriſt's blood is always warm and freſh, with the ſpirits of life and holineſs in it, Heb. x. 20. Rev. iii. 1.

4. There is a twofold waſhing by the blood of Chriſt; one that makes clean in the eye of the law, leaving not the leaſt mark of a ſpot in the ſoul; peculiar to the ſaints in heaven, Heb. xii. 23. another making clean in the eye of the goſpel, though not abſolutely: John xv. 3. ‘Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you.’ Cant. iv. 7. ‘Thou art all fair, my love, there is no ſpot in thee.’ It is this laſt our text means only. Only obſerve, that they are not different kinds but degrees of the ſame waſhing by Chriſt's blood. It is the ſame laver of Chriſt's blood, that we are waſhed in before death to fit us for communion with God here, and that ſame laver that we are waſhed in at death, to fit us for communion with God in heaven. Only that efficacy of Chriſt's blood now exerted on us in part, is put forth on us in full meaſure to the utter abolition of ſin, Eph. v. 25, 26, 27. Rev. vii. 14, 15.

5. As waſhing is properly the purging away of filthineſs, ſpots or ſtains from the object waſhed; the waſhing from ſin is formally and directly the ſanctification of the ſinner, Eph. v. 26. So if Chriſt ſanctify us not, we have no part in him. Howbeit, it ſuppoſes or implies more than that wherein it formally conſiſts.

In all waſhing there are two things to be diſtinguiſhed: the looſing of the filth ſticking to the object; for if it do not ſtick, it cannot defile; and the removing of it being looſed, which is waſhing properly. Accordingly in waſhing a ſoul from ſin, there are two things.

1ſt, The looſing of the filth of ſin ſticking to the ſoul. Sin ſticks to our ſouls, as pitch or tar to a man's fingers: and there is no removing of it, till once it be looſed by an application of Chriſt's blood. Now, it is by guilt that it ſticks to our ſoul, 1 Cor. xv. 56. And that is done away in our juſtification; which muſt needs go before our ſanctification, as the looſing of ſticking filth, before the waſhing it away; as the Holy Ghoſt teacheth, Rom. vii. 6. ‘But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter.’ Hence the apoſtle ſaith of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. vi. 11. ‘And ſuch were ſome of you; but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified, in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.’

2dly, The removing and purging away the filth of ſin, being once looſed: and the ſame blood that looſes it, purgeth it away in ſanctification, as the ſame water that looſeth the filth, carries it away off the cloth: and ſo the pardoned ſinner is made holy: Heb. ix. 14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge the conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God. Rev. vii. 14. Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. And this purging away of the filth of ſin off the ſinner, lies in three things.

(1.) The putting away of his former loathſomeneſs before God. The blood of Chriſt having come over the ſoul, it is clean, and God can look it with complacency, Rev. i. 5, 6. He calls her beloved, that was not beloved.

(2.) Making of the ſoul fair and clean before the Lord, Cant. iv. 7. ‘Thou art all fair, my love, there is no ſpot in thee.’ The Spirit in the blood leaves his own image on the ſoul, and carries it all over the man, 2 Cor. iii. 18. Tit. i. 14. Life, eternal life, is in that blood, and wherever it comes; and it going over the whole man, ſeeds of life are left in the ſoul that ſhall never die out. The Spirit in the blood takes of the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, and communicates to them grace for grace, John i. 16. ſo transforming them into his image.

(3.) Removing the legal ſhame out of the ſoul before God, and cauſing it with child like kindly bluſhes to come before him, and preſs near him, crying Abba, Father, with the boldneſs of faith in greater or leſſer meaſure, Rom. viii. 15. ‘For ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.’ Ezra ix. 6. ‘O my God, I am aſhamed and bluſh to lift up my face to thee, my God; for our iniquities are increaſed over our head, and our treſpaſs is grown up unto the heavens.’

6. Faith is the inſtrumental cauſe of this waſhing. Hence the apoſtle, Acts xv. 9. ſpeaks of purifying the heart by faith. It lays hold upon, and applies the blood of Chriſt, Rom. iii. 25. ‘Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins.’

7. laſtly, Afflictions are the occaſional cauſes of this waſhing, Iſa. xxvii. 9. ‘By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin.’

III. The next thing to be conſidered, is, The inſeparableneſs of the two. They are ſo,

1. In reſpect of their ſubject, which is neceſſarily one. He that has the one, has the other; and no man can have either of them ſingly. If thou haſt part in Chriſt, thou art waſhed by him; if thou art waſhed by him, thou haſt part with him.

2. In reſpect of time. That moment one gets part with Chriſt, he waſhes him from his ſins. In order of nature indeed, part with Chriſt goes before waſhing, and juſtification before ſanctification. But in reſpect of time they come together and at once. That they are ſo inſeparable appears, 1ſt, From the end and deſign of Chriſt's death, which cannot be fruſtrated. He died for that end, that ſinners taking part with him by faith, might be waſhed by him from their ſins, Eph. v. 25. &c. Tit. ii. 14.

2dly, From the nature of the thing. There is a lively efficacy in Chriſt's blood to waſh away ſin, ſo that the ſoul come to Chriſt, and having part in him, muſt needs be waſhed; or that precious blood muſt be counted as dead water, that has loſt its virtue, Heb. x. 20. Can a foul garment be laid in a pure running ſtream, and the waſhing of it not be begun the moment that it is laid in? And can an unholy ſoul be united by faith to Chriſt, and the waſhing of it not begun that moment by virtue from his blood?

USE 1. of Trial. Ye may hereby know whether ye have any part with Chriſt or not, and conſequently whether ye have a right to the Lord's table or not? Are ye waſhed by Chriſt from your ſins, or no? If ye are unſanctified, unholy ſouls, yet living in the filth of your ſins, I declare ye have no part with Chriſt; ſince where there is no true holineſs, there is no true faith.

Queſt. How may I know that I am waſhed by Chriſt?

Mark 1. If ye are waſhed by Chriſt, though ye are not waſhed perfectly, ye are waſhed univerſally; waſhed in every part, though not perfectly clean in any part: 2 Cor. v. 17. ‘If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away, behold, all things are become new.’ Ye are waſhed from the groſs pollutions of the outward man, from the reigning pollutions of the inner man: Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. ‘Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord? and who ſhall ſtand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lift up his ſoul unto vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully.’ There is a new ſet in you for purity, darting to all the points of the Chriſtian compaſs, though you fall ſhort of degrees in every point. That compaſs ye find, 1 John iii. 3. ‘And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure.’

2. Ye lay the ſtreſs of your acceptance with God, not upon your inherent cleanneſs, the effect of your waſhing; but on the blood of Chriſt, the cauſe of it: Phil. iii. 3. ‘For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.’ Cloſe hypocrites never fail to ſplit on this rock. That, Matth. v. 3. ‘Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven,’ is ſet firſt, for it muſt be carried through all; and ver. 8. ‘Bleſſed are the pure in heart; for they ſhall ſee God.’

3. Your hearts are looſed from ſin, though it cleaves to you. It lies not like mud in a pool, where there is nothing to wear it out; but like mud in a ſpring, where the ſpring-water tends to work it out. So ye will be groaning under the remains of your uncleanneſs, ſaying, with the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 25. ‘O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!’ You will be content to ſee every ſpot, Pſal. cxxxix. 23, 24. that it may be waſhed off; and really deſirous to be made perfectly clean; as was the apoſtle, Phil. iii. 13, 14. ‘I count not myſelf to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting thoſe things which are behind, and reaching forth unto thoſe things which are before, I preſs toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.’

USE 2. of Inſtruction and Direction to unwaſhed ſouls, yet lying in their blood. Sinners, will ye be made clean?

For Motive: To be left lying in the filth of ſin, is formally one half of the puniſhment of the damned, and virtually the whole of it. See the form of Chriſt's giving up with a ſinner, and dropping him for ever, Rev. xxii. 11. ‘He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill.’ There is the puniſhment of loſs. And in that filth will be bred and fed the worm that never dies; out of it will ariſe the fire that is never quenched. And that is the puniſhment of ſenſe.

Now, the Direction is, if ye would be waſhed by Chriſt, get part with Chriſt. Say not, Will ever I get part with Chriſt, being ſo unclean, not purified and meet for him? But no uncleanneſs of yours can hinder your getting part with Chriſt, if you will but take it. See the caſe of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. vi. 11. ‘And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.’ And ye ſhall rot and pine away in your filth, waſh otherwiſe as well as ye will, if ye will not take it: Pſal. lxxxi. 11, 12. ‘But my people would not hearken to my voice: and Iſrael would none of me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts luſts: and they walked in their own counſels.’

Queſt. What acceſs have I to get part with Chriſt?

Anſw. Chriſt and his ſalvation are a common good: 1 John iv. 14. We have ſeen, and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Jude ver. 3. this ſalvation is called the common ſalvation. I proclaim to every one to come and take their part with Chriſt, aſſuring them of welcome: Rev. xxii. 17. ‘And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, Come: And whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.’

Queſt. How may I be poſſeſſed of part with Chriſt?

Anſw. By faith, crediting the promiſe of the goſpel, and accordingly truſting on Chriſt as your Saviour, for his whole ſalvation; for ſalvation from ſin, as well as from wrath; for that holineſs and purity of heart and life, which are abſolutely neceſſary to make you meet for the inheritance of the ſaints in light, as well as for that righteouſneſs by which you can only be accepted in the ſight of God, and by which alone you can have a ſure and indefeaſible title to heaven and glory.

Laſtly, Let the ſaints conſider, that the more part they have with Chriſt, the more they will be waſhed; and that faith is the only way to have part with Chriſt in all his ſaving benefits, and that it is a mean of God's appointment, for waſhing and purification. Hence be exerciſing faith daily upon Chriſt, and particularly in the view of going to a communion table, in order to your being waſhed and ſanctified; remembering, that unleſs Chriſt waſh you, you can have no part with him.

The Myſtery of Sanctification by Chriſt.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, August 25, 1728, and ſubſequent Lord's Days.

JOHN xiii. 8.

If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me.

I Entered on theſe words laſt Lord's day, on occaſion of the ſacramental ſolemnity which was then celebrated among us; obſerved a doctrine, propoſed a method, which was briefly proſecuted, and I made ſome practical improvement of the ſubject. But as this text opens a large field of diſcourſe, and contains ample matter for directing faith and practice, I ſhall now endeavour to proſecute the deſign of the words more fully, in a ſeries of diſcourſes. For this end, I obſerve the following doctrine, viz.

DOCT. Such an inſeparable connection there is between a ſinner's having part with Chriſt, and being waſhed from his ſins by Chriſt in a work of ſanctification, that if a ſinner is not waſhed from his ſins by Chriſt, he has no part with Chriſt, while he is ſo.

Briefly, If a ſinner is not waſhed from his ſins by Chriſt, he has no part with Chriſt.

In handling this important ſubject, I ſhall conſider,

I. What it is to be waſhed from our ſins by Chriſt, viz. unto a cleanneſs in the eye of the goſpel.

II. The unwaſhed or unſanctified ſinner's having no part with Chriſt.

III. Conclude with ſome practical inferences.

I. I ſhall conſider what it is to be waſhed from our ſins by Chriſt, viz. unto a cleanneſs in the eye of the goſpel. And upon this head I ſhall ſhew,

1. What this waſhing ſuppoſeth.
2. Wherein it conſiſts.
3. How it is done and brought about.

FIRST, I ſhall ſhew what our being waſhed from our ſins by Chriſt ſuppoſeth.

1. It ſuppoſeth in the ſinner, a conviction of the filthineſs of ſin, and his loathſomeneſs by it. Hence the church ſays, Iſa. lxiv. 6. ‘ But we are all as an unclean ‘ thing, and all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags, ‘ and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities like ‘ the wind, have taken us away.’ They that never ſaw the vileneſs and abominable nature of ſin are not waſhed from it, Prov. xxx. 12. ‘ There is a generation that ‘ are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not waſhed from ‘ their filthineſs.’ The man cries not only with the criminal, Guilty, guilty: but, with the leper, Unclean, unclean. Sin is not only frightful, but hateful and loathſome to him, as the vileſt filth. Now, if ye have not been convinced of the filthineſs of ſin, ye have no part with Chriſt.

1ſt, This conviction is got by looking into the glaſs of the law, repreſenting the ſpotleſs holineſs of God, Rom. vii. 12, 13, 14. ‘ The law is holy; and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good. Was then that ‘ which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But ‘ ſin, that it might appear ſin, working death in me by ‘ that which is good; that ſin by the commandment ‘ might become exceeding ſinful. For we know that ‘ the law is ſpiritual: but I am carnal, ſold under ſin.’ The glaring beauty of God's holineſs expreſſed in the law, ſtriking the ſinner, he ſees himſelf filthy and loathſome before the holy God, as moſt unlike him.

2dly, It fixes an impreſſion of ſhame on the ſinner. He is aſhamed of himſelf, of what he is, what he has done, and what he has neglected to do; as the publican did, Luke xviii. 13. who ſtanding afar off, would not ſo much as lift up his eyes unto heaven, but ſmote upon his breaſt, ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner. He is like a child, that having got a clean white frock on him, has fallen into the mire, and ſtands aſhamed before his mother in that pickle.

2. It ſuppoſes a willingneſs to be made clean: Pſal. xix. 12. ‘ Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe thou ‘ me from ſecret faults.’ It is not eaſy to bring a ſinner that length: Jer. xiii. 27. ‘ Wo unto thee, O Je‘ruſalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when ſhall it ‘ once be?’ Sin is ſo woven into our nature, and ſo ſtrengthened by cuſtom in ſin, which is a ſecond nature, that it is harder to make a ſinner willing to be made clean, than to bring a ſwine away from the mire and dirt it loves to neſtle and wallow in. But in the day of the waſhing of a ſinner, he is made as willing to be waſhed, as ever child aſhamed of his naſtying himſelf, is. So if ye have not been made willing to be clean, ye have no part with Chriſt.

3. It ſuppoſes a conviction that we cannot waſh ourſelves clean, by any thing we can do or ſuffer: Rom. vii. 24. ‘ O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver ‘ me from the body of this death!’ What mars the waſhing by Chriſt with many, is, that they think they can waſh themſelves clean enough by themſelves. They ſee now how faſt the filth of ſin ſticks to them, and ſo they think their praying, confeſſing, reforming, and tears, will do it. But hear what Job ſays, chap. ix. 30, 31. If I waſh myſelf with ſnow-water, and make my hand never ſo clean; yet ſhalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me. This every ſoul that is ſanctified is brought to. Therefore, if ye have not been convinced, that ye cannot waſh yourſelves clean, by any thing ye can do, ye have no part with Chriſt.

4. It ſuppoſes a hearty conſent of the ſoul to be waſhed by Chriſt. Chriſt waſhes none againſt their will: Jer. xiii. 27. ‘ Wo unto thee, O Jeruſalem, wilt thou ‘ not be made clean? when ſhall it once be?’ They that will needs lie ſtill in their filthineſs, ſhall lie and rot in it for ever for him; Rev. xxii. 11. 'He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill.' Hoſ. iv. 17. 'Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone.' Chriſt makes all his elect willing to be holy, but he forces holineſs on none. Therefore if ye have not given a hearty conſent of your ſoul to be waſhed, ye have no part with Chriſt.

5. laſtly, It ſuppoſes a preſenting of our defiled ſouls to Chriſt to be waſhed by him. This is the work of faith, by which the ſoul comes to the waters: Iſa. lv. 1. 'Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price.' The ſoul comes to Chriſt, as the leper to the Prieſt to be cleanſed: Pſal. li. 7. 'Purge me with hyſſop, and I ſhall be clean: waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter than ſnow.' compared with Lev. xiv. 6. As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, and the cedar wood, and the ſcarlet, and the hyſſop, and ſhall dip them, and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water. It eyes him as a Saviour from the filth, as well as the guilt of ſin: as a ſanctifier of the unclean, as well as a juſtifier of the ungodly. Therefore, if ye have not preſented your defiled ſouls to Chriſt, to be waſhed by him, ye have no part with Chriſt.

SECONDLY, I ſhall ſhew wherein our being waſhed from our ſins by Chriſt conſiſts. As waſhing in the general conſiſts in removing of filthineſs, and making clean; ſo does the waſhing of a ſoul by Chriſt, ly in removing the filth or ſin from off the ſinner, and making him clean in likeneſs to God. Now,

1. Chriſt waſheth ſinners in the inner man: Pſal. xlv. 13. 'The King's daughter is all glorious within.' Phariſaical waſhings reach the outer man only: but Chriſt's waſhing goes to the hidden man of the heart. Adam left us in the mire of ſin, with a nature corrupt and filthy, the very reverſe of the nature of God; all the faculties of our ſouls defiled, Tit. i. 15. But Chriſt waſhes our nature and faculties. And this lies in two things.

1*ſt*, Removing and waſhing off that filth of ſin, that either cleave to them from our birth, or has been added to them ſince: Tit. iii. 5. 'Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy, he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.' We came into the world with ſuch corruption cleaving to our nature and faculties, as not only diſabled us for all good, but made us prone to all evil, and averſe to all good. This is ſtrengthened and increaſed during the time one lives unregenerate. And the corruption of nature ſpreads itſelf, and takes many roots in the ſoul, in divers particular luſts, Rom. vi. 12. Now, Chriſt waſhing of this filth off the ſoul,

(1.) Purgeth our whole nature and faculties, from that corruption, ſo far as it does not reign there: Rom. vi. 14. 'For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.' The total blindneſs as to the receiving of the things of God, is purged out of the mind; that averſion to good, out of the will; and the carnality out of the affections. The natural corrupt bent of the heart is taken away, removed, and broken; the ſtony heart is taken away, and a heart of fleſh is given, Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

(2.) He purgeth the ſoul from its old luſts, looſing them at the root: Gal. v. 24. 'They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with its affections and luſts.' As in the deluge of waters coming over the earth, trees deeply rooted were waſhed away by the roots, and lay floating here and there, and ſo might give ſome diſturbance to the ark: ſo Chriſt's efficacious blood coming over the ſoul, looſes old luſts by the roots, though they are not quite taken away, but give diſturbance to the believer. They are in him as a broken tooth, they hang at him as a leg out of joint.

2*dly*, It lies in introducing the beauty of habitual holineſs into our ſouls, in conforming us to the image of Chriſt: Tit. iii. 5. forecited. 2 Cor. iii. 18. 'But we all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.' As the veſſel of braſs or ſilver, being overlaid with naſtineſs, has nothing of its primitive luſtre; yet when it is waſhed and ſcoured, it recovers ſomewhat of its former brightneſs: ſo the unwaſhed ſinner has loſt all his primitive ſpiritual glory: but Chriſt waſhing him in the day of grace, he recovers it ſomewhat; and the waſhing being perfected in glory, he will be brighter and more glorious than ever. Now, Chriſt introducing this into our ſoul,

(1.) Implants in us a new nature, which goes over all the faculties of the ſoul. It is a divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. as coming from God, and making the ſoul like God, John iii. 6.—— 'That which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit.' Hence the man is a new creature; all his faculties are renewed, mind, will, and conſcience: 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſſed away, behold, all things are become new.' This nature has a bent and propenſity to good, and an averſion to evil, and cannot loſe it as long as it is in being: and it will be ever, for it is an immortal nature. Hence the combat, Gal. v. 17. 'The fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh: and theſe are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye cannot do the things ye would.'

(2.) This new nature hath in it the ſeeds of all ſaving graces: 1 John iii. 9. 'Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him; and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God.' Compare Deut. xxx. 6. 'The Lord thy God will circumciſe thine heart, and the heart of thy ſeed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, that thou mayeſt live.' We have a ſwatch of them, Gal. v, 22, 23. 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith and temperance.' And they are taken out of that fulneſs of grace that is in Chriſt the head, and communicated to the ſinner as a member: John i. 16. 'Of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace.' And thus they bear the image of Chriſt, that as he was meek, lowly, &c. ſo are they in a meaſure. And hereby they are enabled for all acts of holy obedience, as a principle of life gives power for motion.

This is the waſhing of the ſinner in the inner man: and if ye are not ſo waſhed by Chriſt, ye have no part with him.

2. Chriſt waſheth ſinners in the outward man too: Pſal. xlv. 13. 'The king's daughter is all glorious within; her clothing is of wrought gold.' Theſe two go together, the latter iſſuing from the former, Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. 'Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord? and who ſhall ſtand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lift up his ſoul unto vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully.' James iv. 8. 'Cleanſe your hands, ye ſinners, and purify your hearts, ye double minded.' As the candle within ſhines through the lantern, ſo grace in the heart appears in the outward converſation, Matth. vi. 22. 'The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be full of light.' As the corruption of nature reigning, vents itſelf in abominable works, Pſal. xiv. 1. ſo the cleanſing and purifying of our nature, vents itſelf in good works, Tit. ii. 14. 'Chriſt gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.' For as the tree is, ſo will the fruit be.

Now, Chriſt waſhing ſinners in the outward man,

1*ſt*, Removes the filth that before clave to their life and converſation, Eph. iv. 22. It is no more a vile converſation, nay, nor a vain converſation, 1 Pet. i. 18. not a diſorderly, but a well ordered converſation, Pſal. l. 23. They that go back to their former converſation, whether in vanity or vileneſs, ſhew themſelves but Satan's waſhed ſwine, not Chriſt's waſhed ſaints, 2 Pet. ii. 22. It reaches,

(1.) Their words, and purifies them from corrupt communication. If the heart be circumciſed, ſo will the lips be too, James i. 26. ‘If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.’ If grace rule in the heart, the tongue will not be allowed to go at random. The liberty that ſome take with their tongues in obſcenity, lying, ſwearing, mocking and jeſting at ſerious religion, &c. proclaims them to be unwaſhed by Chriſt. See Pſal. xv.

(2.) It reaches the courſe of their actions, and purifies it, Heb. ix. 14. ‘How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?’ It purifies their courſe from impiety againſt God, and injuſtice againſt man; teaching them to walk, as Tit. ii. 12. ‘ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.’ Their hands are waſhed, as well as their hearts; and their feet are waſhed, that they go not in the way of ſinners as before.

2dly, He beautifies them in their life and converſation: Cant. vii. 1. ‘How beautiful are thy feet with ſhoes, O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of a cunning workman.’ Compared with Eph. vi. 15. ‘And your feet ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace.’ He makes them ſhine as lights in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe generation;’ and helps them to a converſation becoming the goſpel. And this alſo reaches,

(1.) Their words. Their tongue is made their glory, whereby they glorify God. Inſtead of corrupt communication, they produce ſomething for the uſe of edification. Being tranſlated from the power of darkneſs into the kingdom of God, they learn the language of it.

(2.) The courſe of their works. They not only ceaſe to do evil, but they learn to do well, Iſ. i. 16, 17. They become zealous of good works, Tit. ii. 14. As it is but half waſhing that takes away only the groſs filth, but makes not clean; ſo it is but half Chriſtianity, where people ſatisfy themſelves with not doing evil, but ſet not themſelves to do good.

Thirdly, I ſhall ſhew how our being waſhed from ſin by Chriſt is brought about. Chriſt waſheth ſinners, making uſe of ſeveral things to that bleſſed purpoſe.

Firſt, Chriſt waſheth ſinners, uſing ſome things more immediately for that purpoſe, towards them. And,

Firſt, Chriſt waſheth ſinners with his blood, as the moſt immediate cauſe of their cleanſing. Hence the church aſcribes praiſe to Chriſt, who loved them, and waſhed them from their ſins in his own blood, Rev. i. 5. The blood of Chriſt hath that place in waſhing of defiled ſouls, that water hath in waſhing defiled bodies: ſo it is the holy water wherewith we are waſhed from our ſins. Therefore it is called a fountain, and that not only to drink at, but to waſh at: Zech. xii. 1. ‘In that day there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin, and for uncleanneſs.’ Compared with 1 John i. 7. ‘The blood of Jeſus Chriſt cleanſeth from all ſin.’ This blood being applied to the ſoul polluted with ſin, it effectually removes the filth of ſin from the ſoul.

For underſtanding of this, theſe things may be noted.

1. The defilement or uncleanneſs ſin leaves on the ſoul, is not a bodily and viſible thing, as naſtineſs on our bodies or clothes, which may be taken away with hands: but it is a moral and ſpiritual uncleanneſs, viz. an unlikeneſs and contrariety to the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law: ſo that the waſhing of a ſoul from it, is the rendering that ſoul like God in his imitable perfections, expreſſed in the ten commands, which expreſs his image unto us, that appeared perfectly in the man Chriſt, walking exactly in every point, according to theſe ten commands, in their ſpirituality and extent.

2. By the blood of Chriſt in this matter, is not meant ſimply the blood that ran out of his veins in his circumciſion, the ſufferings of his life, and crucifixion; but Chriſt himſelf ſacrificed for us; which ſacrifice was begun from the moment of his incarnation, was continued all his life long, was perfected on the croſs and in the grave, and received its actual purifying efficacy in his reſurrection, as a ſacrifice fully offered, and accepted for the ends it was offered for: Tit. ii. 14. He ‘gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.’ Rom. iv. 23. ‘Who was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification.’ 1 Cor. vi. 11. ‘And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.’ Hence we owe our ſanctification to the holineſs of his nature, and the righteouſneſs of his life, as well as to his death; the former being as eſſentially requiſite to make him an effectual ſacrifice for us, as the latter; ſince no ſacrifice could atone, but what was without natural and accidental blemiſh. But his blood is particularly named in the caſe,

1ſt, For that the life going away with the blood in all living creatures, and ſo in the man Chriſt, the ſhedding of his blood was the perfecting ſtroke in his ſacrificing himſelf for us: ſo that we are ſaid to be waſhed with his blood, as the priſoner is ſaid to be delivered by his cautioner's paying the utmoſt farthing of his debt. See Rom. i. 17. ‘For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith.’ compared with Rom. iii. 25. ‘Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for remiſſion of ſins.’

2dly, For decency of expreſſion, the term blood being moſt agreeable to the term waſhing, which relates to ſome liquid. Agreeable hereto was it, that after Chriſt being born holy, had lived holy, and died on the croſs, his ſide was pierced, and there came forth blood and water fitted to waſh: the Holy Ghoſt thereby teaching, that the waſhing or ſanctifying of ſinners was to proceed from Chriſt, in his holy birth, life, and death; thence was the ſpring of purifying virtue from ſin.

3. As it is by applying of water to the unclean thing, that it is waſhed; ſo it is by applying to our ſouls, Chriſt ſacrificed for us, that we are ſanctified, and waſhed from ſin. A man may ſtand at a river ſide, bedaubed with mire and dirt, till he die; and yet be never a whit the cleaner of the river, if the water of it be not brought cloſe upon him: ſo Chriſt, in the purifying virtue of his blood, may be within reach of the ſinner's hand all his days, and yet he may die in his filth of ſin, and lie in it in hell for ever, if Chriſt and he never come cloſe together in a ſpiritual union. The blood of ſacrifices was firſt offered to God for atonement, and then it was ſprinkled on perſons or things for their purification: Heb. ix. 19. ‘For when Moſes had ſpoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and ſcarlet wool, and hyſſop, and ſprinkled both the book and all the people.’ compared with Exod. xxiv. 5.——8. ‘And Moſes ſent young men of the children of Iſrael which offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moſes took half of the blood, and put it in baſons; and half of the blood he ſprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they ſaid, All that the Lord hath ſaid, will we do, and be obedient. And Moſes took the blood, and ſprinkled it on the people, and ſaid, Behold, the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all theſe words.’ The offering of the blood of Chriſt to God is over, near ſeventeen hundred years ago: but the ſprinkling or application of it is ſtill going on: Heb. xii. 22. 24. ‘But ye are come——to Jeſus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of ſprinkling, that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel.’ Where it is ſprinkled, they are cleanſed; where not, they lie ſtill in their filth, having no more cleanſing from ſin by it, than if it had never been ſhed.

2. It is not every water that will waſh clean; but there is a cleanſing virtue in ſome water, that is not in every water. I am not to enquire into the cauſe of that difference; but into the cauſe of the cleanſing virtue of the blood of Chriſt, whereby we are waſhed from ſin that is not in any other thing, though men have multiplied things for that end. If we enquire into the ſpring of the cleanſing virtue that is in Chriſt ſacrificed for us, and in no other things, we find theſe two.

1ſt, There is a real and proper merit of ſinners ſanctification in him. By his ſacrifice of himſelf he has merited at the hand of God the ſanctification of us, and waſhing us from our ſin, Eph. v. 25, 26. 'Chriſt loved 'the church, and gave himſelf for it; that he might 'ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water by 'the word.' Chriſt as really merited our perſonal holineſs, and every good work we do, at the hand of God, as he merited the pardon of atheiſm and blaſphemy to us; ſo abſurd is the merit of our works, Tit. ii. 14. 'He gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from 'all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, 'zealous of good works.' 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. 'Ye know 'that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as 'ſilver and gold, from your vain converſation received 'by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious 'blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot.' Now, there is no ſuch merit in any thing elſe, that they ſhould waſh.

Hence Chriſt being applied to the ſoul, or his blood ſprinkled on it, has a looſing efficacy, that the filth of ſin is looſed from the ſoul it ſtuck cloſe to before; even as the payment of the ranſom applied to the captive, actually looſes the bond of his captivity; ſo as a juſt judge can no more ſuffer him to be a captive, a priſoner. I ſhewed before, that it is guilt that is that bond. Wherefore, for perſons to pretend part with Chriſt, while yet their filth of ſin ſticks as cloſe to them, and they to it, as ever, is to blaſpheme the juſtice of the Father, or the merit of the Son; as if either the one did receive the ranſom, and yet not ſet the captive free; or elſe the other's merit was defective, and therefore ineffectual.

2dly, There is a fulneſs of the Spirit of holineſs in him or his blood. Hence he is ſaid, Rev. iii. 1. to have the ſeven Spirits of God. Chriſt ſacrificed for us, is the receptacle of the Spirit of ſanctification, as the animal ſpirits are in the blood while freſh and warm, as Chriſt's blood always is; that is, Chriſt himſelf as ſacrificed, Heb. x. 20. And that ſpirit of ſanctification is not in other things, not in Popiſh penances, not in the legal performances of prayers, tears, confeſſions, reſolutions, &c. which many Proteſtants uſe for waſhing themſelves. All theſe in this caſe are but dead water, congealed blood without ſpirits, that defile, but cannot waſh.

Hence Chriſt being applied to, or his blood ſprinkled on a ſoul, has a cleanſing efficacy, removing the filth of ſin, and cleaning and brightening the ſoul in likeneſs to God, 2 Cor. iii. 18. 'But we all with open face, be'holding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are chan'ged into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as 'by the Spirit of the Lord.' Thus Chriſt ſpeaking of that application of himſelf to ſinners, as by eating and drinking, which are moſt cloſe even to the incorporating the meat and drink with the feeder. John vi. 53, 54. 'Then Jeſus ſaid unto the Jews, Verily verily I ſay un'to you, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and 'drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoſo eateth 'my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, 'and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day;' gives this as the reaſon of the efficacy, verſe 63. 'It is the ſpirit that 'quickeneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing: the words 'that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.' As filthy ſores are waſhed and cleanſed with ſpirituous liquors, filthy ſouls are waſhed and cleanſed with the blood of Chriſt, full of the Spirit of holineſs.

Wherefore, to pretend to part with Chriſt, and yet ſtill to live in your ſins, without repentance or reformation and amendment, is to blaſpheme either the blood of Chriſt, or his ſpirit; as if either there were no Spirit of holineſs in his blood, or elſe that that Spirit of holineſs hath no efficacy to purge away the filth of ſin, and make holy.

5. Waſhing off of filth and making clean, is according to the degree of the application of the water with its cleanſing virtue. It is a very ſlight ſpot that will be quite waſhed off at the very firſt bruſh. There is virtue enough in the river, at once to waſh clean a filthy object; but the waſher applies it but by degrees, ſo that it may be long ere it be got perfectly clean: ſo there is virtue enough in Chriſt to waſh all whom he waſhes at all, perfectly clean at once, but that virtue is applied but by degrees, 2 Cor. iii. 18. forecited. Prov. iv. 18. 'The 'path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, that ſhineth 'more and more unto the perfect day.'

There is a threefold waſhing of ſinners, according to a threefold application of Chriſt's blood to them.

1ſt, A begun waſhing by a begun application thereof. This is done in the work of converſion, Tit. iii. 5. it is called the waſhing of regeneration. Here the ſoul that before all along was lying in wickedneſs together with the unclean world, being taken out from among them by effectual calling, and united to Chriſt by faith, and ſo having part with him, is waſhed from his filthineſs, by an application of the blood of Chriſt, that never touched him before, but now ſtreams over him in union with Chriſt, Ezek. xvi. 8, 9. Now when I paſſed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold thy time was the time of love, and I ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and covered thy nakedneſs; yea, I ſware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, ſaith the Lord God, and thou becameſt mine. Then waſhed I thee with water; yea, I thoroughly waſhed away thy blood from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

Concerning the waſhing, the effect of this application, obſerve,

(1.) It is a waſhing all over: a waſhing of every part, though not quite clean in any part, 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old 'things are paſt away, behold all things are become 'new.' Therefore it is called a new birth, Tit. iii. 5. 'Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, 'but according to his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſh'ing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.' John iii. 5. 'Except a man be born of water, and of 'the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' We do not ſay a child is born, when his head, or feet, or an arm are born; but when the whole child is brought forth. Some ſhew a head, that, with notions of the principles of religion in it, and a tongue to talk of them, ſeems to be waſhed; others ſhew feet, that by going in the road of outward reformation, and ſome external duties, ſeem to be waſhed. But it is not the waſhing of regeneration; for it goes not all over them; they are new in ſome things, but they are juſt what they were in other things. Trace them to their walk in their employments and relations, to the entertainment given to the beloved luſt, to the inner man, and ſet of their heart with reſpect to the purity of the holy law; and they are juſt the ſame with the world lying in wickedneſs. That is an evidence, that their waſhing is with their own nitre and ſoap, not with the blood of Chriſt.

(2.) It is a waſhing that puts one in a ſtate of cleanneſs, bringing him out of a ſtate of filthineſs, John xiii. 10. 'He that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet, 'but is clean every whit.' There is a difference between one lying in a mire, and another that has dirtied his feet; though both need waſhing, the latter needs but to waſh his feet. Such is the caſe of the unregenerate and regenerate, Cant. vi. 10. 'who is ſhe that look'eth forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as 'the ſun, and terrible as an army with banners.' When the dawning is come, it is true, it is not broad day light, but yet it is day, not night. The moon has her ſpots, yet ſhe is not filthy, but fair.

(3.) That ſtate of cleanneſs can never be loſt, John xiii. 10. forecited. Many ſeem to be brought to a ſtate of cleanneſs, but at length they turn apoſtates: that ſays, they were never out of the ſtate of filthineſs, and the church of God, was but beguiled with them, when they took them for perſons in a ſtate of cleanneſs. They that are once waſhed, will never apoſtatize, nor go back again to wallow in the mire: 1 John ii. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us.

2*dly*, A continued and progreſſive waſhing, by a continued progreſſive application of Chriſt's blood to the ſoul. This is done and carried on all along from the firſt converſion of a ſinner, untill his death. Therefore though the elders were about the throne in white, yet there was a ſea of glaſs before it, Rev. iv. 4. 6. And the fountain ſtands opened for the houſe of David, as well as for the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, Zech. xiii. 1.; for ſaints as well as for ſinners. They that deeming themſelves once waſhed, find no need of waſhing more, proclaim themſelves not waſhed by Chriſt, as they do who betake themſelves for it to another laver. They that are come to Chriſt for waſhing, are ſtill coming, 1 Pet. ii 4.

Two things make this continued waſhing neceſſary.

(1.) Continued imperfection in the waſhing of the ſoul during this life, Phil. iii. 12. Believers are in no moment of time perfectly clean; in their moſt ſhining moments they are ſtill but as the moon, not without their ſpots. So that they never want matter of exerciſe, in purging-work, that they may arrive at a perfect purity: 1 John iii. 3. 'Every man that hath this hope in 'him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure.'

(2.) New defilements contracted continually. Tho' they never loſe the ſtate of cleanneſs, yet they are always needing to waſh their feet: John xiii. 10. 'He 'that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet, but 'is clean every whit.' An alluſion to the prieſts in the temple-ſervice. They are all prieſts to God, and ſo waſhed; but while they go about, ſuch is the defiling world they walk in, the remains of defilement in them, that in every thing they contract ſome ſpot; James iii. 2. 'For in many things we offend all.' Their heart and life have ſo many remaining ſeeds of corruption, that they never want occaſion to pluck up weeds.

Now this continued waſhing is by the continued application of Chriſt's blood, and no other way: 1 John i. 7. The blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin. For,

[1.] This is the way the ſaints have looked for it; as David, Pſal. li. 2. 7. Waſh me throughly from my iniquity, and cleanſe me from my ſin. Purge me with hyſſop and I ſhall be clean; waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter than ſnow. As the lepers could, by no art of their own, be ſo purified as to be admitted to ſociety, but by the prieſts ſprinkling them; ſo ſinners, by no art or endeavours of their own, can be purified ſo as to be admitted to fellowſhip with God, but by the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt upon them. Therefore the ſea of glaſs, which is the blood of Chriſt, ſtands before the throne, that whoſoever would have communion with God, may waſh there, and ſo be fitted for it.

[2.] There is no merit of holineſs, nor fulneſs of the Spirit in any thing elſe. The doings and ſufferings of ſaints are as free of merit, as thoſe of ſinners, Luke xvii. 10. 'So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall have done all 'thoſe things which are commanded you, ſay, We are 'unprofitable ſervants: we have done that which was 'our duty to do.' Neither is there any thing of the Spirit in them, but ſo far as the blood of Chriſt is ſprinkled on them, rendering them acceptable, Rev. vii. 14. But in the blood of Chriſt there is a never-failing merit, a conſtant fulneſs of the Spirit, to which the ſoul may have continual recourſe, as to a fountain never dry.

3*dly*, A perfect waſhing, by a full application of the blood of Chriſt. And this takes place at death, Heb. xii. 23.——To the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. Then believers waſhed in converſion, and who have been all along waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, are by the ſame means made quite clean and without ſpot: Eph. v. 25, 26, 27. 'Chriſt loved the church, and gave himſelf for 'it: that he might ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water by the word, that he might preſent it to 'himſelf a glorious church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, 'or any ſuch thing; but that it ſhould be holy, and 'without blemiſh.' This lies in two things.

(1.) The doing away the remains of ſin wholly. The reigning power of ſin being broken by the firſt application, it is gradually removed by further application, and quite carried off by the full application at death. Not the leaſt ſtain, nor mark of it, will then be left on the believing ſoul. But the filth of ſin now carried off in part from the whole man, will then be wholly carried off from every part.

(2.) The perfecting of the image of God. 1 John iii. 2. 'Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it 'doth not yet appear what we ſhall be: but we know, 'that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him: for 'we ſhall ſee him as he is.' The ſeveral lineaments of it are indeed drawn now upon the believer, but mixed with corruption in every part: but then it ſhall be without mixture, every part getting the finiſhing ſtroke in that Image, 1 Cor. xiii. 10. 'But when that which is 'perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be 'done away. So ſhall they ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever, Dan. xii. 3. 'The righteous ſhall ſhine forth as the ſun, in the kingdom of their Father, Matth. xiii. 43.

Now, it is by a full application of Chriſt's blood, that is, by a full participation of Chriſt crucified in his purifying virtue, that this waſhing is made: Rev. vii. 14, 15. Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne, and ſerve him day and night in his temple: and he that ſitteth on the throne, ſhall dwell among them. The cleanſing virtue going out from him to the ſoul in ſome meaſure now, will then go out in full meaſure, as when a ſluice is opened, and carries all away before it: 2 Cor. iii. 18. 'But we all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs, 'the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the 'Lord.' The ſoul putting off the body, unites more cloſely with Chriſt than ever, and ſo partakes of his merit, and fulneſs of Spirit, to a pitch of perfection: Eph. iv. 13. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man, to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt.

Secondly, Chriſt waſhed ſinners by his Spirit, Tit. iii. 5. 'Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, 'but according to his mercy, he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.' 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. 'God hath from the beginning choſen 'you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, 'and belief of the truth.' And the Spirit of Chriſt has that place in waſhing defiled ſouls, that the hand of the waſher hath in waſhing the defiled body of another. The hand being the inſtrument of action with men, the Spirit of Chriſt is held forth under that notion, the whole work of the application of Chriſt's redemption to us being done by him, Acts xi. 21. 'And the hand of the 'Lord was with them: and a great number believed, 'and turned unto the Lord.' Iſa. liii. 1. 'Who hath 'believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the 'Lord revealed?' Matth. xii. 28. 'But if I caſt out devils by the Spirit of God then the kingdom of God is 'come unto you.' Compared with Luke xi. 20. 'But 'if I with the finger of God, caſt out devils, no doubt 'the kingdom of God is come upon you.' So Chriſt waſheth ſinners with his blood, by his Spirit, John iii. 5. 'Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, 'he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' 1 John v. 8. 'And there are three that bear witneſs in earth, 'the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood; and theſe 'three agree in one.' This the apoſtle very plainly teacheth, 1 Cor. vi. 11. ‘And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.’ So Chriſt's hand has never come on that ſoul for waſhing, which is deſtitute of the Spirit of Chriſt, Rom. viii. 9. ‘If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his.’

Now, of the work of the Spirit of Chriſt in the waſhing of a ſinner, we may take a view in the following particulars.

1. The Spirit of Chriſt diſcovers to the ſinner his pollution and defilement of ſoul, John xvi. 8. ‘And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment.’ He brightens the glaſs of the holy commandments of the word, and he opens the ſinners eyes, and determines him to look into that glaſs: and ſo the ſinner getting a new ſight of the holineſs and purity of God, Hab. i. 13. gets a new ſight of himſelf, that he cries out, with the leper, Unclean, unclean: and ſays, with the church, Iſa. lxiv. 6. ‘We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags.’ Then he ſees that loathſomeneſs in ſin that he ſaw not before; the loathſomeneſs of his nature, heart, and life; not excepting thoſe ſins he looked on formerly as beauty ſpots, glorying in them, Philip. iii. 19. And he is filled with ſhame and confuſion before the Lord; like thoſe, Jer. iii. 22. ‘Behold, we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God.’ verſe 25. ‘We lie down in our ſhame, and our confuſion covereth us: for we have ſinned againſt the Lord our God, we and our fathers from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God.’ And if ye have no experience of this, ye have no part with Chriſt.

2. He diſcovers to the ſinner the laver wherein he may be waſhed from that ſpiritual pollution, the fountain wherein he may be purified, viz. the blood of Chriſt, or Chriſt himſelf as crucified and ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. ii. 12. ‘Now we have received not the ſpirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Here is the only effectual mean for purification, the only true purgatory, Jeſus Chriſt in the purifying virtue of his blood, Heb. i. 3. And the Spirit points it out to the ſinner. This is called revealing of the Son, Gal. i. 16. in our catechiſm, ‘enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Chriſt.’ Concerning which ye may note,

1ſt, That it is natural to men under a ſenſe of their filthineſs, to look to and run to lavers of their own for waſhing themſelves, however ineffectual they are: Hoſ. v. 13. ‘When Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to king Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound.’ Hence the firſt queſtion, What ſhall we do to be ſaved? They have neither eyes to ſee, nor hearts for the blood of Chriſt, as the alone mean of waſhing from ſin. The whole ceremonial law pointed the Iſraelites to Chriſt as the only remedy for ſoul-pollution, yet they are as great ſtrangers to it, as if they had never heard of it. Hence we have theſe queſtions, with the Lord's anſwer, Mic. vi. 6, 7, 8. ‘Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow myſelf before the high God? ſhall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? ſhall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul? He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.’

2dly, It is the work of the Spirit alone to diſcover it, ſo as to bring the unclean ſoul to it. As Hagar ſaw not the well, though it was near her, till the Lord opened her eyes; ſo the ſinner ſees not the opened fountain for ſin and uncleanneſs, till the Spirit enlighten the mind: John xvi. 14. ‘He ſhall glorify me: for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.’ And he ſhews it effectually to the ſinner, together with the ineffectualneſs of all things elſe for that purpoſe. And,

(1.) The Spirit ſhews the ineffectualneſs of all other, in the glaſs of the law in its ſpirituality and extent. There the ſinner beholds all that he can do or ſuffer needs itſelf to be waſhed, being polluted and defiled, and ſo that it can defile him, but not waſh him. Hence ſays the church, Iſa. lxiv. 6. But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags, and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

(2.) In the glaſs of the promiſe of the goſpel, he ſhews the true laver, Chriſt Jeſus: John iii. 16. ‘For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ The Spirit brings home the promiſe of the goſpel, and demonſtrates it to the ſinner, 1 Cor. ii. 4. And he demonſtrates,

[1.] The infallible efficacy of it to cleanſe from ſin: 1 Theſſ. i. 5. ‘For our goſpel came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance.’ Notwithſtanding of all that the word ſaith of the efficacy of Chriſt's blood to waſh from ſin, that myſtery is but folly to carnal men, till the demonſtration of the Spirit come: 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. ‘But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God.’ Then the ſoul ſays, as Matth. ix. 21. ‘If I may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole.’

[2.] The ſinner's acceſs to it in particular; that the fountain is not only open, but open for him, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. If this be not, the ſinner can never apply it to himſelf by faith. And this the Spirit doth by opening the general warrant of the word, and applying it particularly to the ſinner.

3. He brings the ſinner into the laver, puts him into the water, as it were. We are naturally in the caſe of that man at the pool, who ſaid, John v. 7. ‘I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool.’ Though the laver of Chriſt's blood be near by us, we cannot put in ourſelves for waſhing. Now, the Spirit does the ſinner this good office: and he does it by uniting him to Chriſt, whereby the unclean ſoul is plunged into the fountain opened for ſin: 1 Cor. xii. 13. ‘For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body: and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.’ And the Spirit brings the ſinner into the laver, 1ſt, Paſſively, entering into the dead and defiled ſoul, whereby the ſoul is quickened, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. ‘And I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes, and ye ſhall keep my judgments, and do them.’ Rom. viii. 9. ‘But ye are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his.’ Chriſt communicates the Spirit, which is his own Spirit dwelling in him, to the dead and defiled ſoul; and ſo the ſoul is paſſively united to Chriſt, and quickened. Thus Chriſt draws the ſinner to him for waſhing by the Spirit.

2dly, Actively, working faith in the ſinner, whereby he comes to Chriſt, and unites with him: Col. ii. 12. ‘Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein alſo you are riſen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raiſed him from the dead.’ compared with 2 Cor. iv. 13. ‘We having the ſame ſpirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken: we alſo believe, and therefore ſpeak.’ Eph. iii. 17. ‘That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith.’ The ſoul being drawn, runs; being united to Chriſt, unites with him; being put into the opened fountain, dips himſelf over head and ears in it, Rom. iii. 25. This actual believing the Spirit produces in the ſinner immediately out of the ſpiritual life given by the communication of himſelf to him: Philip. ii. 13. ‘For it is God ‘which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleaſure.’ John v. 25. ‘Verily, verily I ſay unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear ſhall live.’ compared with chap. i. 12, 13. ‘But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God.’

Now, the unclean ſinner thus brought to Chriſt, and united to him, is in the fountain, and cannot miſs to be waſhed from his ſins with the blood of Chriſt; and the only hand that brings him there, is the Spirit of Chriſt. Now, he has part with Chriſt, communion neceſſarily following upon the union.

4. laſtly, The Spirit waſheth the unclean ſoul in the laver, applying Chriſt to it in the purifying virtue of his blood; as one waſheth an unclean perſon in water, applying the water to him: 1 Pet. i. 2. ‘Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.’ And according to the degree of that application of Chriſt to the ſinner, in the purifying virtue of his blood, made by the Spirit, ſuch is the degree of the ſanctification or waſhing of the ſinner. For underſtanding of this myſtery, conſider, 1ſt, The ſoul being united to Chriſt, is clothed with his merit, as for juſtification, ſo for ſanctification alſo: Rev. iii. 18. ‘I counſel thee to buy of me white raiment that thou mayeſt be clothed, and that the ſhame of thy nakedneſs do not appear.’ Sanctification is a great privilege, and coſtly, bought with the Redeemer's blood: 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. ‘Ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, from your vain converſation received from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot.’ Tit. ii. 14. ‘Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.’ And the merit or righteouſneſs of Chriſt being on a man, by union with Chriſt, is the ground in law for his partaking of the benefit of ſanctification, as a benefit purchaſed for him: even as the guilt of Adam's firſt ſin on us, is the ground in law for God's denying us the ſanctification of our nature in our birth, upon which the corruption of nature is conveyed to us from Adam.

2dly, Sinners united to Jeſus Chriſt, have communion with him in his death and reſurrection; i. e. they have a common intereſt with him therein, they are in law-reckoning their death and reſurrection too: Col. ii. 12. ‘Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein alſo you are riſen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raiſed him from the dead.’ The reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt died and roſe again as a public perſon, their head, in their name: Rom. vi. 4. ‘Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.’ And this communion with Chriſt in his death and reſurrection, is the ſpring of their ſanctification; it is that which ſets all the wheels in motion, that concur to the waſhing them from their ſins: Rom. vi. 3.——6. Know ye not, that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death; we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.

3dly, Chriſt dying put off from himſelf the whole body of all our ſins, which before were upon him by imputation; and roſe, without ſin imputed, as he was ever without ſin inherent: Rom. vi. 10. For in that he died, he died to ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth to God. For he by his death having fully ſatisfied for ſins, the guilt of them whereby they clave to him, was diſſolved of courſe, and he ſhook them off as Paul did the viper into the fire, having no more power to cleave to him or hurt him. Which death and reſurrection being of a publick perſon, their head, hath, by the merit thereof, a power of conforming all his members thereto, in dying to ſin, and riſing to newneſs of life, even as there was a contrary power in Adam's ſin and death: Phil. iii. 10. ‘That I may know him, and the power of his reſurrection, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, being made conformable unto his death.’ compare Rom. vi. 5, 6.

4thly, Sinners having communion with Chriſt in his death and reſurrection, are in him legally dead to ſin, freed from it in point of right, and alive ſpiritually to God: Rom. vi. 10, 11. ‘For in that he died, he died to ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth to God. Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves dead indeed to ſin, but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.’ The body of the ſins of the fleſh is legally put off them, and they are clean; even as the priſoner to whom is legally applied the paying of the debt by the cautioner, is, in the moment of that application, legally free, and no more a priſoner in point of right; though it may be ſome time ere he be brought freely out of the dungeon, and his priſon garments and fetters be taken off.

6thly, The Spirit applies Chriſt's blood, death, and reſurrection, to ſinners, really, by conveying from Chriſt the head, unto them as his members, a certain meaſure and degree of that all fulneſs of grace that is lodged in him, which he died to purchaſe, and roſe again to apply: Col. i. 19. ‘For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.’ John i. 16. ‘And of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace.’ compared with John xvi. 14, 15. ‘He ſhall glorify me: for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you. All things that the Father hath, are mine: therefore ſaid I, that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.’ All the grace that is in the ſaints in heaven or earth, or ever ſhall be, comes from the fulneſs of grace in the man Chriſt; as all the light of the world from the ſun: and the Spirit communicates it to them from him. Now, all graces are in Chriſt, and the Spirit communicates to his members of them all, John. i. 16.

7thly, Thus the blood of Chriſt applied by the Spirit penetrates or ſeeks in to the unclean ſoul, to the waſhing it from its filthineſs: Ezek. xxxvi. 25. ‘I will ſprinkle clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean: from all your filthineſs, from all your idols will I cleanſe you.’ For wherever that grace comes, it muſt needs have a twofold effect; (1.) To remove ſin according to its meaſure, and ſo to carry off ſpiritual filthineſs. Where humility comes, pride goes; where heavenlineſs of mind takes place, there ſenſuality and worldlineſs are diſlodged; and ſo of other graces. For grace and ſin are two contraries; whereof as the one gains, the other muſt needs loſe. (2.) To beautify and brighten the ſoul. Hence ſhe is, like ‘the King's daughter, all glorious ‘within; her cloathing is of wrought gold,’ Pſal. xlv. 13. For the more grace one has, the more he is like God. And this grace is immediately derived to us from Chriſt; who is the image of the inviſible God, and therefore fairer than the children of men, Pſal. xlv. 2.; that we being thereby rendered like Chriſt, may be rendered like God, in his imitable perfections.

8thly, This communication of grace by the Spirit, from Chriſt, to us being united to Chriſt, is the Spirit's applying Chriſt's blood to us; inaſmuch as the blood of Chriſt is as it were the vehicle of his grace, as the water is of the ſoap, that cleanſing thing, Mal. iii. 2. Chriſt is like fuller's ſoap. In this view is that prayer for ſanctification, Pſal. li. 2. ‘Waſh me thoroughly from ‘mine iniquity, and cleanſe me from my ſin.’ Waſh me, namely, as a fuller doth. In vain is the ſoap uſed without the water for waſhing; and in vain will we look for ſanctification by the grace of Chriſt, without the merit of his blood on us. It is in the ſtream of his blood going over our ſouls, that his grace is brought into and left in them, to the beautifying them in holineſs. By the the merit of it, it hath a double effect. One relative, and immediate, to our juſtification. Hence the apoſtle, Heb. xii. 24. ſpeaks of ‘coming to Jeſus the Mediator ‘of the new covenant, and to the blood of ſprinkling, ‘that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel.’ Another effect it has, real, and mediate, to our ſanctification. Hence the apoſtle deſcribes Chriſtians as, 1 Pet. i. 2. ‘elect according to the foreknowledge of God the ‘Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obe‘dience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.’ And this is effected through the grace of Chriſt that it brings down with it. It is the bruiſing of the bread-corn that fits it to be bread; the dying of the corn of wheat that brings forth more wheat; ſo it is the crucifying of Chriſt that fitted him to be a fountain of grace, whereof ſinners might drink; it is the blood or death of Chriſt that makes Chriſtians, i. e. men after his image, John xii. 24. Thus the Spirit's conveying of grace from Chriſt to us, is his ſprinkling us with the blood of Chriſt for our ſanctification, 1 Pet. i. 2. to be diſtinguiſhed, though not divided, from the ſprinkling for our juſtification, Heb. xii. 24.

Laſtly, According to the meaſure of the former, ſprinkling or application of the blood of Chriſt, ſo is the meaſure of our ſanctification, purification, and cleanſing from ſin. The other having only a relative and immediate effect, is not capable of degrees; ſo it is alike in all believers. But this having a real and mediate effect through the grace conveyed in it, is made in very different degrees and meaſures, as a ſpring or fountain running into a veſſel. And there are three degrees of this application of Chriſt's blood by the Spirit, as before obſerved.

1*ſt*, A begun application of it, in the ſoul's union with Chriſt at firſt in effectual calling. That moment the ſinner becomes a member of Chriſt, the Spirit begins the application of Chriſt's blood to him for his ſanctification, conveying real inherent grace to him from Chriſt his head, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. compared with John xvi. 14. and i. 16. The ſluice of grace in Chriſt that was quite ſtopt before as to the ſinner, is then opened in a meaſure to run over him for his waſhing from ſin. And as to this meaſure,

1. It is ſome meaſure of all ſaving grace that is then communicated to the believer from Chriſt, his head, by the Spirit, John i. 16. ‘And of his fulneſs have all we ‘received, and grace for grace.’ As the wax receives every point in the ſeal, ſo the believer receives every grace in the man Chriſt. Hence the apoſtle, Eph. i. 13. ſpeaks of believers being ſealed with the holy Spirit of promiſe. As all ſaving graces are lodged in Chriſt without meaſure, John iii. 34. ſo a ſeed of them all is communicated to his members, 1 John iii. 9. of faith, love, repentance, or a ſet of heart turning God-ward, humility, meekneſs, &c. And though ſome graces may be more apparent and topping in a believer, than others; yet he wants none of them altogether, Heb. viii. 10. The effect of this is the habitual ſanctification of the believer, whereby the dominion of ſin is broken; the pollution and defilement by ſin is begun to be removed, and the ſoul is made habitually holy. More particularly, hereby,

1*ſt*, The believer's nature is renewed, Eph. iv. 23. He is renewed in the whole man, perſon, ſoul and body, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. There are quite new qualities derived from Chriſt, into his mind, will, and affections; habits of grace infuſed into them by the Spirit of Chriſt, which are the immediate principles of gracious actings, diſtinct from the new vital powers that go before faith. The body is renewed in communion with the renewed ſoul. Hence the apoſtle, Rom. vi. 13. ‘Neither yield ‘your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ‘ſin; but yield yourſelves to God, as thoſe that are a‘live from the dead; and your members inſtruments ‘of righteouſneſs unto God.’ So ſanctification is another thing than the bare amending of our lives; and holineſs another thing than moral virtue, which can never give us this new nature.

2dly, He becomes a new creature, 2 Cor. v. 17. not only a ſpiritually living creature, as in the quickening of the dead ſoul, John v. 27. before faith in effectual calling, called the firſt regeneration, John i. 12, 13. anſwering to the conception in natural generation; but a new creature in all its parts, by the work of ſanctification; a ſecond regeneration, following after faith, and anſwering to the forming of the conception into the diſtinct members in the womb, however ſmall, Tit. iii. 5. Hence there is not only a new head, feet, or life, in the caſe; but a new man, where all ſaving graces concur, as all the ſeveral members in a human body.

3dly, He is made over again in the image of God, bearing his image as a child of the father, Col. iii. 10. And this comes to paſs, in that the new creature being entirely ſprung of Chriſt, being made by receiving from him grace for grace in him, muſt needs be his image, Gal. iv. 19. And he is the image of God; therefore it muſt be the image of God too. Thus Eve was made after God's image, but mediately, being made after Adam's image, who was made immediately after God's, Gen. ii. 18. compared with 1 Cor. xi. 7, 8.

4thly, He becomes one ſpirit with Chriſt, which is the oneneſs with Chriſt that is the reſult of our uniting with him, 1 Cor. vi. 17. He that is joined to the Lord, is one Spirit. The Spirit is the principal, faith the inſtrumental cauſe; joining or uniting us to Chriſt; this is it whereby Chriſt and the believer formally coaleſce or go together into one ſpirit, i. e. one ſpiritual nature, Heb. ii. 11. even as Eve was one fleſh with Adam, being made of him, of his fleſh and bones; to which the apoſtle alludes, Eph. v. 30. For we are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones. Suppoſe a tree had a virtue of changing the graft into its own nature, as Chriſt has; the gardiner ingrafts, the graff by his art unites with the ſtock; then the ſtock conveys of its juice into the graff, whereby the nature of the graff is changed; here is the oneneſs ariſing from the uniting, they are one tree, of one nature. So the Spirit puts the ſoul to Chriſt, by faith it unites cloſe with him; then Chriſt by his Spirit conveys of his graces to the ſoul, which change its nature into his own, and ſo they go into one ſpiritual or divine nature, partaking of it with him, and that from him. So they are his ſeed, Iſ. liii. 10.

Laſtly, He is put in a capacity for all acts of holy obedience, whether doing or ſuffering, Heb. viii. 10. the ſeed of the ſeveral ſaving graces derived from Chriſt, and implanted in him, tending of their own nature to ſpring according to their ſeveral kinds. If the ſeed of any grace were wanting in him, he would be in no capacity for acting that grace wanting. Likeas a dead man, who is not only quickened by a miracle, but is riſen and come out of the grave, is in a diſpoſition for the common actions of life, ſo in this caſe of ſanctification, the ſoul is not only quickened, as it is in effectual calling, but is in the neweſt capacity to walk what way the Lord calls, Rom. vi. 4. ‘Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm unto death, that like as Chriſt was raiſed from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we likewiſe ſhould walk in newneſs of life.’ In effectual calling, Chriſt ſays to the ſinner, Ariſe; in ſanctification he ſays, Looſe him, and let him go.

2. But it is not a full meaſure of any grace that is communicated from Chriſt by his Spirit to the believer: ‘For we know but in part,’ 1 Cor. xiii. 9. And ſays the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 23. ‘I ſee another law in my members warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin in my members.’ The believer has derived to him from Chriſt, the graces of faith, love, &c. but none of them in perfection: even as when the child is perfectly formed in the womb, there is head, eyes, &c. but none of them come to perfection. Now, ſo far as they go, they remove ſin with its pollution off the ſoul; but they cannot fill up the room in any part; therefore there are remains of corruption in every part, will, and affections, and the body in communion with the corrupt part.

Now, the conſequent of this is, an imperfection of ſanctification; the believer is ſanctified, but not perfectly ſanctified. More particularly, hence,

1ſt, There are two contrary principles in believers; fleſh and Spirit, the new and old man, the new nature derived to them from the Second Adam, the old nature from the firſt Adam: the one the old inhabitant, the other the new incomer upon it; like the houſe of Saul, and the houſe of David, in Iſrael. Hence believers are a myſtery to the world, yea to themſelves, Cant. vi. 13. ‘Return, return, O Shulamite, return, return, that we may look upon thee; what will ye ſee in the Shulamite? as it were the company of two armies.’ Rom. vii. 16. ‘If then I do that which I would not, I conſent unto the law, that it is good.’

2dly, There is a continual combat in them, between theſe two contrary principles, being together ſide for ſide as it were, in every part, Gal. v. 17. ‘The fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh: and theſe are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would.’ Thus the believer is like Rebekah, the children ſtruggling together within her, and who was told by the Lord, upon her inquiring into the affair, that two nations were in her womb, and two manner of people ſhould be ſeparated from her bowels. The two armies war in the Shulamite. So that the believer's heart is often like a field of battle, where there is much confuſion and ſtruggle. There is ſomething like this found ſometimes in the unregenerate; but in them the ſtruggle is between the fleſh in one part luſting, and in another fearing, 2 Pet. ii. 15. In the ſaints it is between the fleſh and the ſpirit in one and the ſame part, receiving and refuſing the ſame ſpiritual truth or falſehood, willing and nilling the ſame good or evil, of its own proper motion, Rom. vii. 15.

3dly, Neither their good nor ill actions are carried to perfection. For the two contrary principles being thus yoked, neither of them get full ſwing. When grace prevails to carry the good point, corruption clogs it in ſome meaſure, and when corruption prevails, grace clogs it in ſome meaſure; Cant. iv. 2. ‘Thy teeth are like a flock of ſheep that are even ſhorn, which come up from the waſhing; whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them.’ Saints in heaven in good, and unregenerate men in evil, are like ſtrong men travelling in a calm day; ſaints on earth, in good or ill, are like men travelling with a ſtrong wind blowing in their face, that cannot make the way they otherwiſe would.

3. Howbeit, it is a predominant meaſure of grace that is conveyed by the Spirit from Chriſt to the ſoul: Rom. vi. 14. ‘For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace.’ Grace is put in the heart to rule, though in midſt of its enemies, which makes it difficult to maintain its ſuperiority. Not that it is predominant in every particular, event, and encounter: experience teſtifies the contrary. Rom. vii. 23. ‘I ſee another law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin in my members.’ But it is fundamentally and habitually predominant; that is, it is more firmly rooted as an immortal ſeed againſt a mortal one, and generally ſpeaking it prevails. Hence, 1ſt, The dominion and reigning power of ſin is broken. It is turned off the throne it had before, and is put under the check of a ſuperior principle. 1 John iii. 9. ‘Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him; and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God.’ Thus Chriſt delivers the ſoul from that enemy, to ſerve him. Hence ſays the prophet, Iſ. ix. 7. ‘Thou haſt broken the yoke of his burden, and the ſtaff of his ſhoulder, the rod of his oppreſſor, as in the day of Midian.’ Indwelling it may be for a time, and breed much diſturbance in the houſe: but it is no more maſter of the houſe. This was typified by the remains of the Canaanites, in the land, which Iſrael could not drive out, but yet brought them under tribute, Judg. i. 9. &c.

2dly, It ſhall be quite expelled at length, Rom. xvi. 23 ‘The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.’ Whatever particular battles it wins, the war ſhall end in its ruin, 1 John v. 4. ‘Whatſoever is born of God overcometh the world.’ When the true Iſraelite comes to the red ſea of death, theſe Egyptians ſhall be ſwallowed up there, and he ſhall ſee them all dead on the ſhore. Sin is crucified by the incoming of grace, and though the thief being on the croſs may rage and blaſpheme, yet ſhall he never come down till he breathe out his laſt.

2DLY, There is a continued application of the blood of Chriſt made to the believer by the Spirit, during his after continuing in the world. For the ſoul once united to Chriſt, his Spirit dwells in it ever after, never quits his dwelling. Hence Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, John xiv. 16, 17. ‘I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you.’ And the Spirit continues that application to it from time to time till death, conveying freſh ſupplies of grace to it from Chriſt the head. Hence the grace of Chriſt conveyed to believers is held forth under the notion of a ſpring-well, John iv. 14. ‘But whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt: but the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life;’ which is ſtill affording new water. The fulneſs of grace in Chriſt is the ſpring-head, Col. ii. 19. The receivers into which it runs, are believers, his members, that receives ſupplies of grace from him, as the branches ſupplies of juice from the ſtock, John xv. 5. ‘I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit.’ And the conveyer of theſe ſupplies from the head to the members, Philip. i. 11, 18. is the Spirit. For clearing of this purpoſe, conſider,

1. Though one is renewed, and has the ſeed of all grace planted in him, in the begun application iſſuing in habitual ſanctification; yet he is not able of himſelf to exerciſe one grace, to waſh off one remaining ſpot, or add to himſelf one ſtroke of purity: but thereto is neceſſary a new ſupply by the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 4, 5. Even of our gracious ſelves we can do nothing; can bring forth no fruit of grace, John xv. 5. even when furniſhed with gracious qualities. This is not ſo very ſtrange, if we conſider, that though we have the power of natural motion, yet we cannot move a finger without a common providential influence of the Spirit, Acts xvii. 28. ‘For in him we live, and move, and have our being.’ Tho' freſh ſeed be caſt into the earth, if the influence of the ſun and rain is with-held, it ſprings not up.

2. Hence every gracious act of ours is a fruit of the Spirit produced by him in us, through theſe ſupplies of grace; as the ſpringing of the ſeed is by the warmth and moiſture it gets from the heavens, Gal. v. 22, 23. Hence the Spirit is ſaid to luſt againſt the fleſh, Gal. v. 17. as producing theſe luſtings in us; even as he is ſaid to groan, Rom. viii. 26. So every act of mortification is by the Spirit, Rom. viii. 13. 'If ye through the 'Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.' And ſo alſo is every act of obedience, Phil. ii. 13. For it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. So that take away the Spirit, and ye take away all true holineſs.

3. Theſe ſupplies of grace are given in ſuch a meaſure only, in the continued application, as in the begun application. There is ſome meaſure of every grace ſupplied, Col. ii. 19. Hence, (Eph. v. 9.) 'the fruit of the 'Spirit is in all goodneſs, and righteouſneſs, and truth.' But there is not a full meaſure of any grace: 1 Cor. xiii. 9. 'For we know but in part.' Yet there is a predominant meaſure, 2 Cor. xii. 9. Hence the imperfection of actual ſanctification; there are ſtill ſome ſpots to waſh off while here. Waſhing of foul cloaths will take time; there is much work for the hands there. But the waſhing of foul ſouls ordinarily takes more than the longeſt work of that kind. The Spirit could waſh us perfectly clean in an inſtant, by a full application of the blood; but it was otherwiſe ordered. The thief on the croſs was waſhed clean in a moment: but ordinarily the waſhing is gradual.

4. laſtly, Theſe continued ſupplies of grace continue the waſhing of the ſoul; inaſmuch as thereby,

1ſt, Inherent grace is preſerved, that it die not out, amidſt ſo many ſnares and temptations. It is but a created quality, and of itſelf would wither away and die out; and ſo leave the ſoul overwhelmed anew with the filth of ſin, if it were not fed. Hence the Lord ſays, If. xxvii. 3. 'I the Lord do keep it, I will water it every 'moment; leſt any hurt it, I will keep it night and day.' John xv. 5, 6. 'I am the vine, ye are the branches: 'He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. 'If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, 'and is withered; and men gather them, and caſt them 'into the fire, and they are burned.' But the continued ſupplies from Chriſt by the Spirit, render it an abiding immortal ſeed, 1 Cor. i. 8, 9. See John xiv. 19.

2dly, Inherent grace is excited, that it lie not idle, Cant. v. 4. Sometimes it lies like fire under the aſhes; new ſupplies coming in by the Spirit, it is ſtirred up, and caſts abroad its light on the ſoul. Hence the Spirit is compared to the wind, Cant. iv. 16. Being excited to action, it removes ſin, as the ſpring works out mud.

3dly, It is increaſed and ſtrengthened, that it may act more vigorouſly, towards the expulſion of its enemy, Col. i. 10. As an addition of ſoap makes the waſhing go on more thoroughly, ſo the freſh ſupplies of grace from Chriſt carry on the waſhing of the ſoul, cauſing the ſtream run higher to the carrying off more of the filth of ſin, and beautifying the ſoul more.

3DLY, There is a full application of Chriſt's blood made to the ſoul at death. That moment the ſoul and body are ſeparated, the Spirit brings in a full ſtream of grace from Chriſt into the ſoul, Eph. iii. 19. The communication of grace which was before in part, is then made perfect. For clearing of this purpoſe, note, that,

1. The perfection of grace taking place in the ſouls of believers at death, comes from the ſame ſpring as at converſion, and after, till death. It is all communicated to them from Chriſt their head, with this difference only, that the ſtream of it that ran ſmall and ſcanty before, is then made to run full, as when a ſluice is fully opened. As, out of his fulneſs, they got grace for grace in Chriſt, in ſome meaſure, before; ſo then out of the ſame fulneſs, they get a fulneſs of grace for grace in him. For they grow to their perfection in him, as members of him, and therefore by communication from him, Eph. v. 13. The new creature is both formed and perfected the ſame way.

2. It is the ſame Spirit who conveys the perfection of grace from Chriſt to believers at death, that conveyed the firſt grace, and the ſupplies thereof; the ſame Spirit who forms, and nouriſhes the new creature, in the time of this life, brings it to its perfection and full growth at death, Phil. i. 6. Pſal. cxxxviii. 8. And as to the meaſure he then communicates, 1ſt, It is a full meaſure, ſuch as wholly renews them in every part, perfecting the image of Chriſt, and ſo of God, on them, and utterly aboliſhing all remains of ſin in them, 2 Cor. iv. 16. Thus they are waſhed perfectly clean, no ſpot is left in them, all being carried off by the full flood of grace conveyed from Chriſt to them, thus they are enabled to ſerve the Lord in perfection for ever.

2dly, Yet is it not ſuch a meaſure, as that they never need more; no, they will always be kept full, by the Spirit's communicating eternally to them full ſupplies of grace from Chriſt their head, Rev. vii. 17. 'For the 'Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne ſhall feed 'them, and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God ſhall wipe away all tears from their 'eyes.' John xvi. 14. 'He ſhall glorify me; for he 'ſhall receive of mine and ſhall ſhew it unto you.' There will be nothing any more to ſtop or retard the flowing of grace from Chriſt into them; but the fountain will empty of its fulneſs into them without interruption. That there ſhall be ſuch an eternal communication to them from Chriſt by the Spirit, is evident, in that they continue for ever members of Chriſt; and members cannot act but by continued communications of influences from their head, John xiv. 16, 17. And I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you. xv. 4, 5. 'Abide 'in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit 'of itſelf, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, 'except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the 'branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the 'ſame bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye 'can do nothing.'

From what is ſaid on this head, we may infer,

1. They are not waſhed from their filthineſs, that have never had a diſcovery of the filth of ſin made to them by the Spirit. Men may get a ſight of the guilt of ſin, that will fill them with fear and terror; that yet get no kindly ſight of the filth of ſin, filling them with ſhame and ſelf loathing before the Lord. But without this laſt, there is no ſanctification: Ezek. xxxvi. 31. Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath yourſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations. Therefore never think ye have ſeen ſin aright, till ye ſee it in the moſt monſtrous filthineſs of it, as oppoſite to the holineſs of God: it is that only will turn one's ſtomach on it, and cauſe them to vomit it up by true repentance.

2. The filthineſs of the ſoul by ſin, is never duly ſeen, till it appear ſo ingrained as nothing but the blood of Chriſt can waſh it off. They have but ſlight thoughts of the filth of ſin, that think it can be carried off by prayers, confeſſions, tears, and outward reformation; therefore the Spirit carries the elect beyond all theſe to the laver of Chriſt's blood. Hence David prayed, Pſal. li. 2. 'Waſh me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanſe 'me from my ſin.' There only is their merit and efficacy ſufficient to waſh out the pollution.

2. Whoſoever truly come to Chriſt by faith, they come to him for ſanctification, as well as juſtification, that they may be waſhed from the filth of ſin by him, as well as freed from the guilt of ſin through him. Hence faith is a coming to the waters, and that to be waſhed in them, Zech xiii. 1. It is but falſe faith that looks to Chriſt for freedom from guilt and the wrath of God, and not for conformity to God in holineſs.

For to ſtand off from Chriſt, and uniting with him by believing on him, till one has made himſelf clean and fit for Chriſt, is the work of a falſe heart, marring the ſoul's waſhing; not the work of the Spirit, carrying on the waſhing of the ſoul. For it is the work of the Spirit to put the unclean ſoul in the laver, uniting it to Chriſt, that it may be made clean. Therefore let no pollution of ſin keep you back from Chriſt; but let the conſideration of it drive you forward to him; and the greater it is, ye have the more need to make ſpeed, and unite more cloſely with Chriſt.

5. Whoſoever are united to Chriſt by the Spirit, are ſanctified perſons, truly regenerate, new creatures: 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be in Chriſt he is a new creature: 'old things are paſt away; behold, all things are become 'new.' In vain do men pretend to be members of Chriſt, while they remain unſanctified in their nature and life: Can one be united to Chriſt in whom the fulneſs of grace is lodged, and yet there be no communication of grace from him to them? or can there be ſuch a communication, and yet they not be renewed after his image? and if a new nature, muſt there not be a new life?

6. laſtly, True Chriſtianity is in its own nature a progreſſive thing, going towards perfection. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Phil. iii. 12. 'Not as though I had already at-'tained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, 'if that I may apprehend that for which alſo I am appre-'hended of Chriſt Jeſus.' It is a moſt diſmal ſign, where a perſon having, as he thinks, embraced Chriſt for ſalvation, and ſo ſecured himſelf for eternity, is no further careful to advance in practical religion, but continues eaſy, being at a ſtand; ſeeing 'the path of the juſt is as the 'ſhining light that ſhineth more and more unto the per-'fect day,' Prov. iv. 18. It is true, a real believer may not only be at a ſtand for a while, but may be going back: but it is of the nature of grace, as of a ſeed, or the morning light, to go forward and increaſe, till it come to perfection, John iv. 14. This is the reſult of the continued application of the blood of Chriſt to the believer by the Spirit. Therefore obſerve whether ye grow or not.

Thirdly, Chriſt waſheth ſinners through faith. Hence the apoſtle ſpeaks of 'purifying the heart by faith;' and of being 'ſent to open mens eyes, and to turn them from 'darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto 'God, that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and in-'heritance among them which are ſanctified by faith that 'is in Chriſt.' And faith has that place in the waſhing of defiled ſouls, that the hand of the party waſhed hath in the waſhing of himſelf, under the management of the principal waſher. For faith is the hand of the ſoul, John i. 12. And in the ſpiritual waſhing it is active. The ſoul being firſt paſſively waſhed by the Spirit, waſheth itſelf by faith; being put into the laver by the Spirit, it applies the water by faith, 2 Cor. vii. 1. Yet Chriſt by his Spirit is ſtill the principal cauſe of the waſhing; foraſmuch as he both works faith in the ſoul, and then by new influences puts it in exercife: Phil. ii. 13. 'For it is God 'which worketh in us, both to will and to do of his good 'pleaſure.' And ſo faith is the inſtrumental cauſe of our waſhing from ſin, Acts xv. 9.

Now, the efficacy of faith in the waſhing of the ſoul lies in theſe following things, under theſe two heads.

1. It is the eye of the ſoul in that matter, and ſo it is an impulſive cauſe moving the ſinner to waſh away his ſin, Gal. ii. 16.; and is ſuppoſed in ſuch calls, as that, Iſa. i. 16. Waſh ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well. Now, by the eye of faith,

1ſt, The man diſcerns his pollution, that he is all over defiled and unlike God: Iſa. lxiv. 6. 'We are all as an 'unclean thing, and all our righteouſneſſes are as filthy 'rags, and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities, 'like the wind, have taken us away.' He looks into the glaſs of the word, which is a repreſentation of God's holineſs, and ſo repreſents the ſinner as vile and loathſome. The man believes the repreſentation to be true, and ſo cries out, as Job xl. 4. 'Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I 'anſwer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.' This glaſs is held to the eyes of others; but being unbelievers, they ſee not their univerſal pollution for all it. But thus the believer ſees the need of waſhing.

2dly, He diſcerns the depth of the ſtain, that it can be waſhed out by no human art. Faith brings, from the teſtimony of the word, that report into the ſoul, Jer. ii. 22. 'For though thou waſh thee with nitre, and take thee 'much ſoap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, 'ſaith the Lord God.' Unbelievers are ruined in their pollution for want of this; they ſee not how deep their defilement lies; ſo they think their own nitre and ſoap will do their buſineſs, that Abana and Pharpar may cleanſe the leper, as well as any other water, Hoſ. v. 13. But faith ſees them all phyſicians of no value: and ſo the believer ſees the need of another laver than any of them.

3dly, He diſcerns the ill of his pollution on the one hand, and the good of waſhing on the other. By faith the man is perſuaded of the deſtructive nature of ſin, and its contrariety to God's nature and will; and he is perſuaded of the beauty and excellency of holineſs, or purification from ſin. The one he ſees in the glaſs of the law, its threatenings and commands; the other in the glaſs of the goſpel, in the face of Jeſus. And theſe are a ſpur to incite him to ſeek to be waſhed, Luke xv. 17, 18.

4thly, He diſcerns the laver, Chriſt crucified, Iſ. xlv. 22. By the help of the glaſs of the goſpel, he takes up Chriſt's blood, as the only laver for unclean ſouls. And by faith the unclean ſoul diſcerns Chriſt the laver.

(1.) As an efficacious laver in all caſes, 1 John i. 7. 'The blood of Jeſus Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin.' The man believes that Chriſt is able to waſh out the deepeſt ſtain, to make the filthieſt ſoul clean, Iſ. i. 18. 'Tho' 'your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; 'though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool.' This is neceſſary, as appears in the caſe of the blind men, Matth. xi. 28, 29. 'Jeſus ſaith unto them, Believe ye 'that I am able to do this? they ſaid unto him, Yea, 'Lord. Then touched he their eyes, ſaying, According 'to your faith be it unto you.'

(2.) As an open laver in its own caſe, Zech. xiii. 1. 'In that day, there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe 'of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin 'and uncleanneſs.' Heb. xi. 6. 'But without faith it is 'impoſſible to pleaſe him: for he that cometh to God, 'muſt believe that he is.' This is believing the goſpel, one's warrant to come to Chriſt, without which none can come. For if one ſhould look on the fountain as open to all the world, but ſealed to him, this would mar his acceſs to it, Jer. ii. 25. Thou ſaidſt, There is no hope. No, for I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go. But faith ſays, Pſal. lxv. 3. Iniquities prevail againſt me: as for our tranſgreſſions thou ſhalt purge them away.

2. Faith is the hand of the ſoul in that matter, and ſo it is an inſtrumental cauſe of waſhing away ſin.

1ſt, The ſoul embraceth Chriſt, and unites with him: John i. 12. 'As many as received him, to them gave he 'power to become the ſons of God, even to them that 'believe on his name.' The ſoul, at its firſt union with Chriſt, being plunged into the laver by the Spirit, doth ſpread out itſelf therein: as one who having jumped into the water to ſwim, ſpreads out his body in it, and embraces the water as it were. Chriſt having apprehended the ſoul by his Spirit, and united it paſſively to himſelf; the ſoul again apprehends him by faith, and actively unites with him. Here faith brings in the application of his blood, the effect of which is ſanctification.

2dly, The ſoul cleaveth to Chriſt, and abideth in him, all along till death: Heb. x. 39. 'But we are not of them 'who draw back unto perdition: but of them that be-'lieve, to the ſaving of the ſoul.' It is never extinguiſhed again in the ſoul: though its gripe may be ſlacked, yet it never lets it quite go: Luke xxii. 32. 'But I have 'prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not.' Hereby it brings in the continued application, for progreſſive ſanctification, John xv. 5. And the ſtronger its gripes are at any time, the more plentiful application is there of Chriſt's blood to the ſoul; as the ſtronger the child ſucks, he draws out the more milk, Iſa. lxvi. 11. Hence he that has the ſtrongeſt faith, hath the holieſt heart and life.

3dly, The ſoul cleaveth to Chriſt in death. When the body is falling down, the man ſtill cleaves to and abides in Chriſt, and ſo dying in faith, dies in the Lord, Heb. xi. 13. Faith keeps the grip of Chriſt, while the ſoul is loſing grip of the body; and as the body drops off, it brings in a full application of Chriſt's blood, which perfects ſanctification. So the ſoul drops the remains of ſin together with the body.

Now, the efficacy of faith for the waſhing of the ſoul, lies in truſt: and as it truſts it purifies; for therein lies its nature, and therefore its efficacy comes that way. And the object of that truſt is twofold.

(1.) The object of this truſt is real, viz. the word. Faith truſts or believes the word as firm and infallible truth. Hence the apoſtle ſpeaks of the belief of the truth. Faith truſts or believes particularly the word of the promiſe of the goſpel, holding out to ſinners the benefit of ſanctification as well as other benefits; ſuch as that promiſe, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. ‘I will ſprinkle clean water upon ‘you, and ye ſhall be clean: from all your filthineſs, and ‘from all your idols will I cleanſe you.’ This truſt of the word of the goſpel is our obedience to the truth, wherein the ſoul ſubjects itſelf wholly to the truth of God's word, believing it over the belly of all objections, ſaying, as Mic. vii. 19. He will turn again, he will have compaſſion upon us: he will ſubdue our iniquities: and thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depth of the ſea.

(2.) The object of this truth is perſonal, viz. Chriſt himſelf. The ſoul truſts on Chriſt for the waſhing of it. Hence is that invitation, Iſa. xlv. 22. ‘Look unto me, ‘and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the earth: for I am ‘God, and there is none elſe.’ And hence is the language of faith, Pſal. lxv. 3. ‘Iniquities prevail againſt ‘me: as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them ‘away.’ It is the very nature of faith, to renounce all confidence in other things, and to truſt to him alone for waſhing of the ſoul. Hence Paul ſaith, Phil. iii. 3. ‘We ‘are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the ſpirit, ‘rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the ‘fleſh.’ In the word of promiſe he is held forth as ‘the ‘Lamb of God taking away the ſin of the world,’ as made ſanctification to us: and faith is a truſt or reliance on him as ſuch to us. But more particularly,

Faith's truſt on Chriſt is on him as crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2. ‘I determined not to know any thing, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, ‘and him crucified.’ While we look on him ſimply as God, we ſee his juſtice flaming againſt ſin, and barring all ſanctifying influences: Heb. xii. 29. ‘For our God ‘is a conſuming fire.’ But looking on him as God-man, by his obedience and death making ſatisfaction for ſin, we have a fit object of truſt for our ſanctification: for there we ſee a fulneſs of merit for purging away ſin, Rom. vi. 6. ‘Knowing this, that our old man is cruci‘fied with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, ‘that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.’

Hence faith has an eye to the blood of Chriſt, in the point of ſanctification, as well as juſtification. Hence the apoſtle ſaith, Rom. iii. 25. ‘God hath ſet him forth ‘to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to de‘clare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins.’ Heb. ix. 14. ‘The blood of Chriſt, who, through the eternal ‘Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, ſhall purge ‘your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living ‘God:’ that being the immediate cauſe of our waſhing, as the blood of his ſacrifice ſprinkled on us for our purification, Heb. xii. 24.

Now, this truſt for waſhing, placed on Chriſt held forth to us in the word of promiſe, which is that wherein the efficacy of faith for ſanctifying us inſtrumentally lies, may be taken up in theſe four things.

[1.] The ſoul's turning its eye of expectation of purification, from off all things elſe, and fixing it on Chriſt crucified, Iſa. xlv. 22. ‘Look unto me, and be ye ſav‘ed, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there ‘is none elſe.’ Secure ſinners, indifferent about holineſs, look no where for it; they deſire it not. Awakened ſinners look for it to phyſicians of no value, ſuch as their own endeavours, reſolutions, &c. But faith looks off from all creatures, unto Chriſt alone, for it, as the woman with the bloody iſſue did, Mark v. 25.——28. that virtue may come from him for purifying.

[2.] Applying the promiſe of ſpiritual waſhing to itſelf: 2 Cor. vii. 1. ‘Having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe ‘ourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, per‘fecting holineſs in the fear of God.’ The word holds forth the promiſe of cleanſing from ſin, to ſinners indefinitely, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. ‘I will ſprinkle clean water ‘upon you, and ye ſhall be clean: from all your filthineſs, ‘and from all your idols will I cleanſe you.’ Faith catches hold of it, and brings it home, Pſal. lxv. 3. ‘Ini‘quities prevail againſt me: as for our tranſgeſſions, ‘thou ſhalt purge them away.’ Mic. vii. 19. ‘He will ‘turn again, he will have compaſſion upon us: he will ‘ſubdue our iniquities: and thou wilt caſt all their ſins ‘into the depths of the ſea.’ It pleads the promiſe, and hangs by it. Particularly it appropriates the privilege of legal freedom, Rom. vi. 10, 11. ‘For in that he died, ‘he died unto ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth ‘unto God.’ Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be ‘dead indeed unto ſin; but alive unto God through ‘Jeſus Chriſt our Lord:’ ſo that thereby the ſoul looks on itſelf as dead to ſin, Rom. vi. 2. ‘How ſhall we that ‘are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?’

[3.] Relying on the merit of Chriſt for the out-making of the promiſe of ſanctification, Pſal. li. 7. ‘Purge me ‘with hyſſop, and I ſhall be clean: waſh me, and I ſhall ‘be whiter than ſnow.’ 1 John i. 7. ‘The blood of Jeſus ‘Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin.’ The ſoul ſees it is a great privilege as well as a duty, and looks that God will make it holy, for Chriſt's ſake, foraſmuch as he died for that very end, Tit. ii. 14. For true faith has the ſame reliance on Chriſt for ſanctification as for juſtification, knowing that the one is the purchaſe of the Redeemer's blood, even as the other.

[4.] laſtly, Acquieſcing in the faithfulneſs of God in his word. Faith receives the word of promiſe for ſanctification; and ſays, with Mary, Luke i. 38. ‘Be it un‘to me according to thy word.’ The purification of the ſoul from ſin has ſo many difficulties about it, that the ſinner truly ſenſible accounts it impoſſible in reſpect of all created power: but ſince God has ſaid it, the ſoul acquieſces in his word, judging him faithful who hath promiſed.

This faith or truſt purifies from ſin, according to the ſcripture, and the experience of the ſaints: Acts xv. 9. ‘Purifying their hearts by faith.’ Hereto agrees the Pſalmiſt's experience, Pſal. xxviii. 7. ‘The Lord is my ‘ſtrength and my ſhield, my heart truſted in him, and ‘I am helped; therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth, and ‘with my ſong will I praiſe him.’ And ſo does that of thoſe to whom Peter wrote, 1 epiſt. i. 22. ‘Ye have pu‘rified your ſouls in obeying the truth through the Spi‘rit.’ Yea, by this truſt, joy is brought into the ſoul, ver. 8, 9. ‘Whom having not ſeen, ye love; in whom ‘though now ye ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoice ‘with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; receiving the ‘end of your faith, even the ſalvation of your ſouls.’ Rom. xv. 13. ‘Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and ‘peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope thro' the ‘power of the Holy Ghoſt.’ And that preſuppoſeth the purging of the ſoul from ſin, Iſa xxxiii. 24. ‘The inha‘bitant ſhall not ſay, I am ſick: the people that dwell ‘therein ſhall be forgiven their iniquity.’

Queſt. How has that truſt that efficacy? Anſ. By the appointment of God. How had the looking to the braſen ſerpent ſuch efficacy as to cure the ſtung Iſraelites, but by God's appointment? So is the caſe here: John iii. 14, 15. ‘As Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, ‘ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up: that whoſoever ‘believeth on him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal ‘life.’ The nature and efficacy of ſaving faith may be learned in part from that of the faith of miracles, they agreeing in one general kind, Matth. ix. 28, 29. ‘Jeſus ‘ſaith unto the blind men, Believe ye that I am able to ‘do this? they ſaid unto him, Yea Lord. Then touched ‘he their eyes, ſaying, According to your faith be it un‘to you.’ God has made choice of faith for that end, and given it a word of appointment, Mark xvi. 16. ‘He that believeth, ſhall be ſaved.’ And the appointment is, that the ſoul ſo truſting in Chriſt, ſhall be ſanctified by the Spirit with his blood, Gal. iii. 2. And there is a fitneſs in the appointment of this as a mean: for,

(1.) Faith truſts the word of God, and the faithfulneſs of God requires that it be accompliſhed to them that truſt it, Rom. ix. 33. ‘ Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed.’ If you would have a benefit from an honeſt man, you cannot take a more effectual way to obtain it, than having got his word for it, to truſt it, plead it, and hold him to it.

(2.) Chriſt himſelf with all his benefits, comes to us in the word. Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. ‘ The righteouſneſs which is of faith ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Say not in thine heart, who ſhall aſcend into heaven? (that is, to bring Chriſt down from above) or who ſhall deſcend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Chriſt again from the dead): but what ſaith it? The word is nigh to thee, even in thy mouth and in thine heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach.’ Truſting the word is the only way of receiving it farther than into the ears, at leaſt as it is a promiſe. Receiving the word by faith, we receive Chriſt, and conſequently the purifying virtue of his blood, with himſelf, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. ‘ For this cauſe alſo thank we God, without ceaſing, becauſe when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe.’

(3.) There is nothing ſo adapted to the end of glorifying free grace, as this truſt of faith is; and that is the great end of the goſpel: Rom. iv. 16. ‘ Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace.’

I ſhall ſhut up this branch with a few inferences.

Inf. 1. It is not true faith that leaves the ſoul ſtill unholy, lying in the filth of ſin. Unwaſhed ſinners are unbelievers certainly: Tit. i. 15. ‘ Unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled.’ In vain will ye pleaſe yourſelves with a conceit of your believing in Chriſt, while your pretended faith brings in no ſanctifying influences into your ſouls: James ii. 14. ‘ What doth it profit though a man ſay he hath faith, and hath not works? can faith ſave him?’ True faith hath a double effect.

1ſt, Within, faith purifies the heart, and makes it evangelically clean, Acts xv. 9. It breaks the reigning power of luſts within, maintains a combat againſt them, ſets the ſoul to approve itſelf to God in the inner man, where no eye ſees, and longs for and preſſeth toward perfection.

2dly, Without, faith works by love, in all duties of piety towards God, juſtice and mercy towards our neighbour, Gal. v. 6. ‘ For in Jeſus Chriſt, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith which worketh by love.’ It is a principle within, that caſts abroad its cleanſing efficacy, purifying mens lives.

Inf. 2. Then whoſoever are really waſhed from their ſins, as they will uſe means of holineſs, yet they will be carried beyond them all to Chriſt for it. They will be conſcientious in the practice of holy duties, and ſo go beyond the careleſs; and yet they will not reſt in them, but quit them all in point of confidence, and ſo go beyond hypocrites: Philip. iii. 3. ‘ We are the circumciſion which worſhip God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.’ The ſpouſe went this little further, and found her beloved, Cant. iii.

Inf. 3. laſtly, The only way to be holy, is to believe in Chriſt. In this way all the members of Chriſt are ſanctified; they are ſanctified through faith, Acts xxvi. 18. And there is no true holineſs in ſubjects capable of faith, without it, John xv. 5. ‘ Without me ye can do nothing.’ So if the ſoul be brought to faith in Chriſt, it will be made holy: if not, all other means will be but waſhing a blackmoor, that will never become white.

Thus far of thoſe things which Chriſt uſeth more immediately for waſhing of ſinners.

SECONDLY, There are other means which Chriſt uſeth for that purpoſe, more mediately: of which briefly.

Firſt, Chriſt waſheth ſinners by the word, John xv. 3. ‘ Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you.’ And hence he prays to his Father, John xvii. 17. ‘ Sanctify them through thy truth.’ The word written, read, and preached, is the great external mean of waſhing ſinners; and is effectual by the energy of the Spirit, being received by faith. The uſe of the word in this matter, lies in theſe things following.

1. It is the glaſs wherein the ſinner diſcerns his filthineſs. The word of the law is that glaſs: Rom. iii. 20. ‘ By the law is the knowledge of ſin.’ It repreſents to men their ſinful nature, hearts, and lives; and when Chriſt waſhes a ſinner, he holds that glaſs to his eyes to convince him of ſin, by the Spirit. The Pſalmiſt recommends it to young men, Pſal. cxix. 9. ‘ Wherewith ſhall a young man cleanſe his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.’ And they that look not into the word for this end, care not for waſhing.

2. It is a ſpur to waſhing, an external impulſive cauſe by the ſtrong motives whereby it preſſeth the ſinner to waſh. Here the law preſſeth him by its threatenings and curſes againſt the unclean; the goſpel preſſeth with the excellency and unſpeakable advantage of waſhing.

3. It is the key that ſets open the fountain ‘ opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin and for uncleanneſs. It is opened by the preaching of the goſpel; which ſhews ſinners, that whatever be their pollution, they are welcome to it. The voice of Jeſus Chriſt in the goſpel is, Behold me, Iſa. lxv. 1. i. e. ‘ Here I am.’ Thereby our Lord unlocks his treaſures, laying them open to the view of ſinners.

4. It is the vehicle of the blood and Spirit of Chriſt, whereby ſinners may be waſhed, receiving the word by faith, John vi. 63. ‘ It is the ſpirit that quickeneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing: the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.’ The goſpel is called the miniſtration of the Spirit, and righteouſneſs, inaſmuch as thereby Chriſt communicates his Spirit to ſinners, and brings righteouſneſs to them. Hence receiving the word by faith, the ſoul is caſt into the mould of it, Rom. vi. 17.: for it is able to ſave the ſoul, Jam. i. 22. and works effectually in it, to the cleanſing of the ſoul, John xv. 3. Now ye are clean thro' the word that I have ſpoken to you.

I ſhall ſhut up this branch alſo with a few inferences.

Inf. 1. Saints and ſinners need the word; foraſmuch as they are both defiled, and need waſhing; the one to be begun on them, and the other to be carried on. And they that can live contented without it, are content to lie ſtill in their filthineſs; and will need no more to ruin them, but to get their will.

Inf. 2. They that have an enmity at the word, appearing in their averſion to, and neglect of it, are neither waſhed, nor deſire to be waſhed: Job xxi. 14. ‘ Therefore they ſay unto God, Depart from us; for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways.’ The reaſon of their enmity againſt it, is their love to their luſts, to which it is an enemy: on the contrary, they whoſe hearts are turned againſt ſin, are turned towards the word, as a mean for purging it away: John iii. 20, 21. ‘ For every one that doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved.’

Inf. 3. Their ſoul's caſe is very hopeleſs, who get no good of the word: and theſe are all ſuch who get no conviction by it, or are not ſtirred up by it to ſeek to be purged from their filthineſs, who are not pointed to Chriſt as the only laver, and never partake of his blood and Spirit, by it. Theſe are they on whom the great mean of waſhing from ſin is ineffectual; of whom the Lord ſays, Ezek. xxxiv. 13. ‘ In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs: becauſe I have purged thee, and thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more, till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee.’

Inf. 4. laſtly, They do not believe the word, who are not cleanſed in heart and life thereby, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. ‘ When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe.’ If the word were received by faith, it could not miſs to be ſanctifying; but beholding the unholineſs of men, we may cry out, as Iſa. liii. 1.

‘ Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?’ The word preached is not believed, therefore it brings not forth fruit.

Secondly, Chriſt waſheth ſinners by the ſacraments, Eph. v. 26. Hence baptiſm is ſaid to ſave us, 2 Pet. iii. 21. The ſacraments are external means of ſpiritual waſhing, and are made effectual by faith; but no otherwiſe in ſubjects capable of believing; for God hath not communicated the virtue of ſanctifying to the elements, as to natural cauſes which work neceſſarily, 1 Pet. iii. 21.

The uſe of the ſacraments to this purpoſe, lies here.

1. They point out the laver wherein we may be waſhed, as being repreſenting ſigns of Chriſt's ſanctifying blood. 1 Cor. xi. 16. ‘ The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt?’ They ſet the laver before our eyes, and call us to ſee our need of it. Therein Chriſt is held forth crucified for us, his blood ſhed for our waſhing.

2. They confirm our right in it, and our welcome to it, as ſeals. Hence the apoſtle ſaith of Abraham, Rom. iv. 11. ‘ He received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith which he had yet being uncircumciſed: that he might be the father of all them that believe, although they be not circumciſed; that righteouſneſs might be imputed to them alſo. Chriſt's blood is moſt precious; but there is a grant of it made to us in the word, which the ſacraments ſeal. The word ſays, John iii. 16. ‘ God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life:’ the ſacraments ſeal it, that ſo we may be excited and encouraged to come boldly, and make uſe of it for our ſanctification.

3. They preſent, exhibit, and apply it to believers, 1 Cor. xi. 24. As by earth and ſtone delivered to a man upon a legal right, he is inſeft of the houſe or land; ſo, by the ſacraments received by faith, Chriſt and all his benefits are applied to us, for our cleanſing.

An inference ſhall ſhut up this branch.

Inf. Hence we may try, whether the ſacraments be effectual to us, or not; whether we have believingly received them or not. While people are never the more holy, for all the ſacraments they receive, their diſeaſe is the more confirmed, their filthineſs is the more fixed on them. But when they ſtir up the ſoul to an uſe-making of Chriſt for ſanctification, and men get a cubit added to their ſpiritual ſtature, it is a good ſign.

Thirdly and Laſtly, Chriſt waſheth ſinners by afflictions, Iſa. xxvii. 9. ‘ By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin.’ They alſo are but external means, and cannot of themſelves purify. But the Spirit makes uſe of them for cleanſing of ſinners. There are two ways of purging filthineſs, by water, and by fire; Iſa. iv. 4. ‘ When the Lord ſhall have waſhed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and ſhall have purged the blood of Jeruſalem from the midſt thereof, by the ſpirit of judgment, and by the ſpirit of burning.’ Afflictions are God's fire for that end. Their uſe in the waſhing is ſixfold.

1. Afflictions are memorials of our ſin, and ſo put us in mind to look back on our defilements; as they were to Joſeph's brethren, when they ſaid, Gen. xlii. 11. ‘ We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoul, when he beſought us; and we would not hear: therefore is this diſtreſs come upon us.’ The proſperous ſinner wallows at eaſe in his filthineſs; but when God lays his afflicting hand on him, the ſharper it is, conſcience is readily the more awakened out of its ſleep. And it will readily read the ſin out of the puniſhment.

2. Afflictions are a glaſs, wherein one ſees the loathſomeneſs of ſin in the ſight of God. While the ſinner proſpers in his courſe, he cannot think that God is diſpleaſed at it; as the Lord himſelf ſaith to the ſinner, Pſal. l. 21. ‘ Theſe things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence: thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thyſelf.’ But affliction is ſuch a token of God's diſpleaſure againſt ſin, that when it comes, the ſinner alters his thoughts; ſees it loathſome before God, and therefore loathſome in itſelf; which makes him anxious to be waſhed.

3. Afflictions are a fire that melt the paint and fairding off the defiling objects in the world, Jer. ii. 36, 37. ‘ Why gaddeſt thou about ſo much to change thy way? thou alſo ſhalt be aſhamed of Egypt, as thou waſt aſhamed of Aſſyria. Yea, thou ſhalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head: for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou ſhalt not proſper in them.’ Where was the excellency of the thirty pieces when God's hand was lifted up againſt Judas for them? The beauty of former luſts melts away, when a man is laid on a ſick bed: and the bewitching creature then loſes all its charms.

4. Afflictions are a bridle whereby men are reſtrained from defiling themſelves more, and are brought to a ſtand in a defiling courſe, Hoſ. ii. 6. Behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall, that ſhe ſhall not find her paths. They ſerve to take off the edge of corrupt affections, and make them languiſh: whereby the ſinner becomes more pliable to counſel from the word.

5. Afflictions are occaſional cauſes of ſinners thinking of, and going to the fountain to waſh, Hoſ. v. 15. ‘ I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and ſeek my face: in their affliction they will ſeek me early.’ How many are there to whom afflictions have been the bleſſed means of their turning ſerious? Such a rod they met with, or they had gone on like the wild aſs on the mountains, ſnuffing up the wind.

6. laſtly, Afflictions are a ſharp wind to blow up the fire of grace where it is, and particularly to excite faith, whereby the ſoul is waſhed. Hence the ſpouſe prayeth, Cant. iv. 16. Awake, O north wind, and come, thou ſouth; blow upon my garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out. In their proſperity people can fetch in their comfort by ſenſe; but in affliction, when created ſtreams are dried up, they muſt fetch it in by faith, or elſe want it.

Two inferences ſhall conclude this branch.

Inf. 1. Let this cauſe us take afflictions kindly; ſince they are means by which Chriſt waſheth us. Though the water be cold, yet we endure it, that we may get our hands clean. Though medicines ſicken us, we blame not the phyſician, becauſe they are for our health. Why ſhould we be angry at our God afflicting us, ſince the fruit deſigned is to purge away ſin?

Inf. 2. Let us, in all our afflictions, ſeek purification from our ſin, and know they are not effectual unleſs they have a ſanctifying efficacy on us. They are indeed of the nature of fire, firſt cauſing the ſcum to come above, but next throwing it off. They diſcover much of the corruption of the heart, that otherwiſe would be latent: but if they humble the ſoul under a ſenſe of ſinfulneſs, and ſend it to Chriſt for purging, they are not in vain.

I now proceed to the ſecond general head, namely,

II. To conſider the unwaſhed or unſanctified ſinner's having no part with Chriſt.

In diſcuſſing this head, I ſhall ſhew,

1. What the unwaſhed ſinner's having no part with Chriſt ſuppoſeth; and,

2. Wherein it lies.

FIRST, We ſhall ſhew what the unwaſhed ſinner having no part with Chriſt ſuppoſeth. It ſuppoſeth,

1. That Chriſt himſelf is happy. He is not only happy as he is God, who is therefore ſtyled God bleſſed forever; but as he is Mediator, the head of the body, the church. Pſal. lxxii. 17. ‘ Men ſhall be bleſſed in him, all nations ſhall call him bleſſed.’ All mankind were brought to miſery and ruin by Adam's fall: but the man Chriſt was an exception from that rule. He was happy from the moment of the incarnation, all along, notwithſtanding what he ſuffered; and from his reſurrection and aſcenſion his happineſs was completed, Philip. ii. 19. Wherefore ‘ God alſo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name.’ Heb. x. 13. ‘ From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footſtool.’ There are two things wherein Chriſt is completely happy.

1*ſt*, In having fully done the work he undertook to do. John xvii. 4. ‘ I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do.’ He had a great work to do, for his father's glory and the ſalvation of ſinner's. It was the hardeſt work that ever was taken in hand. All hardſhips from heaven, earth, and hell, met together upon him; and his work was to go through them all in a courſe of perfect obedience. And now it is done; he was born holy, lived righteous, ſatisfied completely by his death; now he is got to the joy ſet before him: Rom. vi. 9. 'Chriſt being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.' Rev. iii. 21: 'To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with my Father in his throne.'

2dly, In having received the reward of his works. Our Lord, 'for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God.' Heb. xii. 2. Never was there ſuch a reward of work, as Chriſt has received; it bears proportion to the work, which was of infinite value. All the promiſes of the covenant, are now in his hand. They are won by him, and he is put in poſſeſſion of the things promiſed, which make an inexhauſtible treaſure. Hence the apoſtle ſpeaks of the unſearchable riches of Chriſt.

2. There is enough in him to make others happy too, Col. i. 19. 'For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.' There is a fulneſs of a fountain in him, whereby others may be ſupplied from him, and yet he have no lack. The firſt Adam was a ſpring of ruin to all his poſterity; but the goſpel points out Chriſt the ſecond Adam as a ſpring of happineſs for wretched ſinners.

3. Sinners may have part with Chriſt in his fulneſs; it is lodged in him to be communicated. Matth. xi. 27, 28. All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him. Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. He is the bowl on the top of the candleſtick, the immediate receptacle of the oil, from whence it is conveyed to the ſeven lamps. Joſeph was ſent to Egypt, and exalted there, to provide for Jacob's family in the dearth; ſo Chriſt is great Steward of heaven, for the behoof of poor ſinners; that having all in his hand, they may be happy in having part with him.

4. All that are ſanctified are happy in having part with Chriſt, Col. ii. 9, 10. 'For in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily.' They have part in his work, by imputation; even as they had part with Adam in his ſin, Rom. v. 19. 'For as by one man's diſobedience, many were made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous.' They have part in his reward, by a real communication thereof to them; even as they had part with Adam in the corruption of his nature, John i. 26. 'And of his fulneſs, have all we received, and grace for grace.' 1 Cor. xv. 22. 'For as in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive.' This is but imperfect as yet; but it is ſo begun that it will undoubtedly be perfected. But ſuch as it is, their ſanctification is not the cauſe of it, but it is the cauſe of their ſanctification. 1 John i. 3. 7. 'That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us: and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.'

5. laſtly, Unholy ſinners are miſerable in the want of part with Chriſt. They are 'without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world,' Eph. ii. 12. Therefore this ſtruck Peter, when he ſaw how deep it drew: for he ſaid, Acts iv. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved. It is true, all that hear the goſpel are externally called to the fellowſhip of his Son; but moſt men love the fellowſhip of the world, and will not take part with Chriſt. So they are without it, though it lies open to them; and to each one of them may be ſaid, Acts viii. 21. 'Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right with God.' Mean while their unholineſs does not bar them from having part with Chriſt; but their want of part with Chriſt keeps them unholy.

SECONDLY, I ſhall ſhow wherein the unwaſhed ſinner's having no part with Chriſt does conſiſt. This will appear, in taking a view, 1. Of Chriſt's work; and, 2. Of his reward: in neither of which the unholy have part with him.

FIRST, Chriſt is happy, in that he has done out the work he undertook for the ſalvation of ſinners; and all that are his have part with him therein; it is imputed to them, as if they had done it, Gal. ii. 20. And,

1. He has been born holy, and anſwered the demand of the law for holineſs of nature, by his bringing a holy human nature into the world with him. Hence he is called that holy thing born. Heb. vii. 26. 'For ſuch an high prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners.' So that demand of the law for ſalvation for all that are his, is anſwered, for they are ſaid to be complete in him, and to be circumciſed in him. The law cannot ſtop their ſalvation for want of a perfectly holy nature; for they have part in the holineſs of his nature, and that holy nature is communicated to them.

But unholy ſinners have no part with Chriſt in this matter: the holineſs of his nature is not imputed to them. There is a holy birth of the Second Adam, to take away the guilt of ſin that we are born in; but ſuch as are not waſhed by Chriſt, from their ſin, have no ſhare in it.

The evidence of this is, that whoſoever hath part in the holineſs of Chriſt's birth by imputation, are really born again in their own perſons; becauſe Chriſt's holy birth is the meritorious cauſe of the new birth of his members. 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away: behold all things are become new.' Col. ii. 11. 'In whom alſo ye are circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands, in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, by the circumciſion of Chriſt.' Now the unholy are not born again: therefore they have no part with Chriſt's holy birth: and ſo they have nothing to anſwer the law's demands.

2. Chriſt has lived a righteous life, in perfect obedience to the law's commands, Philip. ii. 8. 'He became obedient unto death.' He did it as a publick perſon: and all his obey in Chriſt, as they ſinned in Adam, Rom. viii. 3, 4. 'For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh: that the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh but after the Spirit.' So the law's demands of obedience as the condition of life, is anſwered as to them; their part in Chriſt's obedience anſwers it fully.

But the unholy have no part with Chriſt in the obedience of his life. For Chriſt's obedience being meritorious of our ſanctification, the want of the latter is a plain evidence of no part of the former; and that upon the ground of juſtice, which requires the delivering of the thing purchaſed, upon the application of the price. If ye have obeyed legally in Chriſt, ye obey really in your own perſons; for Chriſt's obedience hath a conforming virtue, in thoſe to whom it is imputed, Rom. viii. 29. 'For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son.' 1 John ii. 6. 'He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo to walk, even as he walked.' Inherent righteouſneſs follows imputed righteouſneſs. An unholy life argues no part in Chriſt: there is a bar between heaven and the unholy.

3. He has ſuffered, to the full ſatiſfaction of the law in its threatening for ſin, Phil. ii. 8. 'He humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto the death.' Gal. iii. 13. 'Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us; for it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree.' And Chriſt ſuffering as a public perſon, all that are his ſuffered in him. They were legally crucified with him, died with him, and were buried with him. So the law's demand is anſwered for them, ſince they have part with Chriſt.

But the unholy have no part with Chriſt in his ſufferings. An evidence whereof is their not being conformed to him in his death, Phil. iii. 10. The death of Chriſt will infallibly prove the death of ſin, when one has part with Chriſt in it: Rom. vi. 6. 'Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.' Gal. v. 24. 'They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts.' As ſure as Chriſt died for the ſins of the elect, they will die to ſin that have communion with him in it: for death made its way from the members to the head, till it laid him in the grave; ſo the merit of his death will make its way from the head to them to their ſanctification. So that demand of the law lies on their heads unanſwered.

4. He has brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs. In what he was, did, and ſuffered, he fully ſatisfied the law's demand, coming up to an exact conformity thereto. This is the righteouſneſs he has wrought, ſufficient to cover every ſinner in the ſight of God, and to render him righteous. All that are his, have part with him in it, Pſal. xlv. 13. So they have a righteouſneſs that is law-biding.

But the unholy have no part with him in it. For wherever righteouſneſs imputed is on any man, inherent holineſs is in him. By the former ſatisfying the law, the ſtrength of ſin is taken away: ſo that the man cannot be living in ſin as formerly, Rom. vi. 2. 'How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?'

Secondly, Chriſt has received the reward of his work; and ſo he has an inexhauſtible treaſure: and all that are his have part with him in it.

1. Chriſt is riſen again from the dead. By the authority of the Father he is diſcharged from the grave; death is never to ſeize him more: Acts ii. 24. 'God raiſed him up, having looſed the pains of death: becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of it.' And all his have part with him in his reſurrection: Eph. ii. 6. 'God hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus.' But the unholy have no part with him in his reſurrection. For,

1ſt, They are ſtill dead in their ſins, while they live in them. Where is their part then in Chriſt's reſurrection? They that have part with him are riſen with him, by virtue of his reſurrection, the power of the reſurrection of the head raiſing the members from death in ſin, Col. ii. 12. Alas! the grave-cloaths of the ſins of the fleſh, which ye are not putting off, but keeping on, and the ties whereof are ſtill as faſt upon you as ever, ſpeak you deſtitute of any part with Chriſt in this matter.

2dly, They are ſtill members of the congregation of the dead, Eph. ii. 1, 2, 3. When our Lord roſe, he left the congregation of the dead in their graves; yea, he converſed not with the world thereafter, as before his death. And ſo, whenever a ſoul gets part with Chriſt, it leaves the world lying in wickedneſs, comes out from among them, and walks no more according to the courſe of this world. Hence the apoſtle ſaith, Rom. vi. 4, 5. 'We are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death; we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection.' What ground have they then to pretend to a part with him, that are not walking in newneſs of life, but according to the courſe of this world?

2. Chriſt is now aſcended up into glory, where he ſits at the Father's right hand. He aſcended into it, as a public perſon, to take poſſeſſion of it for us, Heb. vi. 20. And all his have part with him in it, as the members of the glory of the head: Eph. ii. 6. God hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus.

But the unholy have no part with him in it. For,

1ſt, They are yet lying in the filth of their natural ſtate, through original and actual ſin, all over defiled, Tit. i. 15. They may have worldly glory, ſuch as ariſeth from bravery, wealth, and honour; yea they may glory in wickedneſs, that is their ſhame. But there is no heavenly glory on any, but by ſanctifying grace, that only makes a glorious inſide, Pſal. xlv. 13. in ſo far as thereby the purity of the divine image is on the ſoul.

2dly, Neither is their heart there, nor are they making forward to it. Our Lord tells us, that 'where the treaſure is, there will the heart be alſo.' And therefore the apoſtle urges, Col. iii. 1, 2. to 'ſeek thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God;' to 'ſet our affections on things above, not on things on the earth.' What part then have they with Chriſt in his glory, whoſe affections are not on things above, but on the earth, who mind earthly things? They carry themſelves as natives of the world, not as pilgrims in it. Their great aim is, to compaſs deſigns of worldly profits and pleaſures, but not to be fitted for glory, 1 John iii. 3.

3. Chriſt has the Spirit of life and holineſs dwelling in him, as the head of his body myſtical. So the Spirit of life is in him, to be communicated; and it is the purchaſe of his death, Rev. iii. 1. 'He hath the ſeven Spirits;' anſwerable to the ſeven golden candleſticks; enough to quicken and actuate them all. Hence he is ſaid to quicken, John v. 21. 26. And all his have part with him therein, Phil. ii. 1. The ſame Spirit that is in the head, is in the members too, inſomuch that 'the Spirit of God dwells in them; and if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his.'

But the unholy have no part in his Spirit. For,

1ſt, He is the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of holineſs, ſo called not only from the work of ſanctification aſcribed peculiarly to him, but from the holineſs of his nature, in oppoſition to the unclean ſpirit, to atteſt all the works of God without himſelf, to be holy. So that in whomſoever he dwells, they muſt needs be made holy: Rom. viii. 2. 'For the law of the Spirit of life, in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made them free from the law of ſin and death.' Since then the unholy are under the law of ſin as the ſubjects thereof, and under the law of ſpiritual death, they have no part with Chriſt.

2dly, They have the ſpirit of the world in them, conforming them to the world, in their frame of heart, way, and walk. It is an unclean, unholy ſpirit, whereby they cannot reliſh nor ſavour the holy things of God; but things that are fleſhly, ſenſual, carnal, and earthly; not without a ſecret enmity at true holineſs, and cannot hold on in the way of God, as Caleb did, Numb. xiv. 24.

3dly, They live in the ſtate wherein Adam left them, without a ſaving change, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Adam was made a living ſoul, but Chriſt a quickening ſpirit. What men derive from Adam, they have; a natural life, a life of reaſon, gifts of knowledge, &c. But what men derive from Chriſt, they have not; they are not quickened by him with the Spirit of life unto God. But if they had part with Chriſt, they would be ſpiritually quickened ſouls; as having part with Adam, they are living ſouls.

4. There is a fulneſs of grace in the man Chriſt: Col. i. 19. 'For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.' John i. 14. 'The word was full of grace and truth.' Grace is given him without meaſure, and all that are his partake with him in it, it being in him as in the ſtore houſe; it is ſo poured on him as the head, that it runs down to the ſkirts of his garments.

But the unholy have no part with him in his grace. For, 1ſt, They are not partakers of the divine nature, that new nature derived from Chriſt, by the communication of grace from him into his members, whereby they eſcape the corruption of the world. Inſtead of that, the old nature reigns in them, which is enmity againſt God. The old man with his deeds is ſtill in his vigour, has not as yet got his deadly wound.

2dly, Whatever good may ſeem to be in them, it is but in ſome few particulars. There are ſeveral outs in their religion: they never make thorough work of it, Pſal. cxix. 6. They have not reſpect unto all God's commandments. They are never made new creatures; all things never become new with them. An evidence that they have no part in the grace of Chriſt; for then ſhould they have grace for grace.

3dly, They do not bear Chriſt's image; they are not like him in their ſpirit and walk; 1 John ii. 6. ‘He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked.’ They look like the old Adam, ſenſual, and averſe from God. How unlike the holy Jeſus, their own conſciences bear witneſs. But having part with Chriſt makes a perſon like him.

5. laſtly, Chriſt is anointed prophet, prieſt, and king of his church. Iſa. lxi. 1. ‘The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek, he ſent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound.’ And Peter ſays, Acts x. 38. ‘God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil, for God was with him.’ This is the honour put on him, to bear theſe offices, ſignified by his names, Meſſias and Chriſt, i. e. anointed. And as he is Chriſt, all that are his are Chriſtians, anointed with the ſame Spirit, Pſal. xlv. having part with him in his offices.

1ſt, Chriſt is a prophet: and all that are his, have part with him in his prophetical office, Pſal. cv. 15. They are let into the knowledge of the things of God by the Spirit. 1 John ii. 20. 27. ‘But ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things. But the anointing which ye have received of him, abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: But, as the ſame anointing teacheth you all things, and is truth, and no lie: and even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him.’ They are on the ſecret of heaven: Pſal. xxv. 14. ‘The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will ſhew them his covenant. And they teach them to others too: Pſal. li. 13. ‘I will teach tranſgreſſors thy ways, and ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee.’ Not only miniſters, but all Chriſtians have this office, the one in a public the other in a private capacity.

But the unholy have no part in his prophetical office.

(1.) They are not illuminated by the Spirit of holineſs, ſavingly to know the things of God. They may be taught by men, but not by God; they may know the literal ſenſe of the words of the goſpel; but the things thereof are hid from them. They never get into the ſecrets of religion, Matth. xi. 25.

(2.) Neither do they by the Spirit of holineſs enlighten the world. Being dark themſelves, they darken others by their ungodly lives. Moſt of them ſee no tie on them to be their brother's keeper. Such as teach others do it for their own glory, not for the glory of Chriſt. So they have no part in his prophetical office.

2dly, He is a prieſt; and all his have part in that office. They are prieſts unto God. They are conſecrated to ſerve him in his ſpiritual temple, in the robes of Chriſt's righteouſneſs and holineſs. They offer ſacrifices of thankſgiving to God, which are accepted through Chriſt. They offer to him themſelves, their ſervice in acts of worſhip and duty, and in ſuffering or bearing the croſs.

But the unholy have no part in his prieſtly office.

(1.) They are not of the line, nor deſcended from our great High Prieſt, as born of his Spirit. They were never truly conſecrated, they are deſtitute of imputed and implanted righteouſneſs; they are wholly polluted, as being of the world lying in wickedneſs: ſo if they pretend to the ſpiritual prieſthood, they will be, as polluted, put from it.

(2.) They cannot offer acceptable ſacrifices to God. They never offer themſelves to God as a ſacrifice, but to the world and their luſts. If they offer prayers to him, they never offer them on the right altar, Chriſt. Hence all they do, even their beſt things, are an abomination.

Laſtly, Chriſt is a king; and all his have part in that honourable office. They are kings unto God. They have the right of dominion over their ſpiritual enemies, the rule of their own ſpirits governing themſelves by the laws of Chriſt, and the lordſhip of the world, and they are heirs of the kingdom of heaven. They do not yet peaceably poſſeſs their kingdom; their open enemies are making conſtant wars againſt them: but they overcome, and ‘are more than conquerors through him that loved them.’

But the unholy have no part in his kingly office.

They are ſervants to Satan, and under his power, led captives at his will. They have no gracious management of their own ſpirits. They are the ſervants of corruption; they neither think nor do any ſervice acceptable to God.

The APPLICATION.

I ſhut up all with ſome practical Inferences.

Inf. 1. Holineſs is abſolutely neceſſary to happineſs; For ‘without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord.’ Ye may be either poor or rich, and yet be happy. But if ye be not holy, ye are miſerable; for ye have no part with Chriſt. It is aſtoniſhing to think, how eaſy many that hear the goſpel, are about holineſs; they are in no concern whether they be holy or not. They would not have people take them for ſaints; nay, holy people are a jeſt with them. There is no accounting for this any other way, but that holineſs is rare in the world, and they have no mind to be ſingular, nor to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the world lying in wickedneſs.

But conſider theſe four things.

1. God is holy. God that made you is holy by neceſſity of nature; he is ſo holy that he cannot be but holy. If God is neceſſarily holy, he cannot but love his own image, and hate what is contrary to it: therefore he cannot but hate your unholineſs, and for it hate you who are unholy. Now, conſider the miſery of being objects of God's hatred and averſion, and what makes you ſo; and ye will ſee the neceſſity of your being holy, 1 Pet. i. 6. ‘Be ye holy, (ſaith the Lord,) for I am holy.’

2. Chriſt our Saviour is holy. As he is God, he is the holy One of Iſrael; as he is man, he is that holy thing, Luke i. 35. Jeſus is called the holy One; the very devils owned him to be ſo, Mark i. 24. The very end of his being Jeſus, was to make men holy, Matth. i. 21. ‘Thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins.’ He came to ‘deſtroy the works of the devil,’ he died to redeem ſinners from their ſins, Tit. ii. 14. What part then can ye poſſibly imagine yourſelves to have in him, while ye continue unholy?

3. The body of Chriſt is holy; the company of the ſaved, Eph. v. 25, 26. The devil is the god of this world; his ſubjects are the world lying in wickedneſs. Out of them Chriſt raiſes his kingdom, and his ſubjects are all holy. It is their diſtinguiſhing badge from thoſe that belong to Satan, that agrees to them, and to them only. So that if ye are not holy, ye are not Chriſt's, but Satan's.

4. Heaven is holy; it is a holy place, where no unholy thing can enter, Rev. xxi. 27. The dogs and ſwine will be without, that is, the unholy, who ‘go with the dog to the vomit, and with the ſow that was waſhed to the wallowing in the mire,’ ſhall be caſt out from the ſupper of the ſaints in glory into utter darkneſs.

Inf. 2. There is no true holineſs, but in communion with Chriſt. Men may have a ſhew and ſemblance of holineſs, without union and communion with Chriſt. But real holineſs acceptable to God, no man attains but in Chriſt, being ſanctified only with his blood, by his Spirit, through faith; made new creatures after his image, by participation of the all-fulneſs of grace in him, as at large declared, 1 Cor. i. 2.

And therefore holineſs is quite another thing, than,

1. Common civility. A man may be civil, diſcreet, and obliging in his converſation; and yet a ſtranger to holineſs. This was the caſe of the young man, of whom, ‘when Jeſus ſaw that he anſwered diſcreetly, he ſaid unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God,’ Mark xii. 34. There are ſome rude perſons that bear the devil's mark on their foreheads, who behave themſelves neither according to the rules of grace nor good manners; ſome profeſſors that affect and pride themſelves in rudeneſs, regarding no body, nor their offence, but only pleaſe themſelves. Such would do well to conſider, whether that be conſiſtent with real holineſs or not. The reaſon of the doubt, is the ſecond great command of the law, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf. Howbeit civility is not holineſs, though a part of the matter of it.

2. Morality, whether we underſtand by it common honeſty in dealings in the world; or a conformity to the letter of the law, which makes a blameleſs converſation, and goes under the name of moral virtue, but has no relation to Chriſt and his Spirit. Men may have all this, and not be holy, as had the Phariſee, who thanked God, that he was no extortioner, unjuſt, adulterer. This alſo was the caſe of Paul, Philip. iii. 6. ‘Concerning zeal, perſecuting the church; touching the righteouſneſs which is in the law, blameleſs.’ Theſe fruits are in many, like the apples of Sodom, which are fair to look at, but when handled fall to aſhes.

3. A form of godlineſs, 2 Tim. iii. 5. They may go the round of the external duties of religion, where there is no holineſs: for theſe may be done by them that are without Chriſt; though many place all their religion in theſe things, as if they pray, communicate, &c. to be concerned no more to be holy.

All theſe differ from true holineſs.

1*ſt*, In the original and ſpring of them. True holineſs ſprings from union with Chriſt, the Spirit applying the blood of Chriſt to the ſoul, received by faith, improving the word, ſacraments, and afflictions. The Spirit is the efficient cauſe, the blood the meritorious cauſe, and faith the inſtrumental cauſe of ſanctification. But theſe others have a far lower riſe. They are the effect of good education; of conſideration of their own worldly intereſt that oblige many to take up themſelves, and live regularly; of reſpect and reputation; and in ſome, conviction.

2*dly*, In the ſubject of them. Holineſs diffuſeth itſelf through the whole man, inward and outward. Theſe are mere plaiſterings of the outward man, while enmity againſt God and godlineſs, remains in its native force, and the old man bears full ſway within; as appears in the Phariſees. They make a new life, but they leave the old nature unhealed, unrenewed.

3*dly*, In the extent of them. Holineſs extends to all God's commands: for the whole law is written in the heart, and ſo they are holy in all manner of converſation. Theſe never take in more than ſome ſhreds of the law; ſuch men never ſet themſelves to conform to it in its ſpirituality. They quite neglect many of the duties thereof; they conſider them not; for they have no mind to take more than makes for their purpoſe.

Laſtly, In the nature and kind of them. True holineſs is a cluſter of the fruits of the Spirit, Gal. v. 22. ‘Love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance.’ They are acts of moral diſcipline, which have ſelf love in an unrenewed heart, not the love of God in a renewed heart, for their principle. The reaſon of them is not the will of God; for reaſons of their own they do ſo, but not becauſe God commands it. They do not their works in faith of the promiſe of aſſiſtance from heaven, nor of acceptance for Chriſt's ſake; but out of their own ſtock, little valuing whether they be accepted or no; or if they do, looking for acceptance on their intrinſic worth. Their end is not the glory of God, and to expreſs their gratitude; but as they come from ſelf, ſo they are ſwallowed up in ſelf.

Inf. 3. Vain are the pretences of the unholy to part with Chriſt; for no unwaſhed ſinner has part with the holy Jeſus. They do but deceive themſelves in their pretending thereto; and the deceit will out on them to their eternal confuſion, if they ſee it not timely. Conſider,

1. Who are unwaſhed ſinners; and,
2. The ſtate of unwaſhed ſinners, as having no part with Chriſt.

1. Conſider who are unwaſhed ſinners. In the general,

1*ſt*, Thoſe who have not yet eſcaped the pollutions of the world, but in the courſe of their lives are conform to the world lying in wickedneſs. How can they pretend to be waſhed, on whom the filth of ſin is ſtill lying, viſible in their life and converſation? Men may eſcape that, and yet be intangled again by apoſtacy. Let none ſuch pretend to part in Chriſt, for Chriſt will diſown them.

2*dly*, They that have no apparent beauty of holineſs on them. Men deceive themſelves in deſpiſing the appearance of holineſs, ſcorning to appear holy. That is but a piece of faſhionable contempt of religion, poured on it in complaiſance to an ungodly world: for wherever grace is in the heart, it will ſhine forth in the life. And tho' men may appear holy, who are not ſo; yet no man can be holy that has no appearance of it. If there is any religion at all in the world, it muſt be among them that have an appearance of it, not among thoſe that have not.

More particularly, they are yet unwaſhed by Chriſt.

1*ſt*, Who have never yet had the glaſs of the law held to their face, in a work of conviction of their ſinful heart and life. Chriſt waſhes none till he has diſcovered to them their pollution. Till then they will never ſee their need of waſhing. He waſheth by the word, as it convinceth of defilement, points out the cleanneſs to be aimed at, and ſets the ſoul aſtir to ſeek it.

2*dly*, Who have not yet got a view of the abominable nature of ſin. Mens conſciences may be fired with a ſenſe of the guilt of ſin; ſo as they may be brought to caſt it out as a coal that would burn them; that yet are blind to the filth of ſin, and ſee not how it defiles them. This appears, in that if they could be ſafe from wrath, they would never part with ſin.

3*dly*, Who have not been made willing to be made clean. None are waſhed againſt their will. And there is need of a day of power to make willing. Men naturally love to lie in their ſins, as the ſow to wallow in the mire. They are as loath to be brought away, as fiſhes to come out of the water. Nay, there is in every unregenerate man, a heart-enmity againſt holineſs. The heart ſpits its venom againſt it. A certain indication that they are void of it.

4*thly*, Who have never yet felt an abſolute need of Chriſt, his blood, and Spirit, for their ſanctification; and ſo have not yet come to Chriſt for it. There is no waſhing, but by Chriſt, therefore they who have not come to Chriſt for ſanctification, whatever pains they have been at to waſh themſelves, are yet unwaſhed.

2. Conſider the ſtate of unwaſhed ſinners as having no part with Chriſt. Having no part with Chriſt,

1*ſt*, They have no part in the favour of God. They are ‘without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world.’ They are yet in a ſtate of enmity with God, for he only is our peace, and the only way to the Father. All their ſins, original and actual, in the guilt of them, do yet lie upon them: there is not one item blotted out of their account. For God gives no pardon to ſinners, but in Chriſt: they muſt be in him who would be pardoned or reconciled.

2*dly*, They are loathſome in God's ſight; his ſoul abhors them as abominable. No ſinner can be ſavoury in God's ſight, but by the ſweet-ſmelling ſavour of Chriſt's ſacrifice upon them. The ſmell of Jacob was ſweet to Iſaac, in the goodly raiment of his elder brother: and ſinners are ſavoury to God, only in Chriſt. While the ſinner has no part with Chriſt, the filth of all his ſins, original and actual, lies on him; and there is nothing on him to maſter the filthy ſavour ariſing therefrom.

3*dly*, They have no part with the family of God, but with the world lying in wickedneſs. Compare Eph. ii. 12. forecited. They have no right to the privileges of God's children; for none can have that, but in the right of Chriſt as his head. What is the ſtate of the world lying in wickedneſs, is their ſtate. They are under God's wrath and the curſe of the law.

Laſtly, They ſhall have no part with the ſaints in light, but their part will be with ſinners in outer darkneſs. One who has no part with Chriſt here, will have no part in heaven hereafter; for none can enter there, but in and through him. They will have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, Rev. xxi. 8.

Inf. 4. laſtly, The way to be waſhed from ſin, and made holy, is to get part with Chriſt by faith.

1. Think not that ye muſt firſt be holy, before ye can have part with Chriſt: but ye muſt firſt have part with Chriſt, ere ye can be holy, as appears from what is ſaid. The former is as abſurd as to ſay, the ſick muſt be cured ere he come to the phyſician, or the filthy waſhed ere he come to the waters. Hence your unholineſs cannot bar you from getting part with Chriſt,

2. This is a ſure way to holineſs; it cannot miſgive. For hereby the ſick are put in the hand of the phyſician, the filthy in the laver. The ſinner united to Chriſt, muſt needs partake of his blood and Spirit: as through our relation to Adam we are defiled, ſo by our relation to Chriſt, we come to be ſanctified.

3. laſtly, This is the only way, as being of God's appointment. The ſanctification of a ſinner is above the power of nature, not to be reached by natural endeavours; they have not that word of appointment.

The diſtinguiſhing Characters of real Chriſtians.

Being the Subſtance of ſeveral SERMONS.

PHILIP. iii. 3.

For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.

THE apoſtle here gives a reaſon why he had called thoſe falſe teachers, againſt whom he cautions the Philippians, the conciſion; viz. becauſe he and all true believers, and not they, had the beſt claim to circumciſion. In the words there are two things.

I. A poſition: We are the circumciſion.

II. The proof of it; taken from the deſcription of the true circumciſion, which agrees to believers only.

In the poſition we have,

1. The party to whom the honourable controverted character belongs: We. Which includes, (1.) The apoſtle himſelf, who was circumciſed in the fleſh. (2.) The Philippian church, to whom he ſpeaks, who being Gentiles, were not circumciſed in the fleſh; which was the great quarrel the ſalſe apoſtles had with them. Yet this character doth not comprehend all of the church of Philippi: but the ſaints among them, to whom the following deſcription agreed, and therefore all believers; that worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.

2. That character itſelf; the circumciſion, i. e. the circumciſed people. Now, they were not the circumciſed in the fleſh; therefore it is meant of their circumciſion in the ſpirit. Rom. ii. 29. 'He is a Jew, which is one 'inwardly; and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the 'ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, 'but of God.' They had the thing ſignified by circumciſion; while others that boaſted of circumciſion, had only the bare outward ſign. And as the thing is far better than the ſign of it, ſo they deſerved the name beſt.

Before we proceed farther, we may deduce a few doctrinal obſervations from this firſt part of the verſe.

Doct. 1. The ſacraments of the Old and New Teſtament are in ſubſtance the ſame. The Philippians, who were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, as well as with water, are ſaid to be circumciſed. And ſo the apoſtle attributes our baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper after a ſort to the church of the Jews; 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, 3, 4. Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under a cloud, and all paſſed through the ſea; and were all baptized unto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea; and did all eat the ſame ſpiritual meat; and did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink; (for they drank of that ſpiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Chriſt.) As the covenant was always the ſame in ſubſtance, ſo the ſeals of it were the ſame too. I note this, to guard againſt the Popiſh errors in making the ſacraments of the Old Teſtament only ſhadow forth that grace which the ſacraments of the New do confer, according to them; and that they were not the ſame in efficacy.

Doct. 2. The reality of that which ſeducers do pretend unto, will more readily be found in thoſe that conſcientiouſly oppoſe them. Theſe men run down the apoſtle, and other believers, in the point of circumciſion; giving out themſelves only for the circumciſed ones. But the apoſtle proves they had a better claim to it, than thoſe that made all the noiſe about it. Thus the works of holineſs are to be found more with thoſe that preſs juſtification by faith, than with others who would be looked on as the great patrons of good works.

Uſe. Be not then deceived with fair ſpeeches, but examine matters to the bottom; for thoſe that have the higheſt pretences to right on their ſide, go fartheſt from it. And think it no uncouth thing, to find thoſe who have deſerted the principles of the Preſbyterian church of Scotland in their ſeparation, give out themſelves for the only adherents thereto.

Doct. 3. The ſign in religion without the thing ſignified, is little worth. They are but the conciſion, and deſerve no other name, that have only circumciſion in the fleſh. We are the circumciſion that have the thing ſignified thereby. To confirm this, conſider,

1. All it can do is but to give a name before men, which they loſe before God: Rom. ii. 28, 29. 'For he is 'not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh: but he is a 'Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumciſion is that 'of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe 'praiſe is not of men, but of God.' Chriſtians we will be called among men, upon our receiving the ſign of it; but we will be but as the children of the Ethiopian before the Lord, if we have no more. It may give us an honourable title in the world, but it is but an empty title before God.

2. The ſign is but a mere external thing, on which nothing of weight for ſalvation can hang: it is too little to make any ſaving difference betwixt them that have it, and others that want it. And therefore when the Lord comes to judgment, he throws it down altogether, for he looks not to the outward appearance, but to the heart.

3. The ſign in religion without the thing ſignified, is but an inefficacious thing; as a body without a ſpirit. The ſacraments have each two parts, the ſign, and the thing ſignified. He that hath got the ſign only, hath only the half, and the meaneſt half too. Sacraments are ſeals of the covenant; but where there is no covenant, there can be no ſeal: and what avails a ſeal at a blank? They apply Chriſt to believers; but where there is no receiving, how can they apply?

4. As men may in Chriſt's livery abide in the devil's ſervice, ſo they may and will go with it into the place prepared for the devil and his angels, if they have not the thing ſignified. Thus our Lord tells us, that ſome ſhall ſay to him at the laſt day, 'We have eaten and drunk in 'thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets;' but that he ſhall ſay unto ſuch, 'I tell you, I know you not 'whence you are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.' Some are circumciſed, and yet are dogs, whoſe place is without. As to this privilege, avail it may to mens greater condemnation, but no further.

For application: Is the ſacramental ſign little worth without the thing ſignified thereby? then I would have you take a back-look of your baptiſm and communicating. For to change the word into that which the goſpel gives, we may ſay, We, and only we, are the baptized, the communicants, that ‘worſhip God in the ſpirit, rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.’ For there are two great truths which plainly follow from this,

1. Baptiſm with water without being baptized by the Holy Ghoſt, is little worth. It is the dreadful ſin of the generation, that they never reflect ſeriouſly on their baptiſm. Hence are two great evils. (1.) They are children of Belial. They live as if they had never ſworn allegiance to the King of heaven, but were entirely their own. (2.) They will be the children of Belial. They will not renew their baptiſmal vows in the ſacrament of the ſupper, nor prepare themſelves thereto. They will come under any covenant or engagement to men, but they will not come under engagements to the Lord. They are obliged to their parents care in their infancy, that got them baptized; but if they had been yet unbaptized, and would act like themſelves, they would refuſe and ſlight baptiſm, as well as the other ſacrament. But let me lay home to the conſciences of baptized perſons, a few queries touching their baptiſm.

1ſt, In the general. It is true, ye are waſhed with water; but are ye baptized indeed? Ye have the ſign, but have ye got the thing ſignified? Baptized ye were with water, but were ye ever to this day baptized with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire? Alas! that univerſal coldneſs in the things of God in our affections, ſays, that as to moſt men, the fire of God's Spirit never came on them yet.

2dly, But more particularly, I would aſk you,

(1.) Haſt thou ever yet ſeen that univerſal defilement of thy whole man, how that Adam left thee lying in thy blood, and a child of wrath, Eph. ii. 3.? Haſt thou ever yet ſeen the filth of ſin ſo deep in thy nature and life, that no tears, prayers, &c. of thine, but only the blood and Spirit of Chriſt, could waſh thee? In baptiſm there is a profeſſion of all this. If thou haſt not ſeen this, what avails thy baptiſm? why waſt thou waſhed at all in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt?

(2.) Waſt thou ever yet made partaker of the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; that is the thing ſignified by baptiſm. Alas! what avails the waſhing of the body with water, while Chriſt's blood has never been ſprinkled on the conſcience, nor the water of the Spirit of Chriſt poured on the filthy ſoul? Alas! I fear many may in this matter make that confeſſion of their faith, Acts xix. 2. ‘We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt;’ and therefore I would ſay, ‘Unto what then were ye baptized?’ They know nothing about regeneration, nor the Spirit's work upon the ſoul.

(3.) Were ye ever cut off from the old ſtock of Adam, and ingrafted into Chriſt, 1 Cor. xii. 13.? Ye will then be knit to Chriſt by faith; ye will be branches of him, bringing forth the fruits of holineſs, living by faith. Ah! baptized in the name of Chriſt, and yet not in Chriſt, but without God in the world, makes ſad work.

(4.) Are luſts living and reigning; or are they dying, and your ſouls living a new life, Rom. vi. 4, 5.? The water was caſt on you indeed, as the earth on a dead corpſe; but what avails that if ye never yet died to ſin? Ye have got free of that water caſt on you at baptiſm, but what avails it if ye be dead in ſin, and alienated from the life of God? Ah! what are moſt of us but walking ghoſts?

2. Communicating in the Lord's Supper without the thing ſignified, is little worth. To be partakers of the bread of the Lord, without being partakers of the bread which is the Lord, will go but a ſmall length.

1ſt, Have ye indeed eaten Chriſt's fleſh and drank his blood by faith? Had ye an appetite after Chriſt, and have ye reliſhed the ſweetneſs of every part of Chriſt, as one does of the bread which he eats; and have your ſouls knit with him, and received life from him for your nouriſhment? Ah! what avails bread and wine without this?

2dly, Do you live by him, John vi. 57.? Is Chriſt the ſtaff and comfort of your ſouls? Have ye ſet on to live the new life of obedience? Is it from him ye draw influences for actuating of grace, and for your growth? Do ye worſhip God in ſpirit, rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh? then, and not otherwiſe, are ye the circumciſion.

Doct. 4. ult. Believers in Chriſt are the true circumciſion. They have that in the ſpirit, which the Jews by this ordinance had in the letter. To illuſtrate this, conſider,

1. Circumciſion was a token of God's covenant, Gen. xvii. 7. ‘And I will eſtabliſh my covenant between me and thee, and thy ſeed after thee, in their generations, for an everlaſting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and to thy ſeed after thee.’ This is the privilege of every believer; he is in covenant with God, God is his God. O what a privilege is this, to be confederate with Heaven, to have God himſelf to be ours, heirs of God; ſo that God is the heritage! ‘This honour have all the ſaints.’

2. Circumciſion diſtinguiſhed the Jews from others, as God's people from thoſe that were not his. So are believers God's Iſrael, his peculiar people, while the reſt of the world are but as his outfield. They have the ſpecial preſence of God with them, his peculiar care, protection, &c.; and are not numbered among the nations.

3. Circumciſion was the cutting off of a part of the fleſh: ſignifying that which believers have as their privilege as well as duty, the ‘putting off of the body of ſins,’ Col. ii. 11. Thus believers ‘have put off the old man with his deeds.’ This is begun in regeneration, and carried on in gradual ſanctification; their luſts are cut off, and caſt from them in ſome meaſure. Their hearts are circumciſed to love the Lord, ſo as they have new affections; their ears to hear his voice, which could not reach them before; and their lips to ſpeak holineſs for God.

4. Circumciſion was a bloody ordinance; witneſs Ziporah, who ‘took a ſharp ſtone, and cut off the foreſkin of her ſon, and ſaid, Surely a bloody huſband art thou to me; A bloody huſband thou art, becauſe of the circumciſion.’ So it is through the blood of the everlaſting covenant, that the elect become God's people. They come to all their privileges by the way of blood: ſo that they may write on the covenant, and all their privileges, from the greateſt ſeat in heaven, to the meaneſt drop of water on earth, The price of blood.

5. Hence it was a painful ordinance. So is the believer's mortification of his luſts. They are naturally addicted to the ways of the fleſh, as well as others; but they are helped with grace to cut off right hands, and right eyes, however unpleaſant it be to corrupt nature.

6. It was the fleſh of the foreſkin that was cut off, to teach them how ſin is propagated by ordinary generation; and in true believers, the axe of mortification is laid to the root of the tree; the true circumciſion reaching a ſtroke not only to particular luſts, but to the ſin of our nature, Gal. v. 24.

7. It was in a ſecret part of the body. So true circumciſion is that of the heart. They are not outſide Chriſtians only, but the hidden man of the heart is for God; and ‘the king's daughter is all glorious within.’

8. It ſealed the covenant of promiſes, particularly that of the righteouſneſs of faith, Rom. iv. and of Canaan's land. So they are heirs of the heavenly Canaan, and that righteouſneſs is theirs.

9. laſtly, It was an engagement to duty on them. ſo is God's grace on believers a ſingular engagement to duty.

Inf. 1. Then be among believers who will now, they ſhall for ever be cut off from among them that are not ſuch as they. Wo to the hypocritical profeſſor, who is not thus honoured.

2. Then believers are Abraham's ſeed, and heirs of the promiſe. They have all thoſe privileges in ſpirit and truth, that the Iſrael according to the fleſh had in the letter, which may help them comfortably to apply thoſe glorious things ſpoke of Iſrael in the Old Teſtament. Hence believers are called ‘a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people.’ 1 Pet. ii 9.

3. Let the ſaints keep at a diſtance from the profane world. They whom God has diſtinguiſhed from others, ſhould not mix themſelves, with Ephraim, among the people. ‘ A companion of fools ſhall be deſtroyed.’

4. laſtly, Diſtinguiſh yourſelves from others by your holy life. Let it appear that ye are circumciſed in heart, lip and life, that ſin has got a root-ſtroke, and the luſts thereof cut off. And ſo I come to the

II. Second thing, the proof of the poſition, contained in a deſcription of the true circumciſion ; that is, of the true people of God. There are many diſputes concerning this : but the apoſtle lays down a rule for deciding the controverſy. He gives three diſtinguiſhing characters of God's people. 1. They worſhip God in the ſpirit : 2. they joy in Chriſt ; 3. They have no confidence in the fleſh. Whoſoever can make good his claim to theſe, is a true Chriſtian.

I. The firſt character of a ſaint is, he is one that worſhips God in the ſpirit. In which there are three things. 1. He is a worſhipper, and ſo is diſtinguiſhed from atheiſts. 2. The object of his worſhip is the true God; and ſo is diſtinguiſhed from idolaters. 3. The manner of it, in the ſpirit ; and ſo is diſtinguiſhed from hypocrites.

DOCT. Theſe, and only theſe, are God's people, true ſaints, real Chriſtians, who worſhip God in the Spirit.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. What it is to worſhip God in the Spirit.

II. That this worſhipping of God in Spirit, is a diſtinguiſhing mark of a true Chriſtian.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall ſhew what it is to worſhip God in the ſpirit. It is, in a word, to give ſpiritual worſhip to God, to worſhip him, and be ſpiritual in the worſhip. Now, this reſpects two things.

Firſt, It reſpects the whole of our ſervice and obedience to God in our whole converſation. God hath given us a law ; in keeping of that law lies our ſervice to God. The parts of it are two ; holineſs, comprehending our duty to God ; righteouſneſs, comprehending love to our neighbour. We have both theſe in one ſcripture, viz. Luke i. 74, 75. ‘ That he would grant unto us, that we ‘ being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ‘ ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs ‘ before him all the days of our life.’ It is the ſame word as in our text, which is by ſome rendered, that ſerve God in ſpirit, viz. not only in the acts of immediate worſhip, but in the whole of their courſe. And the Chriſtian life is one continued act of worſhip, where all their actions meet in God : and is therefore called a ſerving of God day and night, in alluſion to the prieſts and Levites that were always about the temple, and no wonder, for they are prieſts unto God. Second table duties are turned by them into firſt ; James i. 27. ‘ Pure religion and ‘ and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, To ‘ viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction, and ‘ to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world.’ Heb. xiii. 16. ‘ But to do good, and to communicate forget not : ‘ for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed.’ Now, the Chriſtian is ſpiritual in theſe things. We muſt preach as well as pray in the Spirit.

Secondly, It reſpects thoſe duties of religion, which are parts of worſhip properly ſo called, as prayer, praiſe, &c. A true Chriſtian will make conſcience of theſe ; he will worſhip God, and that in the ſpirit. If he pray, he will pray in the Spirit, praiſe and hear in the Spirit. Now the worſhipping of God in ſpirit lies in theſe two.

1. The true Chriſtian worſhips God with his ſoul and ſpirit, and not with his body only. Hence Paul ſays, that he ‘ ſerved God with his ſpirit in the goſpel of his Son.’ The Jews in our Saviour's days had religion extremely ſunk among them ; it was turned into mere bodily exerciſe, for the moſt part ; therefore Chriſt tells them, ‘ God ‘ is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him ‘ in ſpirit and in truth.’ This implies theſe things.

1ſt, The true Chriſtian is an internal worſhipper of God. There is an external worſhip called for in the ſecond commandment, ſuch as hearing, praying with the voice, &c. There is alſo an internal worſhip called for by the firſt commandment. In outward worſhip the body acts its part, in the inward the ſoul only acts. This lies in the ſoul's depending on God, which is the life of practical godlineſs. The true Chriſtian's ſoul is the temple of God ; and in the Chriſtian's heart, and there only, is God thus worſhipped. They may make din enough in the outer court with worſhip to God, who never worſhip God there ; while ſelf and luſts, as the abomination of deſolation, ſtand in the holy place.

2dly, The true Chriſtian joins inward to outward worſhip, and ſo body and ſpirit go on jointly. Hence Paul exhorts, ‘ to glorify God in the body and in the ſpirit, ‘ which are God's.’ As the body without the ſoul, ſo outward without inward worſhip, is but a lifeleſs lump. It is not praying, but praying in the ſpirit, that is the diſtinguiſhing character of a Chriſtian. Then do men worſhip God in ſpirit, when their hearts go with their bodies before the Lord, when with the lifting up of the hands, the affections are lifted towards the Lord. What avails the moving of the lips, while no moving of agreeable affections ; hearing of the word with the ear, while the ſoul is like a deaf adder, petitions of good things, without ſincere deſires of them from the heart ; confeſſions of ſin, without hatred of it ; It is but lip labour.

3dly, The true Chriſtian aims at, and in ſome meaſure attains the ſpirituality of worſhip. The ſpirit of the Chriſtian, in worſhipping God, is employed in that part whereof it alone is capable ; not only to do the thing, but to do it in a right manner. As we worſhip God with our bodies, not only uſing them in his ſervice, but compoſing them to an allowable outward geſture ; ſo we worſhip God in our ſpirits, while they are not only employed in converſing with God, but alſo acting thoſe things in the manner preſcribed by himſelf. There are four things that belong to the worſhipping God in ſpirit, without which the very motions of our ſpirit, though good in themſelves, would be carnal. So the apoſtle calls his old obeying of the law fleſh, Philip. iii. 6. with verſe 4.

(1.) The true Chriſtian diſcerns the commandment, and acts in worſhipping God from a ſenſe of it. For ‘ Whatſoever is not of faith is ſin.’ He believes ſo and ſo, becauſe God has ſaid it ; and does ſo and ſo, becauſe God has bid it. The will of God, to a Chriſtian, will not only be the rule, but the reaſon of his worſhip ; hence the hardeſt piece of it is not neglected ; as we find in the caſe of Abraham's offering up Iſaac, Gen. xxii.

(2.) The true Chriſtian worſhips the Lord out of love to him : Heb. vi. 10. ‘ God is not unrighteous to forget ‘ your work and labour of love, which ye have ſhewed ‘ toward his name,’ &c. Hence the whole of our ſervice to God comes under the name of love in the ſum of the commandments. If the domineering principle of our worſhip be ſelf love, or ſlaviſh fear, it is not worſhipping God in ſpirit, 2 Tim. i. 7. ‘ For God hath not given us ‘ the ſpirit of fear ; but of love, and of a ſound mind.’

(3.) The true Chriſtian worſhips God with good will. Eph. vi. 7. ‘ With good will they do ſervice, as to the ‘ Lord and not to men.’ And ſays the church, ‘ Thou ‘ meeteſt him that rejoiceth and worketh righteouſneſs.’ If the heart be away from the work, and it be done grudgingly, doubtleſs it is ſpiritleſs work.

(4.) The true Chriſtian worſhips God for his honour and glory, as his chief end. 1 Cor. x. 31. ‘ Whether ‘ ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glo‘ ry of God :’ and Chriſtians aim at it accordingly, Philip. i. 21. ‘ For to me to live is Chriſt, and to die is gain.’ If ſelf get up higheſt here, it is not ſpiritual worſhip.

2. The true Chriſtian worſhips God by the influence of the Spirit. Eph. vi. 18. ‘ Praying always with all ‘ prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit.’ Jude verſe 20. ‘ But ye, beloved praying in the Holy Ghoſt,’ &c. And this aſſiſtance is given two ways.

1ſt, The Spirit gives habitual grace to make the man capable of ſpiritual worſhip, 1 Tim. i. 5. ‘ Now the end ‘ of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, ‘ and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned.’ The carnal heart which the regenerating Spirit has never changed, is not capable of this worſhip.

2dly, He gives actual grace, influences to ſtir up grace, Rom. viii. 26. For 'the Spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.' He blows on the ſoul, and makes the ſpices ſend forth their pleaſant ſmell. It is through him they mortify the deeds of the body, and by him they ſerve the Lord, for they live out of themſelves, by the Spirit of Chriſt.

II. I ſhall ſhew that this worſhipping of God in ſpirit is a diſtinguiſhing mark of a true Chriſtian.

1. All true Chriſtians capable of worſhipping God have it. It is not the attainment of the firſt three only; the higheſt and loweſt in Chriſt's ſchool, the ſtrongeſt and weakeſt of Chriſt's family, have it, though in different degrees. For,

1ſt, All of them are ſpiritual, becauſe born of the Spirit; and every thing that brings forth, brings forth its like. As ſoon as they are born, they are fitted for ſpiritual actions. And ſeeing every thing acts according to its nature, the new nature will make people ſerve the Lord in 'newneſs of the Spirit, not in the oldneſs of the letter.'

2dly, All of them have the Spirit of God dwelling in them, ſo that 'they are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit.' Now, the Spirit is given to help our infirmities, and to help us to worſhip God in the right manner. And he will never leave his people altogether carnal.

3dly, That worſhip which is merely outward is but the carcaſe of duties, unacceptable to God; and they that never perform more than this, are but hypocrites. Matth. xv. 7, 8. 'Ye hypocrites, well did Eſaias propheſy of you, ſaying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, but their heart is far from me.'

4thly, External worſhip is but the means of worſhip; all outward ordinances, as prayer, hearing, &c. tend to the promoting of love; and the enjoyment of God can never be found but in worſhipping him in ſpirit. So that unleſs we will ſay a man may be a true Chriſtian, and never enjoy God in any duty, it is plain all Chriſtians muſt worſhip God in the ſpirit.

2. That none but true Chriſtians have this privilege is plain from this, that none other are ſpiritual; they are in the fleſh, and cannot pleaſe God; they are ſenſual, not having the Spirit, Jude 19. What they do, is at beſt but the product of their own ſpirits; which may carry the length of moral ſeriouſneſs. None but true Chriſtians can ever attain the ſpirituality of worſhip.

The APPLICATION.

Inf. 1. Then there are many in the church that are none of God's people. This caſts,

1. All thoſe that do not worſhip God. There is a generation that call not upon God at all, in ſecret or in families. Such are practical Atheiſts. Is there a God, and will not ye worſhip him? Remember that God will not acknowledge you that acknowledge not him.

2. Thoſe that halve their worſhip. As, (1.) Thoſe who will worſhip God in public, but in their families and cloſets not at all. (2.) Thoſe who perform outward duties, but never internal worſhip; it is the leaſt half ye do.

3. Thoſe whoſe religion is confined to their approaches to God, but have nothing of it in their ordinary converſation: whereas the Chriſtian's life is one continued act of worſhip; he is in the fear of the Lord all the day long.

4. Thoſe who worſhip not God in ſpirit. And,

(1.) Thoſe whoſe worſhip is bodily exerciſe, who may ſhew a great deal of devotion in their outward carriage, but have nothing of ſoul devotion with it.

(2.) Thoſe whoſe worſhip is only the exerciſe of their own ſpirits by themſelves, not by the Spirit of the Lord, and are ſtrangers to the aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit. Without this our worſhip is but carnal.

Inf. 2. Then all that worſhip God in ſpirit, may conclude, that they are real Chriſtians. Spiritual worſhippers are ſpiritual Chriſtians, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God, and ſhall be gathered amongſt the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, when carnal worſhippers ſhall be led forth with the workers of iniquity. Now, for ridding of marches here, I offer ſome marks to diſtinguiſh thoſe that worſhip God in ſpirit from others.

1. The ſpiritual worſhipper's ſoul goes along with his body in the worſhip of God; his heart is in ſome meaſure brought up to the duty. Pſal. cxix. 58. 'I entreated thy favour with my whole heart.' His tongue and other members of his body employed in worſhip, are faithful interpreters of his mind, Lam. iii. 41. 'Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.' 1 Tim. ii. 8. 'I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.' The affections of the mind anſwer the actions of the body. 1 Cor. xiv. 14. 'My ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is unfruitful. A man's ſpirit prayeth (1.) when he knows what he wants and ſeeks; (2.) when he has affections anſwerable to his petitions.

But ah! what ſhall we ſay of that worſhip, where the heart joins not with the body? His body prays, but his ſpirit does not; his ears hear, but his heart is ſtopped; his mouth eats and drinks bread and wine in the Lord's Supper, but his ſoul feeds not on Chriſt. Nay, this is not ſpiritual, but carnal worſhip. There are three ways how the ſoul joins not in the worſhip.

1ſt, Sometimes the man's ſpirit leaves him in duty quite, unleſs it be juſt as far as to keep him from ſpeaking nonſenſe; and oft times it leaves ſo far, that indeed he ſpeaks he knows not what before the Lord. The man is active enough about buſineſs till he come to his knees, and then he expires as it were; the heart leaves him at the foot of the mount of God, and he never finds it till he come down again from the mount of duties.

2dly, Sometimes the heart is intent on the carcaſe of the worſhip, but neglects the life and ſoul of it, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. 'Though I ſpeak with the tongues of men, and angels, and have not charity, I am become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal.' The man has a naughty heart, like a potſherd covered with ſilver droſs. A garb of devotion appears on him outwardly; there is never a wrong word in the prayer, and yet never one right affection, or true concern about the thing. This takes place eſpecially in duties before others, where the eyes and ears of men are on them; which the falſe heart is more concerned to pleaſe than the heart ſearching God. Hence are men very lively to appearance in publick, and yet as dead and flat in ſecret as ever: for the fire goes out, when men want the breathe of applauſe to blow it up.

3dly, Sometimes the heart is ſo far from joining in the worſhip, that there are particulars which it enters its diſſent againſt. "Lord, make me holy; kill this luſt, let me never turn to it again," ſays the man. If the man truly conſider what he ſays, the heart ſtarts back from this petition, being glued to that luſt; and he would think that he had but a ſorry off-come, if God ſhould take him at his word, he would ſay, as Peter in another caſe, Thou ſhalt never waſh my feet: and with the Iſraelites, Jer. ii. 25. 'I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go.'

But are your hearts in good earneſt in your worſhip? Do you labour to bring your heart to duty, and to fix it on the life and ſoul, and not on the outward carcaſe of duty? Are your ſouls reconciled to the promiſes, which are the rule of prayers, particularly to thoſe of univerſal ſanctification, ſo that you have no petitions againſt which the heart diſſents; your ſpirit goes along with your body in worſhip, and ſo ye are worſhippers in ſpirit? To clear further this mark, I ſhall here ſpeak to two queſtions.

Queſt. 1. May not the heart of a hypocrite, in worſhipping of God, be intent upon the thing he is about, and have earneſt affections to obtain it? I anſwer, he may. Felix's mind was not only fixed on Paul's words, but on the things preached by him, otherwiſe he had not trembled ſo as he did. The ſtony-ground hearers wanted not affection to the word; nor the fooliſh virgins in their prayer, Matth. xxv. 11. 'Lord, Lord, open to us;' no doubt they were in earneſt in it. But all this amounts to no more than moral ſeriouſneſs, Job ii. 4. 'Skin for ſkin, yea, all that man hath will he give for his life;' which is far different from ſpiritual ſincerity. Principles of ſelf-love may tie a man's heart to thoſe things which he thinks neceſſary to his ſafety. And ſo all thoſe affections of hypocrites to ſpiritual things, are but carnal affections, proceeding on a comparative judgment; that is to ſay, the man would rather part with his ſin than go to hell for it; but otherwiſe he would be as loath to part with his luſt as with a limb: in which caſe, though the man hold out his leg to the ſurgeon to be cut off, his heart is far from going along with the action; as the Lord afflicts his people not willingly, Lam. iii. 33. But the gracious ſoul goes alongſt with it on an abſolute judgment, as the priſoner holds out his leg to one that would take off the fetters, with which the heart goes alongſt.

Queſt. 2. May not a ſincere ſoul, in worſhip, fall into thoſe things whereby we have ſaid the ſoul joins not with the body in worſhip? Anſw. 1. in the general, Every godly ſoul does not at all times worſhip God in ſpirit, Cant. iii. 1. 'By night on my bed I ſought him whom my ſoul loveth; I ſought him, but I found him not.' Sometimes their ſpirits are taken napping, and their worſhip would be a very ſorry evidence of their ſtate. The fleſh gets above the ſpirit, and they will be very dead and formal. But that is not their way, but their wandering off their way, which they have been on, and certainly will come again to. 2. More particularly, I would ſay, (1.) Though their hearts may be apt to wander, yet when they are awake, they will ſtruggle to bring them to the duty. And though they cannot hinder the birds to fly about their heads, yet they will endeavour that they do not neſtle in their hair, by entertaining of them. (2.) So far as theſe prevail, or a greater intenſeneſs on the carcaſe than life of duties, ſo far will the ſpiritual worſhipper be diſſatisfied with himſelf, and with the duty, and reckon it loſt with reſpect to the ends of worſhip; which muſt humble him, and make him groan as under a burden he longs to be rid of. (3.) In ſo far as there is fleſh in him, there will be a diſſent from the petitions of the Spirit, and its actings in worſhip; but in ſo far as there is Spirit in in him, there will be an anſwer to that diſſent of the fleſh, and a proteſtation of adherence to the petition, notwithſtanding the diſſent of the fleſh, 'The Spirit [luſteth] againſt the fleſh.'

2. The ſpiritual worſhipper aims at the enjoyment of God himſelf in duties. Pſal. xxvii. 4. 'One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſeek after, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple.' Pſal. lxiii. 1, 2. 'O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee: my ſoul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh longeth for thee in a dry and thirſty land, where no water is: to ſee thy power and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeen thee in the ſanctuary.' He comes to the galleries of ordinances, becauſe the king is held there; goes through the ſtreets and broad ways of duties to find his ſoul's beloved. Thus as God in Chriſt is the object, ſo he is the end of their worſhip. For clearing of this, I offer four things.

1ſt, The ſpiritual worſhipper has a ſpiritual aim in worſhipping of God. It is a heavenly trade he is driving by divine ordinances, a trade with another world, to be enriched with the product thereof. Philip. iii. 20. 'Our converſation is in heaven, from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.' He is carried above the carnal deſigns that many narrow ſouls have in their religion, as that of a name, or ſome other carnal intereſt, as thoſe who followed Chriſt for the loaves, and many others who make religion a lacquey to intereſt.

2dly, The ſpiritual worſhipper aims at ſomething in duties above ſelf, even the enjoyment of God. It is ſad to think how many duties to God are performed, ſo as they run all as Jordan into the dead ſea of ſelf in the end. Moſt men ſeek themſelves, their ſecurity from wrath by duties, rather than God. But when the heart is ſpiritualized, it is unſelfed; God himſelf becomes man's chief end, the centre of the ſoul, to which it tends by virtue of the new nature, which is a grace called godlineſs.

3dly, The ſpiritual worſhipper aims at himſelf, as well as his benefits, in his worſhip. They come to ſeek him in his worſhip, not only as a maſter who muſt get work, and ſo will give wages; but as a huſband who gives himſelf to his ſpouſe, who gives herſelf to him. It is in the duties of his worſhip that the ſoul comes to be united more and more to God in this world; and they are appointed for that end, and uſed for it by ſaints.

4thly, The ſpiritual worſhipper aims at the being partaker of the divine nature in his worſhip. For as the iron is laid in the fire that it may be all fired; ſo the ſpiritual worſhipper lays himſelf before the Lord, that he may be transformed into his image. And this is moſt properly the enjoyment of God; while the ſoul being knit to him by faith, his Spirit changes it, 1 John iii. 2. 'We know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is.' And this is a diſtinguiſhing character of a ſpiritual worſhipper; for ſeeing the carnal mind is enmity againſt God, and all the attributes of God are not any thing diſtinct from him, the heart of the moſt refined hypocrite can no more be reconciled to his perfections, than light to darkneſs. Wherefore the ſoul ſeeking to enjoy God in his communicable perfections, ſeeks the enjoyment of God himſelf, and is a ſpiritual worſhipper. Thus ye ſee the nature of this mark. And hence two things may fairly be inferred.

(1.) That ſpiritual worſhippers look on external duties only as means to communion with God, and therefore will not reſt in the work done. They are but the way to communion with God, and therefore are valuable only as means. They that look for no more of duties, but to get them done and by hand, are carnal worſhippers, that take up with the grave cloaths, while the Lord is not there. Have over by this ſermon, prayer, &c. will the ſaint ſay; for he is not as he who is to ſail for pleaſure, and therefore ſeeks not to go over but as a paſſenger.

(2.) That ſpiritual worſhippers will not be ſatisfied with duties, unleſs they enjoy God in them; Cant. iii. 2. 4. 'I will riſe now, and go about the city in the ſtreets, and in the broad ways I will ſeek him whom my ſoul loveth: I ſought him, but I found him not. It was but a little that I paſſed from them, but I found him whom my ſoul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's houſe, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.' What avail the galleries, while the King is not ſeen walking in them? And if this be ſo, few worſhip God in ſpirit, ſeeing ſo many can tarry without grief of heart at Jeruſalem, come to ſermons, and never ſee the King's face.

3. Spiritual worſhippers act in their worſhip from a higher principle than their own ſpirits, even the Spirit of the Lord. Spiritual worſhip is a ſupernatural action, which carnal men are incapable of; and therefore there muſt be a ſupernatural principle of it. The moſt refined hypocrite doth but exerciſe a gift in worſhipping of the Lord, and is deſtitute of the ſanctifying Spirit's influences; their own ſpirits at beſt do but exert their natural powers in the beſt duties by them performed; carnal men are called ſenſual, whoſe own ſouls are their higheſt principles; they have not the Spirit, which is neceſſary to ſpiritualize a ſoul. And ſo in oppoſition to theſe they are bid pray in the Holy Ghoſt. And the performing of ſpiritual worſhip thus, ſays, 1ſt, The ſpiritual worſhipper looks not and lippens not to his ſtock within him for the performance of duties, but comes to duty under a ſenſe of wants and weakneſs, 2 Cor. iii. 5. 'We are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves; but our ſufficiency is of God.' He dare not adventure on the Lord's work in his own ſtrength; whereas the conceity hypocrite lippens to and works the duty out of the ſtock within him; for he is never poor in ſpirit, Matth. v. 3.

2dly, He looks to the Lord for the influences of his Spirit, crying and ſpreading out his ſails for a gale from above; as did the ſpouſe, Cant. iv. ult. 'Awake, O north-wind, and come, thou ſouth, blow upon my garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out.' He ſtretcheth out the withered hand to Chriſt. 'Here is the word, Lord, ſend the Spirit to make it effectual,' &c. And this is the exerciſe of faith abſolutely neceſſary to ſpiritual worſhip; for its work is to fetch the fire of the Spirit from Chriſt our altar, to ſet to the incenſe we offer. It is that which travels for ability for duty betwixt Chriſt's fulneſs and the creature's emptineſs, ſetting down the blind and lame at Chriſt's door.

The worſhipping of God thus by the Spirit is ſo neceſſary, that no worſhip is pleaſing to God but what is thus performed. Chriſt will not put in his cenſer of interceſſion, but what is the product of his own Spirit, Eph. ii. 18. ‘ Through Chriſt we both have an acceſs by one ‘ Spirit unto the Father.’ And it is the inwrought prayer that availeth. And a groan thus delivered, is better than a prayer from our own ſpirits, merely adorned with all the flowers of oratory.

Here a grave queſtion comes to be handled, viz. How we may diſtinguiſh betwixt exerciſing of a gift in duty, and acting from the influences of the Spirit? Enlargement will not do it; for nature has its own enlargements, and there may be a ſtraitening in a gift and enlargement in it too, as well as in grace. Thus God both enlarged and ſtraitened Saul in his gift of wiſdom, conduct, and courage. Delight in the duty will not do it either. Other folks gifts may greatly delight us in the exerciſe of them, and an eaſy and neat exerciſe of a man's own gift, may be very pleaſant melody in the man's own carnal ears. But,

1. All the influences of the Spirit are humbling; and always the more of them, the more humble and vile they make the man in his own eyes. This may be ſeen in the angels, who though they are without ſin, yet being under the moſt abundant influences of the Spirit, do caſt vile man a copy of humility, Iſa. vi. 2, 3. ‘ And cried unto ‘ one another, and ſaid, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of ‘ hoſts, the whole earth is full of his glory.’ Behold it in the man Chriſt, to whom the Spirit was given without meaſure, who was moſt exemplary in humility, Matth. xi. 29. ‘ Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart.’ And it may be obſerved of all the ſaints of God, that the more of the influence of the Spirit they had, they were always the more humble; as we may ſee in Abraham, Job, and Iſaiah. Paul after he was rapt up to the third heavens, was in his own eyes nothing, 2 Cor. xii. 11. And the reaſon is plain, for the influences of the Spirit do always carry up the ſoul to whence they came; as the waters of the deluge, the more they increaſed, they carried the ark nearer to heaven; and the nearer we come to the light of God's countenance, our nothingneſs muſt ſtill appear the more.

On the other hand, the exerciſe of a gift merely, leaves always the ſoul in the ſame unhumbled ſtate it found it. For it is impoſſible nature ſhould work the ſoul into a gracious diſpoſition; and nature's force is too weak to beat down the natural pride of the heart. Nature will build up nature; and the better the gift is exereiſed, it will ſwell the heart the more: hence publicans and harlots enter into the kingdom of heaven before Phariſees, Iſa. lviii. 3. ‘ Wherefore have we faſted, ſay they, and ‘ thou ſeeſt not? Wherefore have we afflicted our ſoul, ‘ and thon takeſt no knowledge?’ And thus many ſwell with the little gift they get, till they burſt all bonds.

2. The Spirit's influences in duty fill the ſoul with a reverential fear of God in duty, Heb. xii. 28. which is excellent ballaſt to a light and frothy heart; and always the more of it, the more reverence of God. The reaſon is, becauſe the Spirit is the Spirit of adoption, and ſo will work a child like diſpoſition in the ſoul towards God, as towards a heavenly father: ſo that the greateſt familiarity with God will not work out, but work forward this reverence, Pſal. xlv. 9.—‘ Upon thy right hand did ſtand the ‘ queen in gold of Ophir.’

But the mere exerciſe of a gift can never impreſs this holy reverence of God on the ſoul; witneſs that frothineſs of heart which men bring with them from duty. Gifts exerciſed without the Spirit, raiſe a cloud in the ſoul: are light in the inſide, dark in the outſide; whereby the more they ſee of themſelves, the leſs they ſee of God; and ſo their deluded ſpirits ſeem to be on an equal level with him. To clear this further, I ſhall propoſe and reſolve ſome queſtions: As,

Queſt. 1. May not a hypocrite have in duty a great fear of God on his ſpirit? Anſw. A ſlaviſh fear of God a man may have, as Felix had in hearing Paul; but this filial reverential fear of God he cannot have, ſeeing he has not the Spirit of adoption: whoſe work it is to knit the ſaints hearts to God as a friend and Father, and to draw them after him, with ſuch child-like affections, as makes them delight in his commands and providences, 2 Tim. i. 7. ‘ God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, but of power, ‘ and of love, and of a ſound mind.’

Queſt. 2. But can ſaints have no ſuch ſlaviſh fear of God? Anſw. As all the graces of the Spirit are imperfect and mixed in the ſaints, ſo is their fear of God not without a mixture of that ſlaviſhneſs. Matth. viii. 26. ‘ Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?’ It is true, God never again gives them the ſpirit of bondage; but they may through unbelief, take up a ſpirit of bondage again. But ſeeing they can never again loſe the Spirit of adoption, neither can they loſe that grace of filial reverential fear altogether: ſo that there is ſtill as much difference betwixt them and hypocrites, as betwixt the malefactor fearing the judge, and a ſon's fearing his father; who appears enraged againſt him, and about to put him out of his houſe; which yet will not kill natural affection.

Queſt. 3. But how can the ſaints fear God as a Father, when they are not aſſured they are his children? Anſw. The Spirit's operations depend not on our ſenſe and knowledge of them, Eccl. xi. 5. ‘ As thou knoweſt not what ‘ is the way of the Spirit, nor how the bones do grow in ‘ the womb of her that is with child: even ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God who maketh all.’ But as the Spirit ſanctifies the ſaints whether they know it or not, ſo he works that filial fear of God in them, whether they know it or not. God's children are like thoſe infants, who though they know not their father, yet by their features do father themſelves.

3. The influences of the Spirit are always ſanctifying, as well as aſſiſting to duty, Zech. xii. 10. ‘ I will pour ‘ (ſaith the Lord) upon the houſe of David, and upon the ‘ inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications.’ They are, as the Baptiſt was, a burning and ſhining light. When the Spirit was poured out, there appeared cloven tongues, as of fire. Behold the nature of the Spirit's influences. (1.) They give a man a new tongue to ſpeak of and to God. It is a dumb devil, that makes men tongue tied in prayers to and praiſes of God. (2.) They are ſanctifying, burning up corruption in the heart and life, as tongues of fire. For as at Babel languages were confounded, and the holy tongue in which people were taught, remained but with a few, the world loſt the knowledge of God, and grew moſt corrupt in their lives, ſo when God was about to remedy this with the gift of tongues, theſe appeared as of fire, becauſe of the droſs of the world that was to be burnt up therewith. Thus the Spirit's influences ſtill tend to make the man more holy, ſet him more at odds with ſin, and purſue holineſs with vigour. Pſal. vi. 8, 9. ‘ Depart from me, all ‘ ye workers of iniquity; for the Lord hath heard my ‘ ſupplications; the Lord will receive my prayer.’

But the exerciſe of a gift leaves the man ſtill as unholy as before, as we learn from the caſe of thoſe of whom Chriſt ſays, Matth. vii. 22, 23. ‘ Many will ſay to me, in ‘ that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy ‘ name? and in thy name have caſt out devils, and done ‘ many wonderful works? And then I will profeſs unto ‘ them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work ‘ iniquity.’ Truth is priſoner in their heads.

And ſo much for the marks of ſpiritual worſhippers. I come now to

Inf. 3. Learn from this not to think of gifts for duty above what is meet. Gifts for duty is abuſed by two ſorts of perſons, the proud hypocrite, and the weak Chriſtian. From this doctrine I have a word to both.

1. To the proud hypocrite. And,

1ſt, Are thoſe true Chriſtians, who worſhip God in the ſpirit? then ye miſs the mark, when ye are more careful to get the gift than the grace of duty; Gifts come from God indeed; but there is leſs of God in them than grace, and that makes them deſirable to a corrupt heart.

2dly, Be not proud of the gifts for duty that ye have. If ye have a gift of prayer, judgment, or memory, or utterance, &c. think not much of it. If we had nothing more of the helliſh gift of diſcerning our own attainments and excellencies, than of other gifts from the Lord, we would not be ſo conceity. It is a bad thing for a man to be puffed up with his gifts. It is like the light that appears before a man's eyes when he gets ſuch a ſtroke on the head as blinds him. But conſider,

(1.) They are God's gifts indeed; but they are but left hand ones. They are of that ſort that are common to Chriſt's ſheep and the devil's goats. Grace is of another nature, a right hand gift, which is without repentance.

(2.) They can help you to the outſide of duty; but can reach no farther; and what for ſerves the carcaſe of duty? Ye may worſhip God with a gift; but that is not worſhipping in ſpirit. The weak Chriſtian that would think ſhame to ſpeak before you now, ſhall be brought in, when the door of heaven ſhall be caſt in your face for ever, if ye have no more.

(3.) Your gifts may be uſeful to others; but they are uſeleſs to you as to any ſpiritual profit. Hence ſays the apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2, 3. ‘Though I ſpeak with the ‘tongue of men and angels, and have not charity; I am ‘become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal.’ And ‘though I have all gifts and all knowledge, and have not ‘charity, it profiteth me nothing. All is yours, whether ‘Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or ‘death.’ O believers, even hypocrites gifts are yours; they are given them, not for their own ſakes, but the ſake of others. The carpenters that built the ark, the profit of their gift came to Noah, not to them, for they periſhed in the deluge. Your gifts may be means to ſave others, while ye periſh yourſelves.

(4.) You may go to hell for all your gifts. Light without ſerves only to ſhow the way to the place where there is heat without light, i. e. to outer darkneſs. Gifts without grace are like a ſhip without ballaſt, that will eaſily periſh; or like a bag of gold on a drowning man, precious in itſelf, but will only help to ſink him the deeper. The devil has greater gifts than the beſt in the world; and ſome have thought that it was his pride of endowments that ruined him; however, it is certain, he was ruined notwithſtanding his gifts.

2. Some weak Chriſtians may be diſcouraged becauſe they want thoſe gifts for duty that they ſee others have, and from thence may be ready to conclude they have neither the gift nor grace of duty. To ſuch I ſay,

1*ſt*, Your concluſion is raſh: grace may be where there is but a very ſmall meaſure of gifts, 1 Cor. i. 26.—28. ‘For ye ſee your calling, brethren, how that not many ‘wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many ‘noble are called. But God hath choſen the fooliſh things ‘of the world, to confound the wiſe; and God hath ‘choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the ‘things which are mighty: and baſe things of the world, ‘and things which are deſpiſed, hath God choſen, yea, ‘and things which are not, to bring to nought things ‘that are.’ It was the plain man Jacob who was the prevailer with God; and ‘the Spirit helps our infirmities ‘with groanings which cannot be uttered.’

2*dly*, It is not the gift of duty, but the grace of it, that is acceptable with God. Grace with little gifts will go far, even to the throne of God, Rom. viii. 26, 27. ‘Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities; for we ‘know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but ‘the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings ‘which cannot be uttered. And he that ſearcheth the ‘hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, becauſe ‘he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints according to the ‘will of God.’ As a father loves the liſping ſpeeches of his child better than empty well-worded compliments of another, ſo doth the Lord the duties of his own people. The glory of the ſecond houſe was to be greater than the firſt, but more grace, even Chriſt, in the ſecond. So if Chriſt be in thy ſoul, there will be much grace, however little of gifts. If a beggar come to you, ye do not wait till he ſhow his parts, but till he ſhow his needs; and if he ſhow you his ſores, though ye ſpeak very ill, it is enough, he is a needy beggar, he muſt be ſerved.

3*dly*, Great gifts had need of a great meaſure of grace to be ballaſt to them. And it is God's goodneſs to ſome, that they have no great gifts, they have ſo little grace to guide them with. God does with them as a wiſe father with his ſon that has but a little ſtock; he ſets him down in a little farm, leſt too much in hand ſhould maſter him. It may be obſerved, that the men of greateſt parts, have uſually got ſharp exerciſes to be ballaſt to their gifts, leſt their heads turning over heavy for their hearts, ſhould truſs them up. And ye ſee how it did in Solomon's caſe, the wiſeſt of men; his gifts maſtered his grace, and made him a fool to a degree. And how it broke his bones, ſee in his penitentials. Take for inſtance Heman, a man of vaſt parts, 1 Kings iv. 31. compare with Pſal. lxxxviii. Job was an oracle for wit among his neighbours, Paul the only ſcholar among the apoſtles. Let the Chriſtian be thankful for what he has.

4*thly*, Thou haſt the thing that is better, that is, grace; a little gold is better than a lump of lead. Doſt thou come with thy heart to God in duty? then though thy gifts are very ſmall, thou worſhippeſt in ſpirit. Good meat never taſtes the worſe that it is ſerved up in a wooden diſh; it is as good as in a golden platter, though the laſt makes the greateſt daſh in the eyes of ſpectators. If thy affections to God in duty be fervent, though your words be not very fine, they will never be caſt in heaven for this.

I diſcharge them that are poſſeſſed with the dumb devil, to meddle with this I have been ſaying. They will not bow a knee to God, becauſe, forſooth, they cannot pray. They will not open a mouth for God, becauſe they have not the gift that others have; they will not ſpeak of ſpiritual things, and care as little to hear them ſpoken of. They are groſsly ignorant of the principles of religion; but they are at as little pains to get knowledge, and will not. But now ſay they, we have not the gift, but God knows our hearts. But I tell you that are ſuch, ye have neither the gift nor the grace of duty. God's children may be ſtammerers in ſpeaking to or of him, but none of them are dumb like you. Their want of gifts is not ſuch as to make them neglect the very matter of external duty as ye do. And what they have not, they deſire to have, that they may glorify God with it.

Inf. 4. Learn from this not to think much of the performance of duties. We have need to have our thoughts of duties corrected. And this doctrine affords,

1. A confounding leſſon to formal hypocrites anent their duties; and that is, That all the duties they have been working at all their days, is naught in the ſight of God, becauſe they were never ſpiritual worſhippers. Perhaps ye will be counting ye have ſerved God ſo many years; ye pray twice, &c. and be ready to value yourſelves on this. But dreadfully will the count come down when God looks on it; it will turn to nothing at all in point of duty. Nay, ye will find them all ſet down in the count of your works of iniquity, where they will make ſo many black items. O how will the man's heart fail him to hear what juſtice has to lay to his charge! Imprimis, unbelief, not believing in the Son of God; item, God's name taken in vain in ſo many pretended prayers; item, ſo many ſermons heard without faith, love, and practice; item, ſo often bread and wine eaten at God's table, while there was no feeding on a crucified Chriſt, &c. Matth. vii. 22, 23. ‘Many will ſay to me, in that ‘day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name? ‘and in thy name have caſt out devils? and in thy name ‘done many wonderful works? And then will I profeſs ‘unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, all ye ‘workers of iniquity.’ Whence obſerve, the wonderful works they did for Chriſt, which themſelves and others wondered at, are in Chriſt's account works of iniquity. We make a tripartite diviſion of people in the viſible church. (1.) Some that ſerve God ſincerely. (2.) Some that ſerve him hypocritically. (3.) Some that ſerve him not at all. God makes but two ſorts, caſting the two laſt into one, Mal. iii. 18. ‘Then ſhall ye return and diſcern ‘between the righteous and the wicked; between him ‘that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not.’ Whence learn, (1.) The righteous only ſerve God; as for others, whatever be the difference among them, they agree in that, both profane folk and hypocrites, that they ſerve not God. (2.) A man who is not a child of God, can perform no ſervice to God in his account; ſlaves ſervice is no ſervice, Hoſ. vii. 14. The Lord's people are the children that ſerve him as a Father.

2. This doctrine affords a humbling leſſon to the godly anent their duties. Many of your duties are naught in the ſight of God. If only ſpiritual worſhippers be real ſaints, ye act not as ſaints in any duties but thoſe that are done in the ſpirit. If this be ſo, it will do two things.

1ſt, It will bring your great number of duties down to very few, ſo that all ye have done for God may be ſoon told. Since ye were acquainted with Chriſt, ye durſt never perhaps riſe up nor lie down without praying: but when theſe things come before the Lord, it will be found there has been many a day and week ye have prayed none at all; many a ſweet portion of ſcripture ye never read to this day, though ye have gone over and over it again.

2dly, It will make many a long duty of yours very ſhort. Let that be taken off the duty that was not done in the ſpirit, and off it muſt go, many a long prayer and ſermon will be brought to a very few ſentences that ye have heard or prayed; and many a ſentence broken off in the midſt where the heart left the man. I trow the dung of your ſacrifices burnt without the camp, will bulk more than all the fleſh that has come on God's altar.

3. It affords a neceſſary leſſon to both, namely, Ye need Chriſt. O how does the profane world need Chriſt! But, O ſirs, ye need him as really when going to your prayers, as the man that is going to his cups and his drunken companions needs him; ye need him as really when ye are going to the ſermon on the Lord's day, as he who caſts contempt on God's ordinances, by loitering at home. Ye need him when ye are mourning over your ſins, as well as others, when they are revelling, and going the broad gate with tabret and pipe.

1ſt, Ye need himſelf. Sinners, ye need himſelf, to be united to him, to be one ſpirit with him. John xv. 6. 'If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch 'and is withered; and men gather them, and caſt them 'into the fire, and they are burned.' If he would give you never ſo many gifts, if ye get not himſelf, ye can do nothing. There is nothing can make up his room. An eternal barrenneſs will lie on your ſouls; the heavens will be as braſs, and the earth as iron, if ye get not himſelf. And the axe of God's judgments will hew you down with your wild grapes, as well as others that have no ſhew of fruit, if ye get not himſelf. If ye grow on your own root, though ye ſhould water it every day with your tears, yea tears of your blood, if ye get not Chriſt, your 'root ſhall be as rottenneſs, and your bloſſom ſhall 'go up as duſt.' Root and fruit ſhall be deſtroyed for ever from the preſence of the Lord.

Saints, ye need himſelf, to be more and more cloſely united to him, to be growing up into him. According to your faith ſo will it be unto you, not only in point of privilege, but in point of duty. Ye have come to Chriſt, but ye muſt be always coming to him. Mind to whom that was ſaid, John xv. 4, 5. 'Abide in me, and I in you. 'As the branch cannot bear fruit of itſelf, except it abide 'in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I 'am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in 'me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit: 'for without me ye can do nothing.' Ye need him for 'wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption.' Ye need him for all.

2dly, Ye need his blood. Sinners, ye need it to make your perſons accepted, to conſecrate you for ſervants to the Lord, to be prieſts unto God: and without the ſprinkling of that blood on you, God will no more regard your ſervices, than a ſacrifice by one who was never conſecrated a prieſt; for all ſpiritual worſhippers are made prieſts. Ye need it to take away the guilt of your dead works of duties, which, till it be removed from your conſcience, utterly unfits you to ſerve God; as they which are defiled with the touch of a dead body might not come into the tabernacle; to which the apoſtle alludes, Heb. ix. 14.

Saints, ye need his blood. It is true, ye are waſhed in that blood already, but new defilements require new waſhings. There is an alluſion there to the prieſts under the law, who were to bathe their whole bodies in the morning, but notwithſtanding at every new ſervice through the day they were to waſh their hands and feet ere they approached the altar. Now, ye are waſhed in reſpect of your ſtate, that continues; but ye muſt ſtill be waſhing for the iniquities of your heels, that are compaſſing you about. Therefore the ſea of glaſs ſtands betwixt the ſaints and the throne, Rev. iv. 6.

3dly, Ye need his Spirit. Sinners ye need him; there is no worſhipping in ſpirit without the Spirit. They are but lifeleſs carcaſes of duty that are performed without the Spirit. That which died of itſelf was utterly unfit for a ſacrifice; and ſuch are your beſt performances without the Spirit. Now, it is from him the Spirit comes.

Saints alſo need the Spirit; for it is not enough to ſpiritual worſhip that the Spirit dwells in us, but that the Spirit influence us to duty. The Spirit helps our infirmities, ſtirring up the fire within us, putting grace in exerciſe, otherwiſe our performances will be but bodily exerciſe.

Inf. 5. laſtly, To ſhut up this, be exhorted and warned to take heed how ye worſhip God; in what manner ye perform every duty; labouring to be ſpiritual in all. And there are two things ye would in this endeavour to ſtudy.

1. To get the heart brought up to every duty. Pray, confeſs, from the heart, Col. iii. 23. 'Whatſoever ye do, 'do it heartily.' Gold is fetched out of the bowels of the earth, and pearls out of the bottom of the ſea; and ſpiritual worſhip comes from the hidden man of the heart, while external duties, like common ſtones, are found lying every where on the ſurface of the earth. We ſhould be fervent, ſerving the Lord.

2. To go out of yourſelves for ability to duty. This was Joſhua's intent when he told the people that had engaged to duty, Joſh. xxiv. 19. 'Ye cannot ſerve the Lord, 'for he is an holy God; he is a jealous God, he will 'not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins.' When we go to our duties we ſhould do as Elijah did, lay the ſacrifice on the altar, and then look to the Lord for fire from heaven to conſume it. The Spirit of the Lord is that fire from heaven which burns our ſacrifices of duties, and makes the ſmoke of them aſcend towards heaven, for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour. And as no ſacrifice was accepted but what was burnt by that fire from heaven, ſo no duty is accepted but what is by the influence of the Spirit. When then we go to duty, here is the ſacrifice; but where is the fire? if it be ſtruck out of our own ſpirits, it will make an offenſive ſmoke; but an acceptable flame, if from heaven we fetch it by the looks of faith.

1ſt, God is a Spirit, and therefore muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit, John iv. 24. How unſuitable is mere bodily exerciſe in religion to the nature of God! Were we to ſerve dead idols, a dead formal worſhip might ſerve. But the living God muſt have lively ſervice, Rev. iii. 19.—'Be zealous therefore, and repent.'

2dly, God takes ſpecial notice how duties are done. God will have his ſervice well done, as well as done, yea, he reckons it ſo neceſſary, that the want of it alters the very nature of duty, and turns it to ſin.

3dly, Your duties are the touchſtone of your faith, ye have much need to take heed to them. Spiritual worſhip is the mark of a child of God; ſo that by your worſhip ye will prove either that ye are real ſaints, or that ye are but hypocrites.

And ſo much for the firſt character of a ſaint, namely, that he is one that worſhips God in the ſpirit.

II. We come now to the ſecond character of a real ſaint. He is one that rejoiceth in Chriſt Jeſus. In the firſt character a ſaint is repreſented as a great worker, in good works and ſervice to God, going with his heart into the heart, marrow, and ſoul of duties; and therein going beyond hypocrites, that never go farther in than the outward court with their duties, their duties being like themſelves, having not the Spirit, while the ſincere perſon works in duties, as if he minded to win heaven by them.

It would then be expected, that thoſe duties ſhould be the joy, comfort, and life of his ſoul. Sure, they that have much leſs reaſon, make that uſe of their duties; but the ſaints do not ſo. Though they do more, they truſt leſs in what they do than others. Nay, they overlook them as to any confidence in them before the Lord; and though they worſhip in ſpirit, they rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus. Tho' they bring their hearts to duty, yet that is not the thing that keeps up their hearts before the Lord, but Chriſt, in him they rejoice, or, as the original hath it, they glory, which is more than ſimply to rejoice. It imports a glorying or boaſting with a ſtrutting out of the neck, and caſting up of the head in a boaſting way. It is the ſoul's acquieſcing with joy in Chriſt as its only hope againſt all that might harm it, not being aſhamed to profeſs it.

Doct. That is the real Chriſtian, who though he worſhip God in ſpirit, yet rejoiceth in Chriſt Jeſus.

In handling of this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew what it is to rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and in what ſenſe the true Chriſtian rejoices in him. And ye would notice this as a mark of a true ſaint.

But there is an objection meets us here, that muſt be removed. It is this: If joy in Chriſt be a mark of a gracious ſtate, what ſhall come of poor doubting trembling Chriſtians, who go mourning without the ſun, that ſtand moſt in need of marks that they may rejoice moſt in Chriſt; while others that can rejoice in Chriſt, do already ſee their intereſt? Anſw. The mark in the text is given by the infallible Spirit, and therefore doubtleſs is conſiſtent with what he elſewhere teacheth in his word, and muſt be ſo underſtood as not to exclude the mournful worſhipper in ſpirit. But to clear the point, I offer theſe two things.

1. There is a radical or habitual joy in Chriſt; which is a diſpoſition of ſoul inclining and bending the ſoul towards Chriſt as the ſpring and object of its joy before the Lord: for as when God made Adam, with a frame of ſoul inclining to the will of God, this diſpoſition did denominate him righteous before he had done one righteous act; ſo when, in the new creation, the Lord puts this diſpoſition in the ſoul, it may denominate him a rejoicer in Chriſt, even before he actually rejoice in him. Then there is an actual joy or rejoicing in Chriſt, wherein the ſoul ſolaceth itſelf in the Lord in greater or leſſer meaſure. Upon this I ſay, 1ſt, Every believer, even in his darkeſt hours, has this radical and habitual joy in Chriſt: Pſal. xcvii. 11. 'Light 'is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright 'in heart.' As there is a worm of ſorrow at the root of every gourd under which the wicked doth rejoice; ſo there is a ſeed of joy even in the ſaints mournings, that will get above the clods in due time. There are always ſome pieces of heaven in their hotteſt hells. There are everlaſting arms underneath, which for the time are only keeping the ſoul from ſinking: but we may ſay of them, as Naomi of Boaz, when he had given Ruth ſix meaſures of barley to help them to live a while, 'The man will 'not be in reſt, untill he have finiſhed the thing this day,' till you be miſtreſs of all he has. So theſe will not reſt till they have lifted up the ſoul to a fulneſs of joy in God.

2dly, Though the believer does not always rejoice actually before the Lord, more than he does always act faith, which ſometimes is not in exerciſe even in the beſt; yet when he does rejoice before the Lord, he rejoices in Chriſt; Gal. vi. 14. 'God forbid, that I ſhould glory ſave in the 'croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.' If the believer's feaſt-day come but ſeldom about, yet when it comes, he keeps it in the white raiment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs. And he will not lay off his blacks or mournings, till Chriſt ſend him other garments, Iſa. lxi. 1.—3.

2. There is actual joy; which is twofold. (1.) There is a ſenſible joy, Luke i. 47. 'My ſpirit hath rejoiced in 'God my Saviour.' And this God's people ſometimes get in Chriſt, ſo as their ſouls are made to leap within them, while they wonder at his love, and rejoice and wonder. So much are we addicted to ſenſe while in this body, that we will ſcarce allow any thing but this to be called joy. But that is a miſtake: for, (2.) There is a rational joy: which is the ſatisfaction the reaſonable ſoul has in what it loves and deſires. We ſee this in the man Chriſt, who being a man of ſorrows, had little of that ſenſible joy while in the world. It is remarked of him that he had one hour of it, Luke x. 21. 'In that hour Jeſus 'rejoiced in ſpirit;' clearly teaching it was not his ordinary. Notwithſtanding, Chriſt had an abiding joy, (John xv. 11. 'Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that my 'joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be 'full,') to wit, a ſolid ſatisfaction in the welfare of his diſciples. The original words in theſe places clear this difference; the former being the ſame with that Luke i. 47. the other importing nothing of exultation, but a joy in things proſpering with a perſon.

Now, although the believer may but ſeldom have this ſenſible joy in Chriſt; and I know not but the ſpirit of heavineſs may ſo ſit down on ſome, that they may never taſte of this ſenſible joy till they be in heaven, yet every believer habitually and ordinarily, as they are in the exerciſe of other graces, have this rational joy in Chriſt: for if 'the kingdom of God be righteouſneſs, and peace, 'and joy in the holy Ghoſt,' wherever it comes, theſe muſt be there too. And this I take to be the joy aimed at in the text, as appears by its being oppoſed to hypocrites confidence in the fleſh, which ſpeaks forth rather a rational complacency than any ſenſible joy.

The ſoul's union with Chriſt is often held forth in the ſcripture under the notion of a marriage; and we read of a twofold joy in this. 1. The joy wherewith the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, Iſa. lxii. 5. 2. The joy wherewith a huſband, in the continuance of his married ſtate, rejoiceth over his wife, Prov. v. 18. The former is an emblem of that ſenſible joy which believers ſometimes have in Chriſt, and particularly at the time of their firſt receiving of Chriſt, while they are yet but young converts, and are fed with lumps of ſenſe. An inſtance of it we have in the eunuch, of whom it is ſaid, that he went on his way rejoicing, Acts viii. 39. But although, that ſenſible joy do not laſte, yet there is an habitual rational joy, which remains with the people of God, whereof the latter is a good reſemblance. For as they that have made a good choice, continue to have a ſolid rational joy in one another, though it be not ſo violent as the other, yet is more ſtrong and fixed; ſo it is here. This is here given as a mark of a true ſaint. And in regard hypocrites may have a great ſenſible joy, whatever ſenſible joy any pretend to muſt be examined by this, for this is the root on which all true ſenſible joy grows; and theſe joyful flaſhes of hypocrites will be found to ſpring from another root.

Now, this rejoicing in Christ lies in four things.

1. A holy complacency in Chriſt.
2. A rolling of the ſoul over on Chriſt for all.
3. A reſt of the heart in him as a fit match for the ſoul.
4. A confeſſion of him unto ſalvation.

First, There is in this rejoicing in Chriſt, a holy complacency in him. The believer has got a view and trial of Chriſt, and he is well pleaſed with him. There is a mutual joy of the parties in the ſpiritual marriage. Where the ſoul is Beulah, married to the Lord, it is alſo Hephzibah, the Lord has a complacency in it, Iſa. lxii. 4. And ſo have they in him, Mal. iii. 1.—'The Lord whom 'ye ſeek, ſhall ſuddenly come to his temple: even the 'meſſenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in.' All the Jews profeſſed this as God's people, and the godly among them really had it. Though they are eagle eyed ones in ſpiritual things, in compariſon of the blind world; yet they ſpy no fault in the myſtery of Chriſt, but are well pleaſed with the grand device of ſalvation through Chriſt. The Father made choice of him, carved out every piece of his work to him, in the matter of ſinners redemption; and he is well pleaſed with his choice, and it is unanimouſly approved in every point by the multitude of the called, and choſen, and faithful; who all, with one voice cry, Grace, grace to it. Sirs, ſince men loſt the way to happineſs, but not the deſire of it, they have choſen new gods and guides, ſome one, ſome another; and every man will walk in the name of his god. God the Father has made a choice for them of a captain of ſalvation; the goſpel pleads the excellency of this choice, and puts the trying vote to the world, Approve or not? The plurality has always voted, Not approve; but believers have with their ſouls approved the choice. And if ye be amongſt the approvers, take his word for it, ye are his, Matth. xi. 6. Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.

Now, we cannot be well pleaſed with any thing, unleſs we ſee a ſuitableneſs in it to us. When a man has made his choice, if afterwards he finds it unſuitable to him, it kills his joy in it: for when he made the choice, it was upon its ſuppoſed ſuitableneſs. Accordingly the believer rejoicing in Chriſt, beholds his ſuitableneſs to that for which he has made choice of him. And there is a threefold ſuitableneſs of Chriſt here to be noticed.

Firſt, There is a ſuitableneſs of Chriſt to the divine perfections or attributes concerned in the ſalvation of ſinners, diſcerned by every believer, 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. We preach Chriſt crucified unto them who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. There is no man that has got that matter of ſalvation laid cloſe home to his heart, but will know well on what he will venture his ſoul before ſuch a holy God. They will ſee, that the holineſs, juſtice of God, are ſuch fixed rocks, as they will never expect they ſhall be removed for them; and therefore will deſpair of ſalvation in any way inconſiſtent with God's perfections. Hence it follows, that the ſoul which rejoiceth in Chriſt, hath ſeen Chriſt's ſuitableneſs to the divine perfections. Bleſſed are ye, O believers; for ye acquieſce in this way of ſalvation, as ſuitable in that reſpect. And that this character may have the more weight with all the ſaints, and the naughtineſs of others may be diſcovered, conſider,

1. As there is a ſpecial illumination that believers get, and to which the moſt refined hypocrite is a ſtranger, Chriſt's differencing the ſincere and hypocrite as wiſe and fooliſh; ſo there is an illumination in the knowledge of the myſtery of Chriſt, ſuitable to the divine perfections, that is peculiar to his ſaints. And therefore the whole of the work of grace comes under the name of the revealing of Chriſt in a ſoul. And what is the ruin of many that get convictions and reform, but the want of this ſaving diſcovery of Chriſt? So that all their religion ends in a legal Chriſtleſs turn given to their lives.

2. How few dig ſo deep in the ſins of their hearts and lives, as once to put it to the queſtion, whether their ſalvation be conſiſtent with the honour of God, or not? Unto ſome men, God, Chriſt, and ſin, are vailed; they never get a true view of any of them; and ſo whatever they do in religion, is juſt a leap at random, and their believing is but a venturing of their ſouls on they know not what. And as for many others that have had ſome exerciſe about their ſoul's ſtate on their ſpirits, they were never brought ſo low, but they thought if ever they could mourn for ſin enough, reform, and believe in Chriſt, without any eye to his atoning blood, all would be well. They were never ſo low as to ſee ſalvation ſo far above them as the honour of God has ſet it, never to be brought down but upon a juſt ſatisfaction to the honour of God and that a ſatisfaction beyond the reach of their ſuffering or reforming. To which were they brought, they would rejoice in Chriſt as ſuited to that work, the repairing the honour of the divine perfections, which ſtand betwixt ſalvation and them, 1 John i. 7. 'And the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.' But how can they rejoice in a ſalve for a ſore under which they never ſmarted? Rom. v. 11.

3. Conſider, all the ſons of the firſt Adam are ſons of pride, who ſee no glory but in the way of the firſt covenant; which is, that God ſhould have his honour from them whom he ſaves. And becauſe man, by the breaking of that covenant, loſt his eyes, which are never under it reſtored, therefore they have but low thoughts of the honour of God. Hence we find Adam ſtaying in Paradiſe till God drove him out. And while they have ſuch low thoughts of it, it is no wonder they think little may ſerve to repair it. And the pride of the heart being unſubdued, they can ſee as little glory in Chriſt crucified his repairing it, as a proud bankrupt would ſee in his being declared unable to pay his debt, and one paying it for him, while he thinks he might have paid it himſelf, or it was not ſo much but it might have been forgiven.

Secondly, There is a ſuitableneſs of Chriſt to the caſe of the ſoul, which the believer ſees, and acquieſceth in Chriſt as thus ſuited to his caſe. Unleſs the believer ſaw this, he could never rejoice in him. If ye would lodge a ſtarving man in a palace, and fill his pockets with gold, behold he is near death for lack of meat, and what good can theſe do him, they are not meat; and ſo not ſuitable to his caſe? Now, the child of God has ſeen his caſe, and Chriſt's ſuitableneſs to it every way, and approves of him as ſuch. Every ſoul feels a want of ſomething; and ſince Adam turned himſelf and all his poſterity beggars, they are wandering among the creatures ſeeking ſupply for their wants. Now, whatever they can purchaſe among them, though it promiſes fair afar off, yet when they come near it they find it unſuitable. And this makes the heart ſecretly ſigh, while it is attacked with a new diſſatisfaction on every new diſappointment; though they are ſo beſotted, that when they are wearied in the greatneſs of their way; yet ſay they not, There is no hope; but go out again to beg at theſe doors, where they have got a thouſand nayſays before. Now, while the elect ſoul is thus wandering among the reſt, the Lord opens its eyes, as he did Hagar's to ſee the well, and Chriſt is diſcovered to the ſoul; and the ſurpriſed ſoul cries, John i. 45. 'I have found him of whom Moſes in the law, and the prophets did write.' Now, ſays the ſoul, 'this is my reſt, and here I will ſtay. Matth. xiii. 45, 46. 'The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man, ſeeking goodly pearls: who when he had found one pearl of great price, he went and ſold all, and bought it.'

An excellent emblem of this ye have in that, Mark v. 25.——34. concerning the woman which had an iſſue of blood twelve years. Where notice, 1. She never tries Chriſt till ſhe had tried others one after another, and found all phyſicians of no value. 2. When ſhe hears of Chriſt, ſhe believes, and by faith concludes, there was a phyſician now ſuited to her caſe. 3. There was a great multitude about Chriſt that ſtood as much in need of him as ſhe: but ſhe ſaw his ſuitableneſs to her caſe, while they ſaw not how ſuitable he was to theirs; therefore ſhe only gets the touch of faith. 4. She thruſts forward, leaves all her other phyſicians, and takes him for and inſtead of all, as fully and only ſuited to her caſe.

Now, amongſt all thoſe things in which the ſaints ſee Chriſt's ſuitableneſs, I ſhall only inſtance in theſe two.

1. They ſee a glorious ſuitableneſs to their caſe in the perſon of Chriſt, God-man: that the Mediator as ſuch is a contrivance to them of infinite wiſdom, anſwering the honour of God, and the ſinners neceſſities; in which the child of God heartily acquieſceth. The man ſees himſelf by nature in a ſad caſe, which the whole creation cannot help. There is a breach betwixt God and the ſinner; what man, what angel, can be dayſman, able to lay hands upon both? Here is one ſo high, that he is the Father's fellow; yet ſo low, that he is bone of our bones, and fleſh of our fleſh. The ſinner is ſeparate from God, that is hell begun on earth; how ſhall the ſinner be reunited to God? Will the ſinner attempt immediately to unite with God? God's juſtice and holineſs ſtaves him off; they will not cleave together, as iron is not mixed with clay. Can angels unite them? Nay, they needed another themſelves to be a bond of continuance, though not of beginning or making their own union with God. Behold in the perſon of Chriſt how it may be done. Man's nature is united already to the divine nature in the perſon of Chriſt. Here is an union for a foundation of the myſtical union which the ſoul is ſeeking. Here is a ſuitable meeting place betwixt God and ſinners, where they may unite again with the ſafety of the divine honour; 'The fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily; God is in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them;' and in the fleſh of Chriſt the ſinner may meet God with ſafety of his life: and ſo both unite in him. The ſinner has fallen, like Lucifer, as a ſtar from heaven? how can he get up again? behold

Chriſt as the ladder reaching betwixt heaven and earth, ſet as low as the ſinner could wiſh in his human nature, and reaching as high as he can deſire in his divine nature. O glorious perſon ſuited to ſinners caſe!

2. The ſaints ſee a glorious ſuitableneſs to their caſe in the offices of Chriſt, and ſuch a ſuitableneſs as makes them acquieſce in him.

1*ſt*, He is a Prophet, the interpreter of the Father's mind, who was in the Father's boſom from eternity, and is privy to all his counſels; and ſent of the Father to be the light of the world. He is juſt ſuch an one as the ſoul wants, Luke ii. 32. 'A light to lighten the Gentiles.' The ſoul looks within itſelf, and ſees itſelf a maſs of confuſion, at every turn ready to miſtake the way; and walking thro' a wilderneſs full of pits of deſtruction, cannot but deſpair of ever falling on the right way, or coming ſafe to the end of their journey, if they get not a guide. Now, the ſoul ſees Chriſt as 'the ſun of righteouſneſs, the wiſdom of God, and the power of God;' and ſo acquieſceth in him; knowing, that as there is darkneſs in them, there is light in him; to whom they may go with all their doubts, and fears, and get their ravelled caſes redd, and learn from him the caſe they cannot name themſelves.

2*dly*, He is a Prieſt, who has made the atonement by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and is gone in now within the vail to preſent to the Father his own blood, and thereupon to intercede for ſinners, and ever liveth for that end, Rom. viii. 34. 'It is Chriſt that died, yea rather, that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us.' How ſuitable is this in the ſaints eyes to a ſinner's caſe! When ſin and guilt is laid home to a man's conſcience, there will be many queſtions in the heart. O, ſays the ſoul, 'wherewithal ſhall I come before the Lord?' How ſhall I get the demands of this law that has me by the throat ſatisfied, while they run ſo high above all I can do or ſuffer? What is able to quench this fire of wrath that has gone out againſt me for my ſins? But Chriſt being diſcovered to the ſoul in the glory of his prieſtly office, it ceaſeth. For in him he ſees all the demands of juſtice and the law anſwered to the full; an everlaſting righteouſneſs brought in, in which a ſinner may ſtand before the Lord; atoning, peace making blood, that is able to quench the fire of God's wrath, waſh out the deepeſt dyed guilt, and to purge the conſcience from dead works. And thus the ſoul acquieſceth in him as the only refuge.

And then for his interceſſion, the ſoul beholds a glorious ſuitableneſs to its caſe therein; which makes them rejoice and glory in him. They have much buſineſs in the court of heaven, and they cannot manage it: O how ſweet to have a friend at court, through whoſe interceſſion the purchaſe of his blood comes to be applied to the ſoul! John xvii. 20, 21. Neither pray I for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall believe on me through their word: that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they alſo may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me. They are offending every day; but in him they have a conſtant reſident at the court of heaven to take up emergent differences, ſo that it cannot come to a total rupture betwixt God and them, Heb. ix. 24. 'For Chriſt is entered into heaven, now to appear in the preſence of God for us.' But how ſhall guilty creatures have acceſs to the King's preſence? Why, through him; for he is the Father's favourite, the great Secretary of heaven, who leads by the hand the ſupplicants into the preſence chamber. They dare not preſent their petitions in their own name; then he preſents them, and the Father hears them out of his mouth; and ſo they cannot but come ſpeed, when he offers them with the incenſe of his interceſſion.

3*dly*, He is a King, againſt whom there is no riſing up. He is the King of glory. Even the Lord ſtrong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle, Pſal. xxiv. 8. Sure I am, looking to the white ſide of this diſplayed glory, every ſoul that has a ſpunk of grace, will ſay, Then he is juſt whom my ſoul deſires. O ſuitable King of glory! The ſoul ſees it muſt fight, and will fight; but O weak in battle is it. It is not man enough for the corrupt nature, no not to turn away the face of one of the leaſt of that helliſh maſter's captains; unable to grapple with the leaſt luſt in its own ſtrength, more than a child can grapple with a giant. Satan is too hard for them; the world too ſore, eſpecially having friends within them ready to ſide with theſe enemies. O what a glorious figure muſt this King of glory make in their eyes in this caſe? What rejoicing of heart muſt the appearance of the Captain of the Lord's hoſt bring to them? Iſa. xxxiii. 22. 'The Lord is our King, he will ſave us.' In him will the ſaints acquieſce, and look no where elſe for help, but be content to go at his back againſt all the powers of hell, though they have but ſtones of the brook for the attack, and adventure on the walls of the curſed Jericho, though they can do nothing but walk about them, and give the ſhout; for, 'In the Lord have they righteouſneſs and ſtrength.'

O Sirs, have ye ever ſeen this ſuitableneſs of Chriſt to your caſe? and do your ſouls acquieſce in him as only and fully ſuitable to it? Is he in your eyes the party fit for you in your caſe? Ye are they then that rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus. But ah; it is to be feared, that Chriſt is a vailed beauty to many of us, and there are not a few in whoſe eyes there are other things as ſuitable for them, than Chriſt, in whom the ſaints ſee this heart attracting glory: Cant. v, 9. 'What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou doſt ſo charge us.' Conſider,

1. There is a generation whoſe hopes of pardon and ſalvation are built on the foundation of the mercy of an abſolute, unatoned God. They ſee no need of the Lord Jeſus; they know him not as the only mean of conveyance of ſaving mercy to ſinners. Do theſe rejoice in Chriſt? No, they cannot, nor never will, till their hearts be wounded with an arrow they have not yet felt. Know ye, that the earth ſhall ſooner be forſaken, and the rocks ſhall ſooner be removed from you, than ye ſhall ever taſte of mercy to ſalvation but through Chriſt. If ye be out of Chriſt, mercy cannot ſave you, ſeeing it cannot act in prejudice of juſtice, and God cannot deny himſelf, Acts iv, 12. 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.' If thou rejoice in Chriſt, and haſt ſeen his ſuitableneſs, the ſight of an abſolute God will be a terror to thee, and thou wilt deſire to know no God but the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. i. 3. nor wilt thou dare to look to God, but through the vail of the fleſh of Chriſt. Thou wilt expect no pardon, but through the blood of the Mediator, nor no embraces from the Lord, but with arms dyed red in his precious blood; nor a ſmile of his face, but through his wounds. It is the character of Chriſt's church and people, 1 Theſſ. i. 1. they are in God the Father and in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whereby is not only ſignified their union with both, but they are diſtinguiſhed from the now rejected ſynagogue, which worſhip the Father, but kill his Son, and therefore pleaſe not God, for 'he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him.'

2. There is a generation who, like Moab, have been at eaſe from their youth. They confeſs they are ſinners; who denies that? but they have hitherto ſtood proof againſt convictions of their ſin and miſery. Conſequently they never ſaw Chriſt ſo ſuitable to their caſe, as earthly ſupplies; for the joy in the remedy cannot riſe higher than the apprehenſion of the evil of the diſeaſe. And among thoſe who have had their convictions, there are not a few with whom that axe never went to the root of the tree, but their trouble has riſen only from their actual ſins; but the ſin of the nature has ſtill lain out of their ſight; and therefore watchings againſt and mourning over theſe, have ſtill appeared more ſuitable to their caſe, than the ſanctifying Spirit of Chriſt, who alone can change our nature. But if thou art a rejoicer in Chriſt, thou haſt got the beſt view of his glorious ſuitableneſs to thy caſe out of the depths of the corruption of thy nature, Rom. vii. 24, 25. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.' See how the Lord raiſed Eliſha's credit amongſt the people of Jericho, that they might own him for the prophet of the Lord; it was by healing of their waters. As for the waters that were in their veſſels in their houſes, they might ſeveral ways correct the unwholeſomeneſs of it themſelves; and if nothing would do, they could have caſt it to the door; and if Eliſha had gone through all their houſes and healed their waters they had fetched in their veſſels, it would have been but a ſhort-lived kindneſs to them; for when that had been ſpent, they would juſt have been where they were before; but Eliſha goes to the ſpring, caſts in the ſalt there, and miraculouſly heals it; and this ſets him on high in their eſteem. The application is very eaſy, to Chriſt's healing of our corrupt natures.

3. There is a generation who are very eaſily diverted from the purſuit of an intereſt in Chriſt. If they can get it with eaſe, well and good, but if not, they will let it go, Prov. xxi. 25. Hence when conſcience is awakened, they will cry for an intereſt in Chriſt; they will follow religion with vigour for a time, but not finding that ſweetneſs in religion they expected, their tired ſouls fall aſleep in the lap of their luſts. As when the Lord brought his people out of Egypt, there was a mixed multitude, that were not Iſraelites; they would ſtay no longer in Fgypt, but away with that people to the land flowing with milk and honey. But when they came to the wilderneſs, and found not what they expected, they fell a luſting. Their heat for Canaan was cooled, and many a rueful look they gave back to Egypt again. The fiſh, leeks, and onions of Egypt, that they had eaten there, were ſweeter to them than the milk and honey of Canaan, which they thought they were never like to taſte; as appears from the complaints which the Iſraelites learned from the Egyptian rabble. Such cannot rejoice in Chriſt; he is not ſuitable to them. But if thou rejoiceſt in Chriſt, thou haſt, like Caleb and Joſhua, another Spirit, to follow the Lord fully. Such will leave no mean uneſſayed to get an intereſt in Chriſt. It is a matter of the greateſt weight, and neceſſity has no law. If they muſt die, they will die at Chriſt's door, knowing that if they go back, the famine will kill them, and therefore they will put on Ruth's generous reſolution, Ruth i. 16. ‘Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return ‘from following after thee; for whether thou goeſt, I ‘will go, and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: thy people ‘ſhall be my people, and thy God my God;’ being as ſhe, ſtedfaſtly minded, to wit, againſt all diſcouragements, and temptations ſhe had to go back.

4. There is a generation that was never brought to be content to have Chriſt on any terms. There is ſtill ſome idol that is dearer to them than to part with at any rate. Such a one was that young man, Mark x. 21, 22. Then Jeſus beholding him, loved him, and ſaid unto him, One thing thou lackeſt: go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor; and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven; and come, take up the croſs, and follow me. And he was ſad at that ſaying, and went away grieved: for he had great poſſeſſions. He loved eternal life well, and therefore went away ſorrowful; but he loved the world better, and therefore he went away. Theſe cannot rejoice in Chriſt as only and fully ſuited to their caſe. If ye ſaw a man prigging in a market, and reſolved not to have the commodity at the rate propoſed, ye would conclude, that that man either can want it, or he knows how to get his want ſupplied another way. In that John vi. 66. we find ſome going away from Chriſt: hereupon Chriſt puts the queſtion to the twelve, ver. 67. ‘Will ye alſo go away?’ Mark Peter's anſwer, ver. 68. ‘Lord, to whom ſhall we ‘go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.’ As if he had ſaid, Lord, it ſeems thoſe that have gone away think they can fend without thee: but as for us, how can we go away? for if we abide not with thee, we know of no other door to go to, and therefore go who will, we muſt abide. Now, when a man is brought to this, he muſt needs put a blank in Chriſt's hand, as Paul, Acts ix. 6. ‘Lord, ‘what wilt thou have me to do?’ He will be ready to part with all with heart and good will. If he rejoice in Chriſt as the treaſure hid in the field, for joy thereof he will ſell all, that the field and treaſure may be his, Matth. xiii. 44. From which it appears, that there are but few who have got this view of Chriſt as ſuitable to their caſe. But happy are they who have got it. ‘The election hath ‘obtained it, but the reſt were blinded.’

Thirdly, Chriſt is ſuited to the ſaints mind. And if it were not ſo, they could not rejoice in him. Chriſt is ſuitable to the caſe of every unbeliever, but, alas! he is not ſuited to their minds; and therefore they cannot rejoice in him, more than a child in the cutting off of a leg or arm, which yet may be very ſuitable to its caſe. Give a natural man his idols, the drunkard his cups, the covetous man his riches, theſe are ſuitable to his mind; but as unſuitable to his caſe, as a ſword for a madman's hand, or poiſon for a ſick man. But Chriſt is not only ſuited to the believer's caſe, but to his mind; for he is by grace made a partaker of the divine nature. Though diſallowed of men, he is choſen of God, and precious. There is not a child of God but Chriſt anſwers the deſires of their ſouls in breadth and in length, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘Whom ‘have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth ‘that I deſire beſides thee.’ There is none beſide him, none like him, none after him to the believer. [I have read a ſtory of the king of Armenia's ſon, whoſe wife being taken captive by Cyrus, was aſked by the conqueror what ranſom he would give for her. Truly, ſays he, I would redeem her with my own life. She being ſet free, and they all come home in peace, ſome commended Cyrus for one thing, ſome for another, all admiring him. The king's ſon aſks his wife, what ſhe thought of him. Truly, ſays ſhe, I did not ſo much as look on him. Whom looked you on then? ſays he. On him, replied ſhe, who ſaid he would redeem me with his own life. Thus Chriſt becomes a covering of the eyes unto thoſe who behold his glory by faith.] He is the perſon their ſoul deſireth: for to them he is altogether lovely: he is moſt deſirable, every thing in or about him is deſirable to them. I ſhall point at three things wherein Chriſt is ſuited to the minds of the ſaints, and to none others.

1. They are pleaſed at the heart, that he ſhould build the temple of the Lord, and bear the glory. The great deſign of the goſpel is, to exalt free grace in Chriſt; and grace runs through every vein of this contrivance; and as nature is contrary to it, ſo grace caſts the ſoul into the ſame mould, Matth. xi. 5. ‘The poor have the goſpel ‘preached to them.’ The goſpel comes to their ears, and goes down to their hearts, and changes them into the ſame image; even as melted metal caſt into moulds, comes out with the impreſſion and figure on it. Alluding to that which David ſaid to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxii. 8, 9. I may ſay, the ſaints think it not meet that the firſt Adam ſhould build the temple of the Lord, becauſe he has murdered himſelf and his poſterity, and has had great wars with heaven; but they agree that the temple be built by that ſon of his, the man Chriſt typified by Solomon, who was the only man of reſt among all the ſons of Adam, ſince he put them out of their reſt in God; and who can give peace and quietneſs to Iſrael. Pſal. lxxxix. 2. ‘Mercy ſhall be built, ſaid I.’ There is no merit of men in this building; it is a building of pure mercy; and the building ſhall go on ſtill, by laying one mercy above another. It pleaſes the ſaints to be proclaimed dyvors to raiſe the glory of the Redeemer's love, to be drowned in the debt of free grace, and to have the advantage of an eternity to acknowledge it in; to be ſtepping ſtones to his glory, and that on which he may mount his throne; to be nothing, that Chriſt may be all. This ſuits not the minds of natural men. He is the ſtone which the builders diſallowed: they were ſo far from allowing him to be the chief corner ſtone, that they laid him by as a ſtone unfit to have ſo much as the leaſt place in it. He is a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence to the diſobedient, and all natural men are ſuch. Yea, Chriſt himſelf pronounces themſelves bleſſed, who having him in their offer, are not offended in him, do not ſee ſomething in him that they cannot away with, Matth. xi. 6. ‘Bleſſed is he ‘whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.’ And therefore let men deceive themſelves as they will, Let God be true and every man a liar. None but the ſaints are thus pleaſed with him, as will appear by what I ſhall offer next.

2. They are pleaſed at the heart with his laws. They rejoice in him as a Lawgiver, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. ‘ The Lord ‘ is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King, he will ſave us.’ All the ſaints would vote the government to be laid on his ſhoulders, on whom the Father has laid their help. Chriſt makes ſuch a propoſal to ſinners as Jephthah did to the Gileadites, Judg. xi. 9. ‘ If I fight for you, and ‘ prevail, ſhall I be your head ?’ and all whoſe hearts the Lord has touched, will acquieſce therein, to wit, that Chriſt being their hand to ſave them, he be alſo their head to rule them. Chriſt's yoke is welcome to them in every part of it; his law is ſuitable to their minds, becauſe their minds are ſuited to the law, Pſal. cxix. 128. ‘ I eſteem ‘ all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and ‘ I hate every falſe way:’ for the law is written in their hearts, Heb. viii. 10. there are gracious inclinations wrought in their ſouls towards that purity and holineſs which is required by the law. For as the law is a ſort of tranſcript of the nature of God; ſo they are made partakers of the divine nature. But becauſe this partaking of the divine nature is but imperfect in this preſent ſtate, and there is in ſaints an unregenerate part as well as a regenerate, therefore the ſin that dwelleth in them, will have its reluctancy againſt the yoke of Chriſt: but it is only partial, not total; ſeeing there is a principle of grace within them likewiſe, that approves the law as holy, juſt, and good, Rom. vii. 12. But this is far from the wicked, even the moſt refined hypocrite, who always find in Chriſt ſome ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence; ſome part of holineſs, that their hearts are never reconciled with: otherwiſe the Pſalmiſt had laid an unſure ground of comfort to himſelf in that, Pſal. cxix. 6. ‘ Then ſhall I not be ‘ aſhamed, when I have reſpect unto all thy command- ‘ ments.’ Both the godly and ungodly man have ſome ſin which the heart cleaveth to by others, which is like Eli's, 1 Sam. iii. 13. the iniquity which he knoweth. Let the trial be made herein, and it will be found, that the luſt, and not the law, is ſuited to the minds of moſt men; and that they would beſtow the blood of their bodies to blot out that luſt croſſing command out of the law, rather than find the efficacy of Chriſt's blood killing that law-croſſing luſt; deſiring rather to have the law brought down to them, than themſelves brought up to the law. And it will be found contrariwiſe, in thoſe that rejoice in Chriſt, to whom his laws that directly fly in the face of thoſe luſts that do ſo eaſily encompaſs them, are as chains of gold about their neck, which they love, whereas they are as iron fetters to others.

3. They are well pleaſed with that fulneſs of the Spirit of ſanctification that dwells in him to be communicated; and that the Father has appointed him to be the head of influences. And they rejoice more in the grace of God without them in Chriſt, than the grace of God within them: as he whoſe own the well is rejoiceth more in the ſpring than all his veſſels full of it; though a ſtranger will rejoice more in the fulneſs of the veſſel given him, than the fulneſs of the fountain which is not his, ‘ Thy Spirit is good, lead me into the land of upright- ‘ neſs,’ Pſal. cxliii. 10. The Spirit is good in the ſaints eyes, and it is good that the fulneſs of the Spirit is lodged in him. To whom ſin is hateful, the Spirit of holineſs will be precious; where the power and ſtain of ſin are loathſome, the water that came out of Chriſt's ſide, will be ſuited to their minds as well as the blood. Where the love of God dwells, they will be ‘ changed into the ſame ‘ image from glory to glory.’ And as the Father hath appointed him head of influences, ſo do they chuſe him as ſuch to them, Hoſ. i. 28. ‘ Then ſhall the children ‘ of Judah and the children of Iſrael be gathered together, ‘ and appoint themſelves one head, and they ſhall come ‘ up out of the land.’ But ſeeing in others the Spirit of the world reigns, the Spirit of holineſs is not ſuited to their minds: for ‘ what agreement hath light with dark- ‘ neſs ?’ or what pleaſure can they whoſe hearts are glued to ſin, take in that which is deſtructive thereto ? Yea, and that ſeeming holineſs which ſome natural men attain to is but the product of nature, aſſiſted with external revelation, and the common operations of the Spirit, while they remain eſtranged from the life of God through Jeſus Chriſt, who is the life of the ſaints. It is not among nature's inclinations to go out of itſelf for ſanctification; but nature's way here is for a man to go in to himſelf for it. The way of goſpel ſanctification, as well as juſtification, is a ſtumbling block in the way of unbelievers, John vi. 63. ‘ It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the fleſh profit- ‘ eth nothing; the words that I ſpeak unto you, they ‘ are ſpirit, and they are life.’ But mark how they ſtumbled at it, ver. 60, 66. ‘ Many therefore of his diſciples, ‘ when they had heard this, ſaid, This an hard ſaying, ‘ who can hear it ? From that time many of his diſciples ‘ went back, and walked no more with him.’ That ſoul whoſe choice is the humble dependent life on Chriſt as the head of influences, going out of itſelf for ſanctification to Chriſt, in the way of believing, is a happy ſoul. See how the text joins theſe together, worſhipping God in Spirit, and rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus, as the altar of burnt offering where the fire continually burns, which they may fetch to ſet to the incenſe of their duties. And ſo much for the firſt thing in this rejoicing, which is the main thing. I ſhall be more brief in the reſt, which do of courſe follow on this holy complacency of the ſoul in Chriſt, and the myſtery of Chriſt.

SECONDLY, Then there is in this rejoicing in Chriſt, a rolling of the ſoul over on him for all. The child of God beholding him ſuited to the divine perfections, embraceth him accordingly, laying the whole ſtreſs of his ſoul upon him, taking him joyfully for his caſe. This is intimated to us in the parable of the treaſure hid in a field, Matth. xiii. 44. The goſpel is that field, and Chriſt is the treaſure. Obſerve (1.) To whomſoever the goſpel comes, they may have Chriſt, if they will, he offers himſelf in it. For the treaſure is in the field, and both are to be ſold. (2) Few ſee the glory of Chriſt held forth in the goſpel, therefore he and his goſpel are ſlighted. Many go over the field of the goſpel, but find no treaſure in it, and therefore ſay, What is that field more than another, that beloved more than another beloved ? (3.) Whenſoever the glory of Chriſt is diſcovered to a ſoul, that ſoul beholds him as an upmaking portion; ſo as to conclude, that if he had him, he would have enough in him. For he joys on the diſcovery of him, and is willing to part with all for it. (4.) That ſoul will not reſt till Chriſt be his. (5.) That ſoul quits the gripe of all others to live on Chriſt, to take him for and inſtead of all; he lays his all upon the treaſure; if it hold good, he has all; if it ſhould fail, he has nothing. Happy the ſoul that thus rejoiceth in Chriſt. That is the wiſe man, who digs till he comes to the rock and then with joy builds on it The ſoul finds it has a heavy weight of wants and weakneſs which it can neither bear nor throw off; but finding that Chriſt is every way ſuitable to ſuch a one's caſe, and hearing his comfortable voice in the goſpel, the ſoul heartily complies with the offer, and caſts all its burdens on Chriſt for time and eternity, Pſal. lv. 22. and eſpecially theſe two.

1. Their weight of guilt. 2. their weight of duties.

Firſt, Their weight of guilt is laid over on him through faith in his blood, Rom. iii. 25. Guilt is a heavy load, able to ſink the ſoul into the loweſt hell; but the ſoul lays its hand on the head of the ſacrifice, caſting over this weight on a crucified Chriſt. They come with their polluted ſouls to the blood of ſprinkling, Heb. xii. 24. Chriſt is the city of refuge, and thither they go, as the only place ſuitable for them to dwell in. All without this city of refuge is under the dominion of the law; there death reigns; juſtice is ready to do execution; there the heavens are black, the windows of heaven opened, and a broken law without intermiſſion raining curſes on their guilty heads. Wherefore the ſoul at firſt makes haſte to eſcape, and throwing itſelf into Chriſt as the city of refuge, carefully abides there, and dare not ſet out its head without the gates for ever, Pſal. xci. 1. ‘ He that dwelleth in the ſe- ‘ cret place of the moſt High, ſhall abide under the ſha- ‘ dow of the Almighty.’ verſe 2. ‘ I will ſay of the Lord, ‘ He is my refuge.’ I have ſaid, and will ſay it, that he is my refuge, under whoſe protection I may be ſafe. And thus Chriſt himſelf holds out that ſafe covert of his righteouſneſs and grace, which he offers to ſinners in the goſpel, Matth. xxiii. 37. ‘ How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her ‘ chickens under her wings!’ They are weak, and in hazard of being made a prey; but under the wings of his grace they may find ſafety, and therefore they come to truſt under his wings. His blood is the only propitiation, his righteouſneſs their only cover, his ſatisfaction their only plea for mercy, his payment of the debt their only plea for their diſcharge; for they have had the ſentence of death in themſelves, that they might truſt in him who raiſeth the dead, while others keep up their confidence in the fleſh. Such the Lord pronounceth bleſſed, Matth. v. 3. ‘ Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit.’

Secondly, Their weight of duties is laid over on him.

1. For performance. Chriſt lays his yoke upon the believer, and he lays himſelf and it over on Chriſt again as the fountain of ſtrength: Matth. xi. 29. ‘ Take my ‘ yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and ‘ lowly in heart; and ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls.’ Pſal. cxvi. 9, 10. ‘ I will walk before the Lord in the land ‘ of the living. I believed, therefore have I ſpoken.’ Hence it becomes a eaſy yoke, which before was unſupportable. How can that be? Why, duties are indeed a dead weight while laid on by the hand of the law, and borne by virtue of the remains of that ſtrength which Adam left us; which is but mere weakneſs, and cannot make us bear it more than a child can bear a mountain, John xv. 5. ‘ Without ‘ me ye can do nothing.’ But as for the yoke of Chriſt, it is laid on with a promiſe of ſtrength, and with it is laid into the heart a principle of rolling over the ſoul and it on Chriſt again: Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt: Nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me. And ſo he bears the heavy end of his own yoke, and bears them and their burden too. Thus the believer has a kind of derived omnipotency, Phil. iv. 13. ‘I can do all things ‘ through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me. For it is God ‘ which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good ‘ pleaſure.’ He works the will for the work, and the work for us when he has wrought the will for it. A vaſt weight may be on a little ſtone in a building, without its ſinking, when it, and all that is on it, lies upon a rock. Hence, Heb. xi. is ſpent in ſhewing the mighty things the ſaints have done and ſuffered by faith. For in a believer there is a moſt ſuitable match, ſufficiency joined with inſufficiency, ſtrength with weakneſs, all fulneſs with wants and poverty; even the mighty God with worm Jacob. And thus the believer goes out of himſelf for performance of duties, while the hypocrite goes in to himſelf. For it is a plain truth, that the way and manner of working follows the manner of being and living, and every man will act as he lives. Now, the believer lives by Chriſt, and therefore muſt act by him; and will endeavour to hold off lippening to his own ſtrength, as to his own righteouſneſs; and to take Chriſt for ſanctification, as well as for righteouſneſs, God having made him both to his people. Natural men are without Chriſt, and ſo are trees by themſelves, having their own root in the ground: and hence for the fruit of duty all the natural powers of their ſouls are called together as in a ſolemn day: but becauſe their root is rottenneſs, their bloſſom goes up as duſt; and their fruits are like the apples of Sodom, which are very pleaſant to the eye, but being cut up, are nothing but a heap of loathſome matter; and no wonder, ſeeing they grow by the dead ſea of ſelf. But the godly are branches whoſe fruit depends on influence from Chriſt, as the true vine into which they are ingrafted; hence the bent of the believer's ſoul lies that way, not to truſt his natural powers, nor inherent graces; ſeeing theſe depend on Chriſt, as light on the ſun, and are but rays, not the fountain of light, but to go out of himſelf, in the way of believing, Phil. iv. 13. ‘ I can do all things through Chriſt which ‘ ſtrengtheneth me.’ And therefore, while others like common boatmen ſerve themſelves with their oars, ſeeing they never go out of the barren region of ſelf; they will depend on Chriſt for the blowings of his Spirit, having a mind for Immanuel's land.

2. For acceptance of their duties, Heb. xi. 4. ‘ By faith ‘ Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice than ‘ Cain.’ God in Chriſt is the alone object of the ſaints worſhip. The ſaints labour in duties which is accepted, is a labour of love, Heb. vi. 10. Our love to God is but the reflex of God's love to us. God's ſpecial love to us darts it beams unto us no other way but through the veil of the fleſh of Chriſt; and it muſt be through the ſame veil that our love returns to him, and itſelf and its fruits accepted. Duties done acceptably, are the returns of influences from heaven; which are communicated through Chriſt, who lies at the fountain-head, as the great mean of communion betwixt God and the ſaints; and as influences come from God by him, ſo the duty is directed to God through him. As God will not accept, ſo the ſaints dare not offer for acceptance, prayer, or praiſe, but thro' him; nor any good work, though it were a ſacrifice of their own blood, but as waſhed in the blood of the Lamb, Rev. vii. 14. They will not expect any of their ſacrifices to be accepted, but ſuch as are laid on the altar Chriſt, which ſanctifies the gift. Here the ſtreſs is laid for acceptance by the ſaints; to which the view they have of God's holineſs, the naughtineſs of their beſt duties, their complacency in God's method of grace, and contrivance of ſalvation through Chriſt, and that goſpel turn that grace has given their hearts, do determine them; while the natural man is a ſtranger to all theſe, and ſo ruſhes forward to the throne with his duties, not honouring the Son, and thereby diſhonouring the Father; for worſhipping in the name of Chriſt, is no leſs than faith in his blood.

THIRDLY, In this rejoicing in Chriſt there is a reſt of the heart in him as a fit match for the ſoul. For as in marriage there is a view of ſuch a perſon as a fit match, whereupon follows the choice and acceptance; and in caſe the perſon choſen anſwer the expectation, there ariſeth from thence a reſt of the heart in ſuch a perſon, which is the ſolid joy of that lot: ſo when the ſoul is pleaſed with Chriſt as every way ſuitable, it rolls itſelf over on him, and reſts in him as a fit match. Our firſt Adam did us two ill turns. He led us off the path of life; and ſo left us with a conſcience full of guilt. He led us away from the living God, and ſo left us with a heart full of unſatisfied deſires. Hence the ſons of Adam quickly finding themſelves like the horſe leech having two daughters, crying, Give, give; a reſtleſs conſcience, and a reſtleſs heart; to each of which they muſt needs ſay, ‘ Shall I not ſeek reſt for thee, that ‘ it may be well with thee?’ And ſo the ſoul ſets to work: and the firſt way it goes, is, through dry places, ſeeking reſt, as the devil when he goes out of a man. And,

1. For the conſcience; the natural man goes through the dry and barren region of the law, ſeeking reſt to it, going about to eſtabliſh his own righteouſneſs, Rom. x. 3. The ſun is gone down on them, and therefore they light their candles, and compaſs themſelves about with their own ſparks. And in what meaſure that reſtleſſneſs has ſeized their conſciences, ſo far do they go the round of law-obedience to ſtill it. The conſciences of ſome are eaſily lulled aſleep; a few coldriſe wiſhes will do it with ſome; others can get no reſt till they go the round of all the external duties of religion; nay, ſo reſtleſs are the conſciences of ſome, that it will coſt them to do many things, with Herod, to remove many beloved luſts that keep the conſcience unquiet, to water the couch with tears, to bind it down with vows, and engagements of reformation, and after all carefully to watch againſt thoſe things that diſturbed it before. And yet for all this, becauſe it is not ſprinkled with blood, it can get no ſolid reſt; it gets but an unſound nap, out of which it will have a fearful awakening. It is ſtill but ‘ as he that lieth down in the midſt ‘ of the ſea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a maſt,’ Prov. xxiii. 34. Now, Chriſt finds his elect in this ſame caſe, ſeeking reſt to their conſciences in the law: and whatever reſt they may ſometimes find in it, he doth at length draw that pillow from under their head, till he make them effectually deſpair of finding reſt there to their conſciences, whoſe wounds ſpurn all remedy from their beſt and moſt ſerious duties; and then diſcovers to them the blood of ſprinkling, the only conſcience-purging remedy : And here the ſoul finds reſt to the conſcience : Heb. ix. 14. ‘ How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, ‘ who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf with- ‘ out ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works ‘ to ſerve the living God ?’ The conſcience reſts in him ; of which before in the ſecond head. But that which I aim at here, is,

2. The reſt of the heart : which the natural man and the Chriſtian both ſeek : but the ſoul out of Chriſt never finds it ; only they that are in Chriſt find it in him. For clearing of which conſider,

1*ſt*, Our hearts naturally are full of deſires of happineſs, which crave ſatisfaction. Even when deſire fails, theſe are ſtill freſh and vigorous ; and a man ſhall as ſoon ceaſe to be a man, as ceaſe to deſire to be a happy man. The heart of a man is an empty craving thing, of a large capacity. And wants are ſo interwoven with our nature, and deſires of the ſupply of theſe wants, that man ſeems to be little elſe but a compound of wants and deſires, which are enlarged as the ocean. Heap together unto Chriſtleſs hearts all perfections that are to be found in all the men of the earth, increaſe the heap to them with all that is to be found in other creatures, all would be overwhelmed with a vaſt infinite maſs of wants, as a filing of gold under a mountain ; and their deſires after all remain as wide as the ſea, ſeeing the ſoul is capable of an infinite good. Ye ſhall as ſoon tell the motes that appear flying through a new-ſweeped houſe, where the beams of the ſun are let in, number the ſtars, and tell to the laſt grain of ſand by the ſea-ſhore, as ye ſhall come to the laſt deſire of a man's heart, if you keep off an infinite good. Behold, with what a wide mouth the heart of man appears ! ſatisfied it muſt be, but where will it find an anſwerable fulneſs ? Peace and reſt they would have ; but, the way of peace they have not known ; there is none that ſeeketh after God, though their throat is an open ſepulchre, ſtanding always open, crying, Give, give, and never ſaying, It is enough, Prov. xxx. 16. Hence,

2*dly*, The natural man goeth through the dry places of the creation, but findeth none. They are bewildered travellers, that have loſt their way ; they wander in the wilderneſs, but find no city to dwell in : ſo Solomon hits their miſerable caſe, Eccleſ. xi. 15. ‘ The labour of ‘ the fooliſh wearieth every one of them, becauſe he knoweth not how to go to the city.’ The man goes about extracting the ſweet of every created thing he can reach to for ſatisfaction ; but they will not, cannot anſwer his expectation. They are like the Sodomites at Lot's houſe, when ſtruck with blindneſs, where all were for the door, but never one of them could find it. Some fix on the profits of the world, and drink greedily at theſe broken ciſterns. And the cream and ſtrength of their affections are ſpent on theſe ; till they find they are but ſpending their labour for that which is not bread, Iſa. lv. 2. Some hang at the breaſts of the world's pleaſures ; and often preſs ſo hard for ſatisfaction in theſe, that they wring out blood inſtead of milk ; and as men hammering at a flinty rock for water, bring forth fire from it flaſhing in their faces. The man is like the hungry beaſt, which, if it abide within the hedge, rives all up to the red earth ; neither doth that ſatisfy, but they break over the hedge, if the forbidden fruit can afford them that ſatisfaction, which the allowed cannot. Some purſue the luſt of the eye, that is never ſatisfied with ſeeing ; ſome the luſt of the fleſh, that is never gratified ; and ſome, the pride of life that can never be ſatisfied. Some ſoar a little above the common gang, and they ſeem to eſpy in knowledge what is not to be found in other things, and their ſouls fly out in eager purſuit after that, which indeed bids faireſt to it among all created things ; but what comes it to at length ? The ſoul finds the way to it ſore travel ; and after they have travelled far and ſore for it, their hearts are ſtung with theſe queſtions, Job xxviii. 20. ‘ Whence ‘ then cometh wiſdom ? and where is the place of under- ‘ ſtanding ? ſeeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, ‘ and kept cloſe from the fowls of the air.’ And what ſcraps of it are gathered here and there, are far from giving the promiſed reſt to the heart, Eccleſ. i. ult. ‘ For ‘ in much wiſdom is much grief : and he that increaſeth ‘ knowledge, increaſeth ſorrow.’ The world is like the air in a ſummer-day full of inſects ; and natural men are like a company of fooliſh children, one running to catch one, another to catch another : and when all is done, none of them can fill the hand. How humbling is it to think, that after the heart is diſappointed in real enjoyments, it goes about to feed itſelf with mere fancies ; ſo that the imagination is let looſe, and runs hither and thither, forms to itſelf a thouſand airy nothings, traverſes the world, and turns the man into a thouſand fine ſhapes, giving the man a multitude of poſſeſſions, if not of the hand, yet of the heart ; as if the fooliſh heart, when it had tried all other means in vain, would ſtrive to dream itſelf full and happy ? But when that wandering of the ſoul ceaſeth, he awaketh and his ſoul is faint. But will the tired ſoul reſt after all ? No ; but goes back again to the ſame door where it has got a hundred refuſals. O, thinks the man, if I had ſuch a thing, I would be well. May be he gets it ; but he finds for as big as it was afar off, it will not fill his hand, when he gripes it ; hence new labour to bring forth new diſappointments without end.

3*dly*, Chriſt finds the elect ſoul, in the day of converting grace, ſeeking reſt among the blinded world, brings it to deſpair of ever finding it there, and diſcovers himſelf to it as the fountain of ſatisfaction. And then the man hears a voice ſaying, as Pſal. lxxxi. 10. ‘ Open thy mouth ‘ wide, and I will fill it.’ “ Many a time you have open- “ ed your mouth wide enough to your idols ; but now “ open it to me, I will fill it. Lay the mouth of your “ ſoul on the breaſts of my conſolations, and they ſhall “ flow abundantly.” The word for believing comes from a root that ſignifies to nurſe, as if faith were nothing elſe but the laying of the ſoul on the breaſts of Chriſt's conſolations, in whom dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead. And truly the ſoul is like the hungry infant, that gapes, and ſucks every thing that comes near its mouth ; yet is reſtleſs, till the mother ſet it to the breaſt ; and then it reſts ; and ſo doth the believing ſoul in Chriſt. The heaven born ſoul is ſeeking a match for itſelf, but cannot find it among all the creatures, there is ſomething wanting to ſatisfaction in every thing the ſoul meets with, till it come to Chriſt ; and there the ſoul finds a match for it in its enlarged deſires, and ſo takes up its everlaſting reſt in him ; for coming to him, they come to the utmoſt of their deſires. Ye may take up the reſt of the heart in Chriſt in theſe two particulars.

1. The deſires of the ſoul centering and meeting in Chriſt. The heart naturally is as it were in a thouſand pieces, each of them following ſome one or another vanity ; and the deſires of the heart, like a flock of hungry fowls, are ſcattered on the face of the earth, catching what they can get, till Chriſt is diſcovered by an eye of faith ; and then where the carcaſe is, there will the eagles be gathered together, and as the ſcattered rays of the ſun contracted in the burning-glaſs, fix on one thing, ſo the deſires of the ſoul are brought to meet in one point, even in him. The heart is never right till it come to this ; for while the natural man's heart is in queſt of happineſs, and his deſires are ſent out to bring it in from all quarters, no wonder ſome of them ſtumble on Chriſt : ſeeing they have a double heart, why may not Chriſt get one, while the world and luſts keep another ? But that is not the reſt of the heart in Chriſt, but parted between him and others. As Jacob found his marriage with Leah and Rachel both, not a reſt but a rack to his heart ; ſo ſhall the divided heart ever be found a reſtleſs heart.

“ But, alas ! may ſome ſay, I find indeed deſires in “ my heart going out after Chriſt ; but as true it is there “ are many deſires in it going another way. Can ſuch a “ heart be ſaid to rejoice and reſt in Chriſt ?” For anſwer to this, conſider, that as faith is not perfected in this life, ſo neither is the believer's rejoicing and reſting in Chriſt. The fleſh hath its deſires as well as the Spirit, Gal. v. 17. ‘ The fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and ‘ the Spirit againſt the fleſh.’ And therefore though they that believe do enter into reſt, yet there remains a reſt to the people of God, which they ſhall get in heaven.

1ſt, In what channel runs the main ſtream of thy deſires? Though a river may on each ſide have its ſmall ſtrands that run irregularly, yet we account the main ſtream and channel that wherein the ſeveral brooks that make it up do meet. And thus in the child of God, though there may be many irregular deſires, yet the main ſtream of deſire in them goes Chriſt-ward. The Pſalmiſt wanted not deſires of the fleſh; yet, ſays he, ‘ One ‘ thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſeek after, ‘ that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the days ‘ of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to ‘ enquire in his temple,’ Pſal. xxvii. 4. In the natural man it is quite contrary; his main deſires are after the world and his luſts, the ſtrength of his affections are ſpent on theſe, ſo that there is nothing left for Chriſt, but a few languiſhing deſires, that bear no proportion to his deſires after other things, more than a little ſide ſtream to the main ſtream of the water. Thus the Pſalmiſt diſtinguiſhes himſelf from natural men, Pſal. iv. 6. ‘ There be ‘ many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good? Lord, ‘ lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.’ But remember I am now ſpeaking of deſires after Chriſt as a reſt to the heart, not as a reſt to the conſcience: for, ſeeing ‘ ſkin for ſkin all that a man hath will he give for his ‘ life:’ the terrors of a reſtleſs conſcience may make the chief ſtream of deſire go after Chriſt for reſt to the conſcience, as the fooliſh virgins when they ſaw their lamps gone out, and the bridegroom coming, left all their other trafficking wherein they had ſpent their former time, and went to buy oil, Matth. xxv. 1. to the 13.

2dly, Conſider whether or not thine abſolute deſires do centre in Chriſt. If you were left this day to your free choice, never to be called to an account for it whatever way ye made it, either Chriſt or luſts, where would your deſires center? Is there ſo much fulneſs for heart ſatisfaction ſeen by you in Chriſt, as would draw your deſires after him? ye are the virgins whoſe heart Chriſt has? Let the natural man's deſires after Chriſt be ever ſo ſtrong, I may well ſay, they do not ſo much deſire him becauſe they would have him, as becauſe they cannot want him: they do in this what they would not, and therefore it is not they that do it, but conſcience that dwelleth in them. And on the contrary, the ſaints have their deſires after luſts; but ſo complying with them, do what they would not: therefore it is not they but ſin that dwells in them.

3dly, Conſider what are thoſe deſires in thy heart that ſwallow up all other, as the ſea in which all the rivers do meet? If thou can ſay, it is deſire after Chriſt, thou art a real ſaint: Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘ Whom have I in heaven ‘ but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire be‘ ſides thee.’ In the heart of a ſaint there are other ſheaves beſides Chriſt, but all others muſt bow to his. Do thy deſires after Chriſt rebound on thy deſires after other things, towards the weakening and wearing them off? though ye ſee ye come but little ſpeed, it is a good ſign: Rom. vii. 22. ‘ For I delight in the law of God, after the ‘ inward man.’ The godly ſoul may have many woful deſires, but the heart would be content to deny itſelf of all of them, for Chriſt. But on the contrary, the natural man's deſire after other things than Chriſt, ſwallows up all other, like Pharaoh's lean kine eating up the fat ones, and yet ſtill lean. His deſires of Chriſt muſt yield to his deſires of luſts; ſeeing the hungry heart craves ſatisfaction, and they never yet found as much ſweetneſs in Chriſt, as in other things: and therefore would judge it but a ſorry bargain to ſell all for the one pearl; as was the caſe with the young man, Mark x. 21, 22.

2. The deſires of the heart abiding on him for ſatisfaction. The ſoul, after long wandering amongſt the creatures for ſatisfaction, beholds all vain and unſatisfactory; and beholding the fulneſs of Chriſt, lays hold on him, and reſts in him as an object adequate to the boundleſs deſires of the ſoul, and in whom it may be filled, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. forecited. And thus the ſoul is brought at length to the utmoſt of its deſires; there they terminate as on an object completely ſatisfactory. This is their reſt and here they will ſtay. Here is the treaſure hid, and here will they halt and dig for it. This is the city which they find to reſt in; there will they abide. This reſt of the heart in Chriſt, is ſometimes in ſome of God's children ſcrewed up far higher, when they are filled as with marrow and with fat, in the ſenſible enjoyment of him; yea and have as much as they can hold in this frail ſtate, when they are filled with joy in believing, even joy unſpeakable and full of glory; beholding the unſearchable boundleſs riches of Chriſt, and aſſuredly know that all is theirs, then they can ſay, ‘ I have all and abound.’ But this is too high to be a mark of a ſaint, and would leave moſt part of them out of the roll of ſaints. But he whoſe deſires abide on Chriſt for ſatisfaction, has taken up his reſt in him; for he can ſay with David, ‘ This is all my ‘ deſire, although he make it not to grow,’ 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. The heart could be content with Chriſt alone, but nothing can content it without him. And this does ſo far dry up the devouring deeps of carnal deſires, wherewith the ſoul was before plagued, that the ſoul never goes abroad for ſatisfaction among the creatures in ſuch manner as it was wont. Chriſt becomes to the ſoul a covering of the eyes, as Abraham was to Sarah: and a draught of the water of life quenches that ſcorching thirſt they had before after creature-ſweetneſs. They give over the trade of begging at the creatures door, ſeeing their hearts are perſuaded there is bread enough in their Father's houſe, and to ſpare, Luke xv. 17. When the ſoul comes to Chriſt, it takes up its reſt in him, ſaying, upon the diſcovery of him, as one was wont to ſay when riſing from prayer, “ Be cloſed now, O mine eyes, be cloſed; for “ henceforth ſhall ye never ſee a more lovely object.”

1ſt, The gracious ſoul can be content with Chriſt alone. This is plainly the attainment of all that attain to Chriſt. Every man that finds the treaſure hid in the field, ſells all he hath with joy to purchaſe it; which he could not do, if he could not be contented with the treaſure alone. And by the want of this diſpoſition of ſoul Chriſt diſcovered the hypocriſy of that young man ſpoke of, Mark x. 21. For certainly that heart is divided that can have no contentment in Chriſt, unleſs it turn aſide by the flocks of his companions alſo: it loves him not as a ſuitable match to the ſoul, ſeeing the heart cannot reſt in him. Wherefore the gracious ſoul ſees that ſatisfaction in Chriſt, that it can live on him without its former luſts; yea though all things in the world be gone from him, while his God is not gone, his reſt and rejoicing will be to the fore.

2dly, Nothing can fill Chriſt's room with them, have what they will; the want of him ſqueezes the ſap out of all other enjoyments to them. As if a thouſand ciphers were ſet together without a figure, the total will ſtill be naught; ſo unto the gracious ſoul all without Chriſt is naught, becauſe he is the reſt of their hearts, Philip. iii. 8. ‘ Yea ‘ doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excel‘ lency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: for ‘ whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count ‘ them but dung that I may win Chriſt.’ The worldly man's indefinite wiſh ſays, he is too eaſily pleaſed; it is any good, but the godly man's wiſh is very particular, the light of thy countenance; it is the Lord he ſeeks it of; the favour of God in Chriſt, or nothing. As the raven ſent out of the ark miſſed not the ark while there was carrion enough to feed on; ſo give natural men whereon to feed their luſts, and ſomething to appeaſe their conſcience, they will reign as kings without Chriſt. Theſe are their good things, Luke xvi. 25. But the heart of the child of God will ſay, Lord, what wilt thou give me, if I go without thyſelf the chief good?

Queſt. But doth the heart of a ſaint always thus reſt in Chriſt? Anſw. There is no doubt but ſometimes one that has taken up his heart's reſt in Chriſt, may fall off his reſt, that his ſoul may return to his true reſt again. Saints may ſometimes take up their reſt under ſome created ſhadow, but they will not dwell there. Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd, chap. iv. 6. But even in this caſe there will be found a twofold difference betwixt them and natural men.

1. The ſaints never get ſuch a kindly reſt as the natural man in theſe things. The reaſon is plain; the natural man is in his own element in that caſe, the ſaint is not. The natural man is as one who is at home in his own bed, the other is as one abroad. This is clear from the caſe of the ſpouſe, Cant. v. 2. She is aſleep, but it is very unkindly reſt ſhe gets. We may noitce three things that make it ſo. (1.) There is a thorn of ſelf condemnation in the conſcience: I ſleep; I am out of order, this is not the caſe I ſhould be in. The ſoul is accuſed of ingratitude to Chriſt. Chriſt is at the door, he knocks, and has ſtood over-long. Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? ſays conſcience. Have I been a wilderneſs unto Iſrael? a land of darkneſs? ſays the Lord, Jer. ii. 31. And the man is ſpeechleſs like Jonah; of whom it may be obſerved, that he anſwered not again. (2.) There is a wound of ſelf-diſſatisfaction in the heart, My heart waketh. There is a ſecret diſcontent with his condition, becauſe the enjoyment of Chriſt is not in it. Such perſons would be glad of Chriſt's return, though their ſouls are fettered that they cannot go after him, till he put in his hand by the hole of the lock. (3.) There is a faint moving of the affections after him. It is the voice of my beloved. Although the ſoul has written the bill of divorce, in fond affections to another, yet ſhe would not ſign it for ten thouſand worlds. Though ſhe is not able to riſe to let him in, ſhe cannot think of his going quite away. It is another ſort of reſt the natural man has in theſe things; where there is but one principle, to wit, that of corruption, ſo that whatever diſquiet conſcience may give him at a time, yet it is but a carnal defiled conſcience, and cannot diſturb the hearts reſt in luſts; as Balaam's conſcience left his heart ſtill in love with the wages of iniquity, though his conſcience ſtood in his way of winning them. And though the heart of the natural man cannot be free of diſquiet, yet it is not becauſe Chriſt is not in that caſe of his for the reſt of his heart, but becauſe the creature cannot anſwer his hungry appetite; yet though one cannot, he hopes another may, and ſo all that it amounts to, is, the ſluggard turning him on his bed. Which brings me to a

2. Thing, namely, The Lord does always at length hunt the ſaint out of his ſtarting holes, till his ſoul return to its reſt. Hoſ. ii. 6, 7. 'Therefore behold, I will hedge 'up her way with thorns, and make a wall, that ſhe ſhall 'not find her paths. Then ſhall ſhe ſay, I will go and 'return to my firſt huſband, for then was it better with 'me than now.' As the needle in the compaſs touched with a good load-ſtone, reſts not till it turn towards the north; ſo the man who is partaker of the divine nature, will get no kindly reſt with his affections on the earth; till they be ſet above. The ſaint for his heart's reſt goes to God from the creatures, the natural man for his goes from one creature to another; being conjured as it were within the circle of created things. For why, the curſe of the ſerpent is on ſuch perſons; and though they may change their particular place, their holes of the earth, yet duſt is their meat, and on their belly they muſt go. They want the ſeraphims wings, which grace gives the ſaints, and ſo never mount heaven-ward. We do not read of one among all the ſaints more like a bird that wandereth from his neſt than Solomon. His father had warned him, to ſerve the Lord with a perfect heart, that is a heart reſting in God, not falling in pieces, and gauding after idols; and with a willing mind, a mind taking delight in God. But when Solomon grew old, his heart was not perfect with the Lord, He fell off his reſt in God, and went after idols. And many a door he went to while he travelled through the creation, but he was repulſed at them all, and at length brought back again to God, with that report, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. For though a ſon may vague a while, yet ſeeing his Father has a houſe, he will grow wiſe at length, and return to it, Pſal. xc. 1. 'Lord, thou haſt been our dwelling place in all genera'tions;' though ſometimes they are not at home, but lodge elſewhere. But the common beggar muſt be ſtill going from houſe to houſe, and ſo ſpend the time of his life, becauſe he has no certain dwelling place.

LASTLY, In this rejoicing in Chriſt there is a confeſſion of him unto ſalvation, Rom. x. 10. 'With the heart man 'believeth unto righteouſneſs, and with the mouth con'feſſion is made unto ſalvation.' And as the image of God that was impreſſed on man's ſoul in his creation did ſhine through his body, as the candle through the lantern, ſo that reſt of the heart in Chriſt, that in itſelf is a hidden thing, will nevertheleſs ſhine forth in the ſaints outward converſation. Some hypocrites have ſuch a dexterity in aping God's children, that it will be very difficult to know what to ſay in this point; which I would rather hear of than ſpeak of. But as the text intimates a difference, I dare not quite paſs it; hoping the Lord that has laid it in the way, will give ſomething that may be uſeful; though I would not have people to lay the main ſtreſs of the evidence of their ſtate here, but to uſe it as a help to let them ſee what lies more inwardly. I ſhall conſider this holy glorying in Chriſt, and confeſſion of him, with reſpect to mens ordinary converſation, and with reſpect to their converſation in ſuffering times, and I think the text looks to both.

Firſt, With reſpect to the ſoul's ordinaty converſation.

1. This inward rejoicing in Chriſt wears off that air of pride that is ſeen about many profeſſors, vainly puffed up with their fleſhly mind. They will not only have humbleneſs of mind, but be clothed with humility. Whatever may be attributed to the temper of any, it is hard to think a ſaint will ſhew ſuch an air of vanity about him, as to make him loathſome to diſcerning Chriſtians.

2. Grace will circumciſe the ſelf-condemning lips. Boaſters are enrolled with thoſe that have but a form of godlineſs. They that rejoice in Chriſt, feel ſuch a weight of corruption in the heart, that it will be an embargo on their tongue, to keep them from proclaiming their own goodneſs, as moſt men do. But it is ſad to think of the ſtrain of many profeſſors diſcourſe, of their conditions, abilities, attaloments, &c. where is not wanting a fat ſacrifice to ſelf, notwithſtanding of acknowledgments of God's goodneſs in beſtowing theſe on them: like the Phariſee; who ſaid 'God I thank thee, that I am not as 'other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers,' &c.

3. Gracious ſouls will readily diſcover in their converſe a tendency in the ſtrain of their diſcourſe towards the corruption of nature, and the riches of God's grace in Chriſt. There is ſomething charming in theſe things to them that rejoice in Chriſt. Grief and love are two paſſions that mightily fix the mind on their objects. And the one is their greateſt burden, the other their greateſt ſupport. And how can it be otherwiſe, ſeeing the great deſign of the goſpel is to exalt Chriſt and free grace, to make Chriſt all, and the creature nothing. But there are ſome to whom theſe things are taſteleſs as the white of an egg. And in converſation they are knocked in the head with them; and are ſo far from entertaining others with theſe matters, that they cannot entertain them from others, unleſs it be by ſome general expreſſions, that it may be known they are not ignorant of theſe things. I think I obſerve in Paul's epiſtles a more than ordinary elevation of his ſpirit when he comes on theſe points. It is quite contrary in many profeſſors, whoſe tongues are ready interpreters of the mind in matters of controverſy, this and the other opinion, enlargement, attainment, &c. but when theſe come, they ſtumble and faulter, becauſe the heart runs not that way.

4. They will readily be found to be no ſtrangers to heart exerciſe about their ſtate, and will diſcover ſomething of their experience that way; or if they do not, ſuch converſe as hits theſe things they will be ready to make welcome, for they rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, their life is in the light of his countenance; but it does not always ſhine on them. And therefore the queſtion of the heart will be, Saw ye him whom my ſoul loveth? But there are many who have no changes, and therefore they fear not God; they are rich and increaſed with goods, and ſtand in need of nothing that way. They have had a reel among their affections ſometime; and now they think they believe, and keep up the practice of religious duties, and there is an end of it. But the vital part of religion is not their ſtudy; yea, the hearing of it grates upon their ears.

5. Rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus will make men tender of other Chriſtians, in judging of them. Gal. vi. 2. 'Bre'thren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thyſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted.’ The man that finds his own ſore running on him, which leaves him no glorying but in Chriſt, will be fair to handle the ſores of his brethren with a ſpirit of meekneſs. But that diſpoſition of many, which makes them conclude people's hypocriſy from particular ſlips in their way, appears to be the product of ſelf confidence. And as they thus trample on thoſe that are fallen below them, it will be found they very little honour or value thoſe that are above them in ſpiritual experience of religion, as if all were to be cut off that are beyond their meaſure; and where the power of godlineſs ſhines moſt, their carnal hearts riſe againſt it; and in ſuch a caſe will readily pitch on their ſores, and ſlightingly ſay, ‘Is Saul alſo among the prophets?’ 1 Sam. x. 11. It is but very few that will ſay, ‘And who is their Father?’ acknowledging the free grace of God, that gives to every one as he will, and loving the Lord's image wherever they ſee it.

6. Such as rejoice in Chriſt will be found to have a peculiar converſe with the word, and reliſh of it on their ſpirits, according to Iſa. lix. 21. ‘As for me, this is my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord, My ſpirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed's ſeed, ſaith the Lord, from henceforth and forever.’ The Bible being the diſcovery of Chriſt's heart towards ſinners, the word on which he cauſeth them to hope, it is not to be doubted, but they will ſhew a peculiar reſpect to it as ſuch. And it will be their book above all others: their book for heart holineſs and not for head knowledge; their book by which they deſire to walk, and not only whereof they may talk. And thoſe places which diſcover the naughtineſs of man's nature will be prized; and the name of Chriſt in it, the ointment that perfumes all.

7. Laſtly, They will be found to have a peculiar reſpect to his ordinances. If men rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus in their hearts, it is not to be ſuppoſed but that in their converſation, their will ſhine a peculiar reſpect to the place where he records his name, Pſal. lxiii. 1, 2. ‘O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee: my ſoul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh longeth for thee in a dry and thirſty land, where no water is: to ſee thy power and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeen thee in the ſanctuary.’ And becauſe they have buſineſs there for eternity, there will be ſomething in their converſation there ſhewing them them more kindly gueſts than others. It is an open confeſſion of Chriſt to worſhip him in the aſſemblies of his ſaints. I know not how they ſatisfy themſelves that they rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, that rejoice not when it is ſaid to them, ‘Let us go up to the houſe of the Lord;’ how they ſatisfy themſelves that they have an intereſt in the treaſure, while they ſo little value the opening of the field to diſcover the treaſure. The ſlighting of the ordinances will be found not to be the ſpot of God's people, according to the ſcriptures. And as for you that do not ordinarily attend publick ordinances, be your impediment what it will, if it be not your affliction, and not your choice, ye are ſlighters of the treaſure and the field both; as men may punctually attend all ordinances, and yet be far from rejoicing in the Lord of ordinances. It is not every one that gathers the manna there, though it fall at the tent-doors of all alike. But that ſtill remains a truth in the worſt of times, that ‘God's words do good to him that walketh uprightly,’ Micah ii. 7. And it fares with goſpel hearers, as it did with Jonathan's ſervant, 1 Sam. xx. 38, 39. ‘And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make ſpeed, haſte, ſtay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his maſter. But the lad knew not any thing; only Jonathan and David knew the matter.’

Secondly, With reſpect to the gracious ſoul's converſation in a ſuffering time, the man's glorying in Chriſt with reſpect to the croſs; our Lord has a weighty word, Mark viii. 38. ‘Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.’ In oppoſition to this, we muſt glory in Chriſt even at ſuch a time, if we would evidence ourſelves true Chriſtians.

1. The ſaints will keep on Chriſt's ſide, though it may be loweſt; as better with the croſs, than the world's ſide with the crown. There is never a ſoul engaged with Chriſt aright, but is reconciled to the croſs of Chriſt; and in the day of its cloſing with him, lays down its all at his feet, taking them up again at his command, to hold them as his, and to uſe them for him, ay and till he call for them: and ſo is content to run all hazards with him, and will not be boaſted away from him: ‘For love is ſtrong as death, jealouſy cruel as the grave,’ Cant. viii. 6. In a time of proſperity Chriſt gets ſuch a backing as Gideon with his thirty-two thouſand men: but whenever the ſtorm ariſes, there goes off a large multitude; and when they are particularly brought down to the waters of ſuffering, there goes off another party, till few do remain. But they to whom the kingdom is appointed, will continue with him in the trial. But it ſeems ſelf is ſuch a ſalamander as can live in the fire; and that though men, by denying Chriſt to ſhift the croſs, may prove themſelves naught, yet even ſuffering for Chriſt will not prove one to be a ſaint: 2 Cor. xi. 13. ‘For ſuch are falſe prophets, deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt.’ Conſider then,

2. The ſaints will carry in this matter humbly, however boldly, as knowing the ſnare, and their own weakneſs to reſiſt; and not from a Roman courage, or natural ſtiffneſs and briſkneſs of ſpirit, which being from proud ſelf, will never make the man act humbly or ſuffer ſo. Hence is that exhortation, 1 Pet. iii. 13. ‘Be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that aſketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, with meekneſs and fear.’ They will glory in Chriſt, not only as he for whom, but alſo as he by whom they ſuffer. Often has it been obſerved, that the humble man, whoſe ſoul has trembled within him for fear of diſhonouring the Lord, by his fainting in time of trial, has been the ſound hearted ſufferer; while the briſk, fearleſs profeſſor has made a ſad account of himſelf, when it came to the point of ſuffering in earneſt: Iſa. xl. 29, 30, 31. The Lord giveth power to the faint; to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength. Even the youths ſhall faint and be weary, and the young men ſhall utterly fail. But they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength: they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, and they ſhall walk and not faint.

3. laſtly, Though the ſaints will glory in the croſs of Chriſt before the world, yet they will glory more in himſelf even before them, but before God no glorying but in Chriſt. But it will be found, that if men do ſuffer for Chriſt that have no intereſt in him, they will glory more in his croſs than himſelf; I mean, the croſs they bear for his cauſe, not the ſufferings of Chriſt. It appears, that thoſe ſeducers that diſturbed the churches, gloried much in their ſufferings for Chriſt; but in our text, the apoſtle, to difference himſelf and other believers from them, ſays, ‘We are the circumciſion, that—rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus.’ Thus far of the ſecond character of a gracious ſoul, which I may ſum up in the words of the apoſtle, Rom. x. 9, 10. ‘If thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved.’ I ſhall ſtraightway proceed to the

III. Third and laſt character of a real ſaint, And have no confidence in the fleſh. This is an inference from the ſecond character, and follows thereupon; for if our rejoicing be in Chriſt, it will not be in another. The fixing of the ſoul on him, is the removing of it from all other confidences. And therefore I ſhall endeavour briefly to diſpatch it. I ſhall not trouble you with the various acceptation of this word fleſh in the ſcripture. It is taken here for any created thing whatſoever, without Chriſt, that is to ſay, which is not in Chriſt, on which men confide in whole or in part, to commend them to God, whether they be external things or internal. Thus the ſaints have no confidence in the fleſh; or they confide not in the fleſh. The expreſſions are much the ſame; only it muſt be conſidered, that this character is given to them, not in the eye of the law, but in the eye of the goſpel, as may afterwards appear. He who placeth his confidence for ſalvation, either in whole or in part, in any thing whatſoever, which is not Chriſt, or in Chriſt, certainly confides not in Chriſt, nor glories in him; and therefore is none of the circumciſion, nor born of the Spirit. That this is the true ſenſe of the words, appears from the oppoſition, in the text, betwixt rejoicing in Chriſt and confidence in the fleſh; as from the apoſtle's own explication, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.; where he ſhews what he meant by the fleſh, not only external, but internal things, drawing off his confidences from all things without Chriſt, and centering the ſame on Chriſt alone. This is the character of a believer, but not as the former two, a poſitive mark of a ſaint; it is only a negative mark. The man that is not thus qualified is no ſaint; yet a man's being thus qualified, will not of itſelf prove him a ſaint; as is clear from the caſe of Judas, and all deſpairing perſons, who have confidence in nothing, and ſo no confidence in the fleſh. And ſo it is to be taken in conjunction with the former.

Doct. He is the real Chriſtian, who rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus, hath no confidence in any thing, that is not Chriſt, nor in Chriſt, in the matter of ſalvation.

There are two things which men's confidence in the matter of ſalvation doth reſpect; God's favour to them, and their duty to God. All know they cannot be happy without the favour of God, and that there is no attaining to ſalvation but in the way of duty, though moſt men bring it down to believing and repenting at the hour of death. Accordingly we ſay, 1. The real Chriſtian hath no confidence but in Chriſt in the point of juſtification, the pardon of his ſin, and acceptance into favour with God. 2. He hath no confidence but in Chriſt for ſanctification, and with reſpect to his duty. And both theſe the text aims at; and ſanctification is not to be excluded, ſeeing the Chriſtian worſhips God in ſpirit, and rejoices in Chriſt Jeſus. Theſe two points I ſhall clear,

I. The true Chriſtian hath no confidence in any thing but Chriſt in point of juſtification. He dare not place his confidence in any thing elſe, to commend him to God's favour. Chriſt's blood is the ſaints life, his righteouſneſs his only covering, Philip. iii. 7, 8. 'What things 'were gain to me, thoſe I counted loſs for Chriſt. Yea, 'doubtleſs, and I count all things loſs, for the excellency 'of the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt my Lord: for whom 'I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them 'but dung, that I may win Chriſt.' The ſaints beſt things are of no value in this matter; he accounts all his righteouſneſs but as filthy rags. He renounces all pleas before the Lord, but the plea of Chriſt's ſatisfaction; turns his back on all other refuges, and runs to the horns of the altar, and holds there. He acknowledges himſelf a juſt object of vengeance, but throws himſelf into the arms of the mediator, and looks not for a ſmile but through the Redeemer's wounds, nor a pardon but what is ſealed with Chriſt's blood. Happy is the man that ſo doth; He is of the circumciſion; for he rejoiceth in Chriſt, having had his confidence cut off from thoſe things in which many place their confidence, to the ruin of their ſouls. It is not to be expected we can reckon up the falſe confidences that the heart out of Chriſt hath. The ignorant, the profane, the formaliſt, the natural man awakened, have their ſeveral confidences, whereby they hope to do well enough without Chriſt, or at leaſt not to be obliged to him for all. I ſhall hint at ſome of theſe, whereby ye may judge of the reſt accordingly. I have already ſhown, that the ſaints have no confidence in the mercy of God out of Chriſt; and yet that is the ſtrong confidence of many. But there are two things, beſides, on which many build their confidence, to wit, external things, and internal things; ſome things without them, and ſome things within them.

Firſt, The ſaints have no confidence in external things, and will be loath to lay their weight on them; whether they be man's externals or God's externals.

1. The ſaints have no confidence in man's externals. I call thoſe things ſo, which God never made duty, but men make ſo. Theſe are not only vain confidences, but vain worſhip and ſervice, that is loathſome to God. Men are apt to cut the law ſhort enough, but mens nature has a wonderful itching after making additions of their own to it. Hence a cloud of ſuperſtition has darkened ſome churches, and the ſimplicity of goſpel-worſhip is deſpiſed; mens inventions are brought in inſtead of divine inſtitutions: and when God has taken off the yoke of ceremonies inſtituted by himſelf, which the church was not able to bear, men have deviſed out of their own hearts a yoke of ceremonies in the worſhip of God, to tempt God, and bind it on the neck of the churches. But though they ſhould be bound on with the tie of antiquity, there is no preſcription againſt the law of God, with the tie of church authority, the church 'can do nothing againſt 'the truth, but rather for the truth,' 2 Cor. xiii. 8.; or with the tie of civil government, as Hoſ. v. 11.; ſeeing it cannot be ſet home on the conſcience with Thus ſaith the Lord, it is to be rejected, and by no means complied with. For it is from Satan, and not from God: 2 Cor. xi. 2, 3. 'For I am jealous over you with godly 'jealouſy: for I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, that 'I may preſent you as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt. But 'I fear leſt by any means, as the ſerpent beguiled Eve 'through his ſubtilty, ſo your minds ſhould be corrupted from the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt.' Hence alſo flows a crowd of opinions and practices not found in the word, but contrary to it, which men zealouſly ſtick to as certain duties, becauſe nature is always fond of its own brats. If men once take in theſe things, very readily will they highly value themſelves upon them, as is plain from the caſe of the Phariſees, and of others who tread in their ſteps: for it may be obſerved, according as theſe things do riſe, the very doctrine of free grace falls accordingly, and men will be found more zealous for a trifling ceremony, than for the vitals of Chriſtianity. As all goſpel truths and inſtitutions have a tendency towards the life of faith, and center in Jeſus Chriſt, ſo it will be found, that all unſcriptural inſtitutions, opinions, and practices, under whatever pretences of holineſs they be advanced, have a tendency to weaken the life of faith, to carry men off from Chriſt, and are ſubſervient to ſelf, to high and towering imaginations againſt Chriſt. There is no error in the head, but has ſome corruption in the heart, to which it is allied, and will ſtrive to advance. But do others as they will, the ſaints will rejoice in Chriſt, and not make mens externals their confidence. And no wonder; for,

2. The ſaints have no confidence in God's externals; by which I underſtand thoſe external things that are laid before us by God himſelf, which nevertheleſs have a mighty ſtreſs laid upon them by carnal men. And,

1ſt, They have no confidence in their external condition in the world. Whatever it be, they will not look on it as a thing that may commend them to God. If a man be poor in the world, he thinks that is ſufficient to ſecure him againſt eternal poverty; and concludes thence, that God will have him to ſuffer all his miſery here, as if it could not conſiſt with the juſtice of God, to make him miſerable here and hereafter too. If he be rich and honourable, that ſwells him with conceit of himſelf, and his riches are his ſtrong tower. As he is ſet before others in the world, he looks to come before others in another world too. Let the word ſay to him what it will, he keeps his confidence, ſaying, Hoſ. xii. 8. 'Yet I am become 'rich, I have found me out ſubſtance: in all my labours 'they ſhall find none iniquity in me that were ſin.' And if a man meet with ſome ſignal favourable providences as to his outward condition, he looks upon himſelf as the only darling of heaven. But the ſaints will not place their confidence there: 'For the kingdom of God is not 'meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and 'joy in the Holy Ghoſt.' Rom. xiv. 17. They cannot ſo much as be evidences far leſs confidences. Hence ſays Solomon, Eccleſ. ix. 1, 2. 'For all this I conſidered in 'my heart even to declare all this, that the righteous 'and the wiſe and their works are in the hand of God:

no man knoweth love or hatred, by all that is before them. All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked,’ &c. Ye may be poor here, and miſerable through eternity. Ye may fare ſumptuouſly every day, and yet in hell lift up your eyes. And though like Saul ſeeking aſſes, ye found a kingdom, ye may be rejected of God as he was.

2dly, The ſaints have no confidence in their external privileges. The falſe apoſtles boaſted much of their being Abraham’s ſeed, of their circumciſion, and the like. But, ſays the apoſtle, ‘We have no confidence in the fleſh.’ He renounces all confidence in theſe things, 2 Cor. v. 16. ‘Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the fleſh: yea, though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.’ We reckon no more on our being the brethren of Chriſt himſelf by nation. But where will the confidence of many be, if theſe be removed, that they are partakers of all church-privileges, and in ſociety with Chriſt’s party in the world? But razed it is in the ſaints, and razed it muſt be in others now, or it will be done, when there will be no occaſion of getting another foundation of confidence laid: Luke xiii. 26, 27. ‘Then ſhall ye begin to ſay, We have eaten and drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets. But he ſhall ſay, I tell you, I know you not whence you are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.’ When the children of the kingdom are ſhut out, their caſe of all men will be moſt ſad.

3dly, The ſaints have no confidence in their external attainments; as was the caſe with the apoſtle, Phil. iii. 6. 7. who, ‘concerning zeal, perſecuted the church; touching the righteouſneſs which is in the law, was blameleſs. But what things were gain to him, thoſe he counted loſs for Chriſt.’ Great confidence have ſome in their negative holineſs, they can hold up their face to heaven, and ſay, ‘God I thank thee, that I am not as other men are,’ &c. They have lived honeſtly all their days, never wronged their neighbours; they are not profane, they are neither drunkards, ſwearers, nor unclean perſons, and have obſerved the commands of God better than many. And indeed they have been going to hell without letting the world hear the ſound of their feet. Or perhaps, tho’ they have been profane, yet that was but in the folly of youth; but now they have taken up themſelves, they are not what they were: and therefore doubt not of God’s favour. Sirs, this is not the ſpot of God’s people; they will as ſoon venture to ſea, in a bottomleſs boat, as venture their ſouls on this, that know ought of God or of his law. There are in hell this day, who have had all that to truſt in; and if ye renounce it not, and get Chriſt in you the hope of glory, ye ſhall never ſee heaven, Matth. v. 20. ‘For except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.’

4thly, The ſaints have no confidence in their external duties; they have renounced their confidence in what they do or have done. ‘Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt.’ By doing they never think to ſee heaven. There are two ſorts of men oppoſite to the Chriſtian in this.

(1.) There is a rude ignorant generation, who do little in the way of external duties, and yet they ſay, they ſerve God as well as they can; or though they have no ſtrength in themſelves, they do as well as God will give them grace; yea ſome will ſay, they do as well as God will give them leave. All this is the filthy vomit of a proud and rebellious heart againſt God, by which they very plainly lay the blame on God that they do not better. But dare ſuch ſay before a heart ſearching God, that they have done all they could have done? Could ye not have holden in raſh words that ye have ſpoken? But ſuppoſe, O man, thou hadſt done all thou couldſt, God’s law is the rule of thy duty, and not thy ſtrength; and if thou get not in to Chriſt, God’s curſe ſhall lie on thee through eternity, becauſe thou ‘continueſt not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them,’ Gal. iii. 10. The devils have no ſtrength to do good, nor will God give them grace; and yet their damnation is juſt: ſo will thine be. Thou haſt grace in thine offer, which he is not obliged to give thee; but thou art a deſpiſer and rejecter of grace, John v. 40. ‘Ye will not come to me that ye might have life.’ Read your doom, Matth. xxv. 30. ‘Caſt the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.’

(2.) There is another ſort who do indeed go the round of external duties; they attend public ordinances, worſhip God in ſecret and in their families; and as men can quarrel nothing in their outward duties, ſo they neglect not their external duties of righteouſneſs and mercy toward others. They have the outward form of godlineſs. But, alas! in the mean time, they reſt on theſe external things. They put them in Chriſt’s room. But theſe things are ſo unfit to be confidences, that they cannot be evidences; for there is nothing in all the form of godlineſs beyond the reach of a hypocrite; and as they are mere external duties, they are an abomination to the Lord. And will ye make them your confidence? Thy doing ſo demonſtrates, that thou knoweſt neither the law of God, nor the goſpel of Chriſt, which overturns all theſe confidences before the Lord. ‘The Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou ſhalt not proſper in them.’ Jer. ii. 37. Sure the ſaints dare have no confidence in them, nor will they venture before the Lord in them.

Laſtly, The ſaints have no confidence in their external ſufferings. Paul was a great ſufferer, but yet he ſuffered the loſs of all things for Chriſt, and ſo ſuffered the loſs of his ſufferings in point of confidence, among the reſt. There were ſome whoſe garments had been rolled in their own blood for the cauſe of Chriſt; but durſt they appear before the Lord in them? No; they waſhed them in the blood of the Lamb, and therefore they are before the throne, otherwiſe they had gone from the ſcaffold for Chriſt, into the pit of hell from the preſence of the Lord. And far leſs will they have confidence in their other ſufferings, of what ſort ſoever they be. Few can ſuffer for Chriſt; but there are yet fewer, who can ſuffer, and not have confidence in their ſufferings. It is hard to lay our goods, and gear, liberty and life, on the cauſe of Chriſt, and after all to think Chriſt is nothing at all in our debt. The unhumbled ſufferer may read his heart in that murmuring complaint of the labourers, Matth. xx. 12. ‘Theſe laſt have wrought but one hour, and thou haſt made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.’ But if mens confidence be not cut off from their ſufferings, ſad and dreadful will the doom be at laſt; ‘Take that thine is, and go thy way, I will give unto this laſt, even as unto thee.’ If they be lippened to in whole or in part, what is given to them is robbed from the ſufferings of Chriſt; and they will prove a broken reed, that will not only fail but pierce the heart through with ſorrow. There is alſo a rude ignorant generation, who think if they ſuffer what is laid on them by common providence, all will be well with them in the world to come: and women dying in child-birth are accounted happy on this very account, for they ſay, theſe pains are, of all pains hereaway, likeſt the pains of hell. O brutiſh ignorance; to take the curſe for a confidence in the matter of obtaining the bleſſing! The apoſtle gives a comfort to godly women in the pains of child birth, that ‘they ſhall be ſaved in child bearing, if they continue in faith,’ but ſays not they ſhall be ſaved whether they believe or not. Let men or womens hell be as hot as it will in the wotld, if they renounce not all confidence in their ſufferings, and betake themſelves to the ſufferings of Chriſt allenarly, they ſhall aſſuredly, when they die, go out of one hell into another.

Secondly, The ſaints have no confidence in internals, in any thing within them. I have one exception to make here; and that is, ‘Chriſt in you, the hope of glory,’ Col. i. 27. There are precious things in the ſaints, that make them all glorious within, but nothing but Chriſt that can be confidences for God’s favour; though ſome of them may indeed be evidences.

1. The ſaints have no confidence in their internal diſpoſitions. The diſpoſitions of their hearts are none of their confidences before the Lord. Many have a deal of confidence in thoſe good hearts they have towards God, as they ſpeak. Satan has ſo blinded them with ſelf love, that they cannot believe an ill tale of their hearts. This is not the ſpot of God's people. There is little goodneſs of heart in the world; but the beſt heart is always worſt looked on, and no wonder; for they believe God's teſtimony of it, Jer. xvii. 9. ‘ The heart is deceitful above ‘ all things, and deſperately wicked.’ Again, men wiſh they were better, and find a diſpoſition in their hearts to do and ſuffer much for Chriſt, and a great averſion to many ill things they ſee in the world. And indeed people may draw evidences of their ſtate from the diſpoſitions of their hearts; but they had need to examine them well, ſeeing all theſe may be in hypocrites. But at beſt they can be no confidences, ſeeing there is always ſuch a mixture of evil diſpoſitions with them, as might ruin them.

2. The ſaints have no confidence in their internal exerciſes upon their ſpirits. Hypocrites may be troubled about their ſoul's ſtate, as was Felix. They may have great inward ſtruggles betwixt corruption and an enlightened conſcience, as in the caſe of Pilate, about the condemning of Chriſt; yea, ſo as the temptation may be reſiſted in the end, as in Balaam's caſe. What reſtleſſneſs of ſpirit, ſelf-indignation, was in Judas's caſe? The ſaints have more kindly exerciſes. But one difference among many betwixt the two, is, that the exerciſes of the godly iſſue ſtill in driving them further out of themſelves, and conſequently out of any confidence in their exerciſes; while the other are either by theirs driven out of all hope, as Judas, or driven more into themſelves, as thoſe, Rom. x. 3. who ‘ being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and ‘ going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have ‘ not ſubmitted themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God.’

3. The ſaints have no confidence in their internal attainments. Hypocrites may have great gifts, enlargements in the exerciſe of theſe gifts, by a common operation of the Spirit. They may taſte of the heavenly gift, and the powers of the world to come. But although theſe cannot be evidences, they make them confidences, and ruin themſelves thereby. So many build their confidence on the like of theſe things; and whereas they ſhould lead them to Chriſt, they are carried the farther from Chriſt by them. But miſerable comforters will they find them all at length. The ſaints have far higher attainments than theſe. The leaſt meaſure of ſaving knowledge, the leaſt groan from a heart touched with goſpel grace, is better than all thoſe bulky attainments of the hypocrite. Yet becauſe they are not in Chriſt, but in themſelves, though from Chriſt, they dare not make them their confidences for the Lord's favour. They know God to be holy, themſelves impure veſſels, into which nothing can be poured, be it never ſo good, but it will be tinctured with impurity. And therefore Paul, who was caught up into the third heavens, yet abhors to glory in any thing but the ſufferings of Chriſt.

4. Laſtly, The ſaints have no confidence in their inherent graces. Grace is precious, and makes the ſoul in ſome meaſure like God. Every believer has the image of God on him, grace for grace that is in Chriſt, as the wax has on it the print of the ſeal. But this I confidently ſay, it is the grace of God in Chriſt, not the grace of God in the ſaints, that they confide in before the Lord. However precious inherent grace is, it is not Chriſt; it is but a created quality in a ſinner. Let it be ſcrewed up to its higheſt pitch, it cannot anſwer the demands of the law, being mixed with corruption; and being lippened unto that way, wonld prove but an arm of fleſh. It is gold indeed; but not ſuch as will abide the fiery trial of the law's furnace: it is white raiment indeed; but it is not pure, but ſtained white, which is no fit garment for a criminal to ſtand in for favour at the court of heaven; and therefore Chriſt offers ſinners tried gold, unſtained white raiment, of his own ſufferings and righteouſneſs, Rev. iii. 18. And ſo the ſaints renounce all without them and within them for it, Philip. iii. 8, 9. ‘ Yea doubtleſs, and ‘ I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the ‘ knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord; for whom I have ‘ ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but ‘ dung that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not ‘ having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, ‘ but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righ‘ teouſneſs which is of God by faith.’

I ſhall inſtance in theſe two, which are in effigie moſt abuſed by carnal men, and ſet up againſt Chriſt.

1ſt, The grace of repentance. There is an ignorant generation, aſk them how they think to be ſaved? they will tell you, they repent of their ſins day and night. This they will ſay whom their ſoul's hazard never kept from an hour's ſleep all their days. The matter is, they rue many things they do; and no wonder, for they cannot be fond of deſtruction. And thus they know not what ſin is, nor what repentance is indeed. O what needed Chriſt to have come, and died on a croſs, if people may be ſaved this way? Lippen to this as ye will, ye will repent in hell that ever ye ſhould have made it either evidence or confidence. But there are ſome that ſpin a more fine thread of ſoul-deception of themſelves. They have legal qualms of conſcience, and their guilt cuts them to the heart, and they go to God and confeſs their ſin, reſolved never to do the like again; and ſo build their confidence here, eſpecially if they get tears for it; and they think they can give ſcripture for this confidence of theirs, as Prov. xxviii. 13. ‘ Whoſo confeſſeth and for‘ ſaketh his ſins, ſhall have mercy.’ Sirs, Judas repented as bitterly as ever ye did, Pharaoh and Saul confeſſed and had their reſolutions to forſake, and Eſau his tears. But what law or goſpel allows you to make this your confidence? Will your confeſſion, prayers, tears, forſaking of ſin, anſwer the demands of the law? Will theſe ſhield you from the ſtrokes of juſtice? Remember it is ſhedding of blood, not pouring out of water, that can purchaſe remiſſion. Many times where water goes out, wind enters in, and makes tears ſo abominable as they cannot come into the Lord's bottle. Curſed be thoſe tears that blind the ſoul ſo as it cannot ſee the neceſſity of Chriſt's blood, that are not brought to the fountain of Chriſt's blood, and waſhed there, leſt they make the ſoul abominable in the ſight of a holy God. If you think the goſpel gives you ground, ſure it is not the goſpel of Chriſt does it; for Chriſt's goſpel eſtabliſhes the law. The truth is, in this way ye reject both the true law and goſpel, and treat with God in the way of a baſtard-covenant of works of your own making, which God will never agree to: nor does he agree to it by thoſe promiſes made to them that confeſs, and them that mourn. Conſider, they muſt either be promiſes of the covenant of works, or of the covenant of grace. Promiſes of the covenant of works they are not; for that is expreſs, Gal. iii. 10. ‘ Curſed is every ‘ one that continueth not in all things which are written ‘ in the book of the law to do them.’ If they be promiſes of the covenant of grace, how come ye to plead them without firſt laying hold by faith on him in whom they are all yea and Amen? Now, this ye cannot do, unleſs ye have no confidence in any thing that is not Chriſt, or in Chriſt. Do ye think that the Spirit of God makes a promiſe of mercy from an unatoned God, or directs to a confeſſion not put in the hand of the Advocate Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, No; God heareth not ſinners, but thoſe petitions that are preſented by him, he grants them to ſinners for his ſake. And that promiſe, ‘ Bleſſed are they ‘ that mourn, for they ſhall be comforted,’ is it to all mourners think ye? is it to Eſau's tears, and Judas's groans? It is to goſpel mourners: and therefore that men might have no ground to miſtake theſe bleſſings, our Lord fixeth that point in the front of the bleſſings, to be carried through all the reſt. ‘ Bleſſed are the poor in ſpi‘ rit.’ And ſuch are all true penitents; and therefore will never make their repenting and mourning their confidence before the Lord. They are diſſatisfied with all they do, becauſe upon a review of their repentance, they ſee ſuch defects in it, as needs a cover of blood; their tears clear their eyes to ſee the neceſſity of the Mediator's blood the better: Pſal. li. 7. ‘ Purge me with hyſſop;’

that is, with the blood of the everlaſting covenant, typified by the blood of the ſacrifices ſprinkled with hyſſop on the people; and by the blood of a bird ſprinkled with hyſſop on the leper, when he was to be cleanſed, and reſtored to ſociety. 'Waſh me,' to wit, as a fuller waſheth cloth to make it pure white. It ſeems he thought his own plunging himſelf in his tears could not whiten the ſtained ſoul. Nay, the true penitent is free grace's debtor for all, and will acknowledge it is free grace that he is not ſhut out from the preſence of God, after he has bathed himſelf in his tears, Pſal. li. 11. 'Caſt me not 'away from thy preſence; and take not thy holy Spirit 'from me.' Here he acknowledgeth, he might juſtly get Cain and Saul's meaſure. 'Caſt me not away from 'thy preſence,' as thou didſt Cain the firſt murderer; 'Take not thy Holy Spirit from me,' as thou didſt to Saul the firſt king of Iſrael for his diſobedience.

2dly, The grace of faith. There is an ignorant generation that ſay they believe in Chriſt; but their faith cannot be called knowledge, for they are full of darkneſs in their minds, they know not what faith is, nor how they came by it; their faith grew up with them, and it will die with them. They have a ſtrong confidence of mercy; which is but groſs preſumption, ſeeing it neither purifies heart nor life; and therefore ſhall be rooted out of their tabernacle, and it ſhall bring them to the king of terrors, Job xviii. 14. And there are others who came not ſo eaſily by the faith they have; yet it is not faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. i. 5. but they make it their confidence. There are many things that men call faith, among ignorant and known folk too, who are yet in the ſtate of nature. The revelation of the abſolute neceſſity of faith to ſalvation is ſo clear, that hardly can a perſon be a hearer of the goſpel, and not know it; and every man naturally has a principle of ſelf preſervation: hence upon the hearing this, and eſpecially upon awakenings of conſcience, nature will make ſome efforts for believing. But faith being produced only by the working of God's mighty power, and not by the power of nature, the reſult of all nature's efforts this way, is but ſome miſ-ſhapen brat inſtead of faith. Hence we read of Simon's believing, Acts viii. 13.; and many believing in his name, whom yet Chriſt knew to be naught: and ſome ſtaying themſelves upon the God of Iſrael, but not in truth and righteouſneſs, Iſa. xlviii. 1, 2. I am here to enter on the ſeveral ſorts of feigned faith: but with relation to our purpoſe, there is one thing to be noticed concerning them all, and that is, they never carry a man out of himſelf to Jeſus Chriſt for all, as true faith doth. That miſ-ſhapen faith is not the ſoul's going out of itſelf to Chriſt to live by him; but is the ſoul's going out of itſelf to Chriſt, as a ſervant to a maſter. For nature cannot act but in the way of the firſt covenant: and to a natural man, the goſpel-way of ſalvation differs not in kind from the way of Adam's covenant, but only in the meaſure and degree of obedience; for to them it is ſtill, Do this, and live; Do this, not do perfect obedience, they know they cannot reach that; but repent, believe, reform, Do this. Now, the natural man accordingly does this; and ſo the work of faith is to him the fulfilling of the condition of this new covenant, and turns his confidence before the Lord for his favour, as Adam's perfect obedience to the law would have been his confidence. This was the confidence of Iſrael when they had caſt off the thing that was good, Hoſ. viii. 2. Iſrael ſhall cry unto me, My God, we know thee; and of the fooliſh virgins, Lord, Lord, open to us, us virgins. Thus may ye ſee how their faith is their folly, as being put in the room of Chriſt; and ſo they have but rags for righteouſneſs. But the ſaints have a faith of the operation of God; yet do they not reſt in it, but by it reſt and confide on Jeſus Chriſt. It carries the ſaint out of himſelf, even his gracious ſelf. True faith is not a burden-bearer, but an onlayer of burdens. It is not a leaning ſtock, but an act of leaning. It purifies indeed, but no other way but as it lays open the ſoul to Chriſt, that a ſtream of blood may run through it. The hyſſop and ſcarlet wool were no doubt a blithe ſight to the people, and particularly to the poor lepers under the law: but had the dry hyſſop and wool been ſhaken never ſo oft over them, what would they have availed? but they are dipt in the blood, and the people ſprinkled with that blood from off the hyſſop and ſcarlet wool. And when the blood fell, the people were ceremonially purged, and the leper cleanſed. And ſo it is in the caſe of believing. Thus ye ſee the ſaints have no confidence in point of juſtification, in any thing that is not Chriſt, or in Chriſt.

II. The ſaints have no confidence in point of ſanctification, or with reſpect to duty, in any thing that is not Chriſt, nor in Chriſt. As they have taken him alone for juſtification, ſo they take him alone for ſanctification; for he is made unto us ſanctification, as well as righteouſneſs, 1 Cor. i. 30. The Father has conſtituted him the head of influences for duty; and from that head all the body having nouriſhment miniſtered, increaſeth with the increaſe of God, Col. ii. 19. And this is that life of faith for ſanctification that the ſaints live: John vi. 57. 'As the living 'Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father: ſo he 'that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me.' Gal. ii. 20. 'I am crucified with Chriſt: Nevertheleſs I live; yet not 'I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now 'live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, 'who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.' There are here alſo many things men make their confidences, which I cannot particularly name; but, in the general, there are ſeven things I ſhall touch at, which are but arms of fleſh when lippened to, in the matter of ſanctification.

1. The ſaints have no confidence in their ſtock of natural and acquired abilities, in the point of ſanctification, 2 Cor. iii. 5. 'We are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think 'any thing as of ourſelves.' This is the confidence of many in their religious duties; and upon it they can venture on duty undaunted, their work being rather to be filled with the thoughts of their own ſtrength, than to be emptied of themſelves; to muſter up their own forces, than to be looking to the Lord for ſtrength from above. Thus a gift of knowledge, utterance, and ſuch like, are by natural men put in Chriſt's room; and on theſe they confide for performing of duties, and bearing out againſt temptations. And upon this foundation have ſtately buildings of morality been reared up, and very glorious forms of godlineſs, which beholders have bleſſed, while God has curſed them, Jer. xvii. 5. 'Thus ſaith the Lord, 'Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh 'fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord.' But this is not the way of the ſaints: Pſal. xliv. 5, 6. 'Through thee will we puſh down our enemies, through 'thy name will we tread them down that riſe up againſt 'us. For I will not truſt in my bow, neither ſhall my 'ſword ſave me.' Natural men are repreſented as youths full of vigour, ſtrength, and activity, who will do their work by themſelves, and wait not upon the Lord. But the godly are diſtinguiſhed from them as men who ſee their ſtrength failed, and not to be lippened to; and hence look without themſelves for it, and roll their way on the Lord, as being themſelves unable for the burden.

2. The ſaints have no confidence in the means of ſanctification, as the word, ſacraments, prayer, and the like; knowing that it is the ſpirit that quickeneth, and that they are only means through which influences are conveyed from Chriſt to the ſouls of his people. None look with ſuch an affectionate eye on the ordinances as they, but none look ſo far above them either, for the natural man either tramples on them, or idolizeth them, being ſatisfied with the chair of ſtate, though empty. Many are ruined with their confidence this way: they reſt in the work done, as if that would heal their ſores; they place that confidence in means or inſtruments, which they ſhould place in Chriſt himſelf; and hence are 'like the heath 'in the wilderneſs, that ſeeth not when good cometh,' and that 'inhabiteth the parched places in the wilderneſs, 'in a ſalt land, and not inhabited,' Jer. xvii. 6. There is a voice they hear within them, ſtirring them up to holineſs of life; but upon the hearing of it, they do as young Samuel, who, when the Lord called him, went to Eli, ſo they go to this and the other mean of ſanctification, but never look beyond them to the fountain of ſanctifica-tion in the Mediator: or as the woman labouring under the iſſue of blood, ſpent all her means on the phyſicians ere ſhe came to Chriſt.

3. The ſaints have no confidence in their purpoſes and reſolutions for holineſs. Pſal. cxvi. 9, 10. ‘I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. I believed, therefore have I ſpoken.’ He had reſolved, but his confidence was in the Lord, in whom he had believed. 2 Tim. i. 12. ‘I know whom I have believed, and I am perſuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him againſt that day.’ O how venturous is nature, being once fleſhed with vigorous purpoſes and reſolves! but when the temptation comes, they fall down like the walls of Jericho, at the ſounding of rams horns. Their bent bow in which they truſted, quickly miſgives; the fine edge ſoon wears off the ſpirit that is not ſtaid on the Lord. How many ſtrong reſolutions come to nought, becauſe in taking them up men look not to the Lord as the fountain of ſtrength, but to themſelves; and when they are made, there is more weight laid on them than they can bear? Hence the root being rottenneſs, the bloſſom flies up as duſt; as was the caſe with the young man, who when an whore ‘with her much fair ſpeech cauſed him to yield, and with the flattering of her lips forced him, went after her as an ox to the ſlaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks.’

4. The ſaints have no confidence in their vows to holineſs, or any particular duty; knowing that theſe are too weak bands for an ill heart, which nothing but the power of the Spirit of Chriſt can hedge in. Every ſaint is devoted to the Lord with his own deliberate conſent, having given away himſelf wholly to Chriſt, to be diſpoſed of as he will, and will look on his ſoul and body as conſecrated things, and no more his own but the Lord's, to do and ſuffer for him, according to his will. But while the ſaints take on theſe ſolemn bands, and come under theſe engagements to duty, their confidence is not in the bands, but in him to whom they bind themſelves as to the fountain of ſtrength: Iſa. xlv. 23, 25. ‘I have ſworn by myſelf, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteouſneſs, and ſhall not return, that unto me every knee ſhall bow, every tongue ſhall ſwear. Surely, ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.’ But, alas! the vows of many are in effect a vowing themſelves away from Chriſt. Sometimes the man will bind a yoke on himſelf that the word never bound on him, and inſnare himſelf with a vow to abſtain from ſuch a thing altogether, when his conſcience gets up on him for his running to ſome monſtrous exceſs in it. Or if it be a duty he has wofully ſlighted, he will come under a vow, not only to ſet about it, but ſo often, and at ſuch and ſuch times particularly, which yet is not determined in the word. And when he has been carried off into courſes abſolutely condemned by the word, and in which his natural conſcience will give him no reſt, there ſhall be a violent ſally of the ſoul againſt them, ending in a ſolemn promiſe and vow to the Lord, never to do ſo any more, without an eye to the corruption of nature, or to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, without whom we can do nothing. And thus the poor blinded ſoul thinks it is fenced, and in this mud-wall of vows is its confidence. But what is the end of it? The man is even like one that has a brook running through his ground, which often ſpoils it with its outbreakings, and he builds a call to ſtop it; but is not ſo wiſe as turn the ſtream another way, where it could not do ſuch harm; and ſo in a little time the water gathers, and breaks down the call, running out with more violence than ever. And ſo the vows go like Samſon's green withs, when he heard the Philiſtines were on him.

5. The ſaints have no confidence in their own endeavours after holineſs, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. ‘Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.’ It is the proſperity of a ſaint, to work as diligently as if he had none to help, but to overlook his work as if he had not put hand to it at all: 1 Cor. xv. 10. ‘I laboured more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.’ O, there is much to be done for the advancing of holineſs; but none have ſo much confidence in what is done for that end, as thoſe that do leaſt that way. A man may do very much to win over ſome luſts, and to attain ſuch a ſort of life as his conſcience tells him is neceſſary for heaven, and yet be naught, as working from himſelf, and reſting in himſelf. It is a difficult thing indeed, for a man to be purſuing a good life, and to win over troubleſome luſts, and in purſuit thereof to pray often, for the caſting out of ſome devils, to ſtruggle againſt them, watch againſt them, and to keep at a diſtance from the occaſions of temptation: but it is far more difficult to be denied to all theſe when they are done, and to have no confidence in them, but to truſt in him that raiſeth the dead. Men under the law's tutory may do the former; for ‘ſkin for ſkin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life:’ but grace is neceſſary to the latter, as that which can only carry a man out of himſelf to Chriſt.

6. The ſaints have no confidence in the good diſpoſition of their hearts; that is to ſay, in actual grace. A good frame is a moſt deſirable thing, and makes a great facility in the way of God while it laſts. It is a precious ointment that refreſhes the traveller; but it is no good ſtaff to lean on, it is a lamp that will quickly go out, if it be not fed with freſh oil from the fountain of grace. Remarkable is that petition of David for the people, when they were in an excellent frame, 1 Chron. xxix. 17, 18. ‘As for me, in the uprightneſs of mine heart I have willingly offered all theſe things; and now have I ſeen with joy thy people which are preſent here, to offer willingly unto thee. O Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael, our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee.’ He ſaw it was not to be made a confidence, and therefore lays the weight of all, and even of preſerving that frame, upon the Lord himſelf. But many though their frame is no actual grace, but the product of ſome common operations on their ſpirits, make them their confidence, and in the ſtrength thereof go out to their duties: but aſſuredly they ſhall not ſee when good cometh, who thus put their frame in the room of Chriſt; and oftentimes for that cauſe, in the juſt judgment of God, it fails them, that they may ſee it is not Chriſt, but a broken reed.

7. laſtly, The ſaints have no confidence in habitual grace. Paul durſt not venture to live on it, Gal. ii. 20. ‘I am crucified with Chriſt, nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.’ As I ſaid in the point of juſtification, ſo in the point of ſanctification, it is not the grace within them which they confide in, but the grace in Jeſus Chriſt. The grace within the ſaints is a well whoſe ſprings are oft ſtopped, but the grace without them, in Chriſt, is an ever-flowing fountain. Where were the life and fruit of the branch, it it were left to the ſap within itſelf, which would quickly wither? but it is the ſap in the ſtock that keeps the branch living; and ſo it is the grace in Chriſt that keeps the believer living. But, alas! there not a few who have neither repentance, faith, nor other graces in truth, but the ſhadows of them, who yet make what they have, their confidence in point of ſanctification: who, when they would make the faſhion of believing, look into themſelves for it, but look not up to Chriſt; whereas the path way of the ſaints, is to mount up with wings as eagles, and then to fall down on the prey. Thus ye ſee the ſaints have no confidence in the fleſh, no confidence in any thing without them or within them; that is not in Chriſt. And whatever it is which men make their confidence before the Lord, to ſet it in the room of Chriſt, or to ſet it beſide him, ſo far as it is made a confidence, be it for ever exterminated and rooted out, Jer. xvii. 5, 6. ‘Thus ſaith the Lord, Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord. For he ſhall be like the heath in the deſart, and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, but ſhall inhabit parched places in the wilderneſs, in a ſalt land and not inhabited.’

Queſt. Is it ſo that every ſaint is altogether free of thoſe falſe confidences, and no ways tainted in that ſort? Anſw. I told you when entering on this clauſe, that this is not underſtood of the ſaints as if they were pure from it in the eye of the law, but in the eye of the goſpel. There is a great and weighty truth ſuppoſed as the foundation of this deſcription of the true Chriſtian, and that is, That corrupt nature is quite oppoſite to Chriſt, and to the contrivance of ſalvation by him. The way of the covenant of works is natural to men. Now, ſeeing that the beſt are but in part renewed, it is evident that there are in the greateſt ſaints remains of a legal temper, and that nature now and then has in them its flings againſt the goſpel way, and towards curſed ſelf, both in the point of obtaining God's favour, as in the caſe of Peter, Matth. xix. 27. who ſaid unto Jeſus, 'Behold, we have forſaken all, and 'followed thee; what ſhall we have therefore?' and in the point of duty, as in the caſe of James and John the ſons of Zebedee, who, after Jeſus had put the queſtion to them, 'Are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall 'drink of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm that I 'ſhall be baptized with?' ſaid unto him 'we are able.'

1. Every ſaint in his cloſing with Chriſt has been carried out of himſelf to Chriſt, though ſelf has not been carried fully out of him, Pſal. cx. 3. 'Thy people ſhall be 'willing in the day of thy power.' They ſhall pour out their hearts to him like water that comes freely away, though the veſſel is not preſently dry, but ſomething of the water ſtill cleaves to it for a time. Where the ſoul comes to Chriſt, there is a digging deep in that ſoul, that looſes the confidence in the fleſh at the root; ſo that the ſaints heart is looſed from it, and lays itſelf naked and bare at Chriſt's feet, without any thing to commend it to him, but for all ventures into the arms of free grace. But the hypocrite never comes freely out of himſelf to Chriſt, his cloſing with Chriſt is but forced; as Adonijah ran to the horns of the altar when in hazard of his life, who cared very little for it otherwiſe; and as the Iſraelites, Pſal. lxxviii. 34. 36, 37. 'When he ſlew them, then they 'ſought him: and they returned and enquired early after 'God. Nevertheleſs, they did flatter him with their 'mouth, and they lyed unto him with their tongues. 'For their heart was not right with him, neither were 'they ſtedfaſt in his covenant.' Nor does the hypocrite ever come to the market of free grace without money in his hand; the proud heart has ſtill ſomething in itſelf whereupon to challenge welcome.

2. Every ſaint habitually walks in the way of renouncing all confidence in the fleſh; the habitual bent and ſet of their ſouls lies out of themſelves to Chriſt, though, through the prevailings of corruption, they want not often the riſings of ſelf in them. And God reckons of his people according to what they habitually are, and not according to what ſtarting aſide their corruption does often occaſion. So they are ſaid to live by him; though they are ſometimes ſet down at another table, where, by their feeding on the wind, ſome falſe fleſh grows on them, which grace makes afterward to fall; and they return with that in their mouths, Jer. iii. 22, 23. 'Behold, we come 'unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God. Truly in 'the Lord our God is the ſalvation of Iſrael.' But the hypocrites habitual confidence is in the fleſh, ſeeing they were never ſpiritually circumciſed, nor their hearts truly cut off from it.

3. The ſaints have ſtruggles againſt this ſelfiſh diſpoſition, as againſt other members of the old man. Self denial is the leſſon Chriſt puts firſt in the hands of his people, and it ſerves them to be learning it all their days. The ſaints have a double work with their hearts about duties; firſt, to get them up to them; ſecondly, to hold them down in them, that they get not up in point of confidence in them. Many ſee not this diſpoſition in their hearts, therefore it is not their work to mortify it; but though the tares may grow while men ſleep, they are not plucked up, but when men are awake. If there be hurtful weeds growing in a garden, and the gardiner knew nothing of plucking them up, it would be a ſign they were there ſtill.

4. laſtly, When the godly do their duties beſt, they are fartheſt from confidence in the fleſh; with others it is not ſo. Nature always builds up nature; but the more grace and nearneſs to God, the more vile is the ſaint in his own eyes. And it is confirmed by the experience of the ſaints, that when they have had greateſt help in duties, they have afterwards been ſo treated by providence, that in that caſe they have got ſuch ballaſt, as has made them ſee the neceſſity of the blood of Chriſt.

Uſe. I exhort you from this to rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and to have no confidence in the fleſh. What is already ſaid, may ſerve for evidences to convince you of this curſed confidence. But I ſhall inſiſt no further on it.

Thus I have gone through the characters of a perſon in the ſtate of grace; and inſiſted the longer on them, that I might diſcover to you your ſtate before the Lord. Let me now in a few words ſum up the evidence of the text. A ſaint is one that works as if he were to win heaven by his working. He worſhips God in ſpirit, his heart is at the work; yet he overlooks it all, as if he had done nothing. His confidence is in Chriſt, for juſtification: and for ſanctification he looks to the Spirit to carry him through duties. The defects of his beſt ſervices ſend him to Chriſt, and raiſe his eſtimation of imputed righteouſneſs; Chriſt is his life; duty is his work; but he dies to his duties, that he may live to Chriſt. He is not a faithleſs worker, but a working believer.

And now, Sirs, to conclude, I beſeech you in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye will conſider what I have ſaid, and impartially try your ſtate by it. It was with fear and trembling I entered upon, and went through theſe words, becauſe of the exceeding weightineſs of the matter, as determining the ſtate of ſouls before the Lord; and therefore I did not chuſe to heap up many particulars, but to ſpeak largely to a few, that the evidences might be plain, uſeful, ſearching, and ſafe. For I reckon, that as giving of marks of true ſaints is one of the moſt difficult parts of preaching, ſo marks overly propoſed, and not followed out, are to the moſt part of hearers either uſeleſs or hurtful. I hope they have been confirming to ſome; I wiſh they might reach their deſign in others, yet ſtrangers to Chriſt. Let it be acknowledged to the good hand of God, that falling to be delivered in the winter, (in which I have ſomething to remark for myſelf with thankfulneſs,) the ſeaſon has been ſo very good, that ye have not been hindered, by the badneſs ot the weather, from attending, as uſually in that time of the year; though, alas for it! ſummer and winter are much alike, in that reſpect, to ſeveral careleſs periſhing ſouls among you. Sirs, according to the ſtate of your ſouls now, ſo will it be with you through eternity. Examine yourſelves therefore now, whether Chriſt be in you or not; whether ye be yet in the black ſtate of nature, or whether ye be in the ſtate of grace. Ye have heard the characters, let conſcience make the application; and judge yourſelves, that ye be not judged and condemned with the world. See now on what ground ye ſtand; for as ye ſtand in the world, ſo ſhall ye ſtand before the tribunal of God. Deceive not yourſelves: religion is a myſtery to moſt hearers of the goſpel; and as ſome have no ſhadow of it, many embrace the ſhadow of it inſtead of the ſubſtance, and pleaſe themſelves with thoſe things that will not abide trial by the word here, and will evaniſh as a dream when they are ſifted before the tribunal of Chriſt. If your ſtate be found right upon an impartial trial, it will be an unſpeakable comfort: if it be found wrong, it is not the trial that makes it ſo, it only diſcovers it to be what it is; and there is yet time to get wrongs righted, and to lay a new foundation, which may laſte for the eternal welfare of your ſouls. Conſider what I have ſaid, and the Lord give you underſtanding in all things.

The CHRISTIAN WARFARE; Or, The Good FIGHT of FAITH.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in the Year 1723.

1 Tim. vi. 12.

Fight the good fight of faith.

THE apoſtle having given Timothy an exhortation to ſeveral particular duties, here gives him an exhortation to the Chriſtian life in general. Wherein we have two things.

1. A deſcription of the Chriſtian life. It is not an eaſy, idle, life; but 1. A fight, for there are many enemies ſet to keep us out of the promiſed land. 2. A good fight. The men of the world have many fights and ſquabbles about this world, the honours, and advantages, and pleaſures of it, not worth the fighting for. But it is a good and worthy fight, wherein true valour and magnanimity appears. 3. A fight of faith. Some underſtand this of the doctrine of faith, as that which is to be fought for. I underſtand it rather of the grace of faith, by which the fight is to be managed. This comprehends the former; and is more agreeable to the practical directions, ver. 11. and the laying hold on eternal life, which is done by the grace of faith. It is a fight to be managed by believing.

2. The word of command given: Fight the good fight of faith. Timothy was engaged already in the fight; but ſtill he was in the field of battle, and the enemy not yet off the field: therefore it is ſaid to him, Fight. Paul was going off the field, and he ſays, ‘I have fought a good ‘fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith.’ Timothy was come on the field, and to him it is ſaid, Fight.

DOCT. The Chriſtian life is the good fight of faith, that muſt be fought by all that would ſee heaven.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, we ſhall ſhew,

I. In what reſpects the Chriſtian life is the fight of faith.
II. In what reſpects it is a good fight.
III. Why the Chriſtian life is made a fight.
IV. Why a fight of faith.
V. Touch at ſome particular fights of faith the Chriſtian may have in his courſe heavenward.

I. We ſhall ſhew in what reſpects the Chriſtian life is the fight of faith. I take up this in theſe ſeven things.

1. There are enemies of our ſalvation, and there muſt be faith in the ſoul to ſet againſt them. Where there are not two parties, there can be no fight. There is no fighting in heaven, for there are no enemies there. There is none of this fighting in the unbelieving world neither; for the enemies have all there alone, and there is no faith to ſet againſt them. Unbelief carries the man over to the enemy's ſide; it is the evil ſpy, that ſays it is needleſs to think on the fight. This fight is only found where faith and its oppoſites meet; and that is in the Chriſtian's heart. ‘What will ye ſee in the Shulamite? as it were the com‘pany of two armies.’ So the combatant is the only man that has given up his name to Chriſt and liſted with him.

2. The enemy will not be at quiet; he will make an attack on the believer ſetting heaven-ward. 1 Pet. v. 8. ‘Be ſober, be vigilant; becauſe your adverſary the devil, ‘as a roaring lion, walketh about ſeeking whom he may ‘devour.’ Satan may rock his own children, and labour to keep all quiet; the more ſecure, they are in the leſs hazard to break away from him. But God's children muſt not look for ſuch treatment; their faces are awayward from his kingdom; and therefore the enemy's face will be ſet againſt them, as a prize.

3. God's people muſt reſiſt; 1 Pet. v. 9. ‘Whom re‘ſiſt, ſtedfaſt in the faith.’ They muſt ſet themſelves to ſtand their ground againſt all oppoſition, in their way to heaven. They muſt be denied to their ſoft beds of eaſe, and take the field, and endure hardneſs, 2 Tim. ii. 3.

4. They muſt reſiſt by faith. Faith is the mouth of the ſoul, that muſt give the ſhout in this battle, the hands the men of might muſt find in it, the weapon they muſt wield in it, both in the offenſive and defenſive part of it; Eph. vi. 16. ‘Above all, taking the ſhield of faith, where‘with ye ſhall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the ‘wicked.’ So one muſt not only have the grace of faith, but he muſt have it in exerciſe.

5. They muſt continue in that reſiſtance, and hold on in it, Eph. vi. 13. ‘Take unto you the whole armour of ‘of God, that ye may be able to withſtand in the evil day, ‘and having done all to ſtand.’ The Chriſtian life is a fight, and that denotes a continuance. Many think they have no more ado, but whenever an enemy ſtarts up, to lay at him with a ſtroke, and ſtrike him down; and ſo they perplex themſelves with doubts of the love of God, becauſe it is otherwiſe with them, the enemy being ſtill freſh and vigorous. But conſider, that that may be ſtriking indeed, but not a fight, being of no long continuance.

6. They muſt lay their account with getting as well as giving wounds in the encounter. Pſal. xxx. 7. ‘Lord, by ‘thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong; ‘thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled.’ Prevailing Jacob halted in his thigh, after his ſtruggle with the angel. To be abſolute maſters over the enemy, would not be the fight but the triumph of faith, which is reſerved for heaven. In the fight of faith, the Chriſtian may be ſet to his knees, but muſt not give over: yea, tho' the enemy ſhould lay him on his back, he muſt ſay, ‘Rejoice ‘not againſt me, O mine enemy, when I fall, I ſhall a‘riſe;’ and ſo bend to his feet again.

7. laſtly, Faith has the chief intereſt in this fight. In it there will be uſe for all the graces, the doing and ſuffering graces; yet the fight has its name from faith, as that which has the chief hand in it. For,

1ſt, It is faith's poſſeſſion that the plea is about. Life and ſalvation in Chriſt Jeſus is held forth to the ſinner; and the ſinner believing in Chriſt, appropriates and takes poſſeſſion of it by faith, 1 John v. 11, 12. ‘This is the ‘record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this ‘life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life: and ‘he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.’ If the man will quit his plea for life and ſalvation by Chriſt, the fight is at an end; the enemy has his deſign. But if not, the alarm is ſounded, and the fight forces him from it.

2dly, It is faith that holds faſt the poſſeſſion which the enemy would force from the man. For it is that which unites the ſoul to Chriſt and eternal life: Heb. x. 28. ‘Caſt not away your confidence, which hath great re‘compence of reward.’ Believing, we cleave to the Lord, and hold faſt what we have. The ſecurities and rights to the heavenly inheritance are the promiſes; faith gripes them, and ſo keeps poſſeſſion.

3dly, It is faith that is the main actor in this fight. Thoſe worthies in Heb. xi. had need of all the graces of the Spirit. There was much of other graces in their ſuffering ſo great things; but all is aſcribed to faith. Faith is the captain of all the graces; it leads them out, puts an edge upon them, and makes them active. And therefore, the word that is given from heaven is, ‘Above all, ‘taking the ſhield of faith, wherewith ye ſhall be able to ‘quench all the fiery darts of the wicked,’ Eph. vi. 16.

Queſt. How is it that faith has the preference of the other graces in this fight? Anſw. On theſe accounts.

(1.) It is the grace that is firſt on the field of battle, and all the reſt follow it. It is the mother grace, out of whoſe womb they all come forth, the grace that knits the ſoul to Chriſt; the fountain of fulneſs. So the way to get love, repentance, patience, is to believe. Thus it furniſhes the field of battle with fighters on Chriſt's ſide.

(2.) It ſtrengthens them according to its meaſure; ‘According to thy faith, be it unto thee.’ According as it is weak or ſtrong, ſo are they: for it is not only the mother grace, but the nurſing grace. Faith lies neareſt the fountain, and it is the channel of conveyance of ſupply: ſo as it gets in, they get out for their nouriſhment.

(2.) It brings the healing they get to their wounds. Many a time the Chriſtian's love is foundered in this fight, by an arrow of jealouſy of God ſhot into their breaſt. Faith gives the combatant a ſight of the glory of God; and ſo pulls out the arrow. Their patience is wounded, that it can no longer ſtand; faith brings the promiſe, Hab. ii. 3. 'Though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will 'ſurely come, it will not tarry,' and ſo ſets patience to its feet again. It brings the leaves of the tree of life, which heals the wounds; and ſo the fight is renewed.

(4.) It carries on the fight, and obtains the victory: 1 John v. 4. 'This is the victory that overcometh the 'world, even our faith.' It is by faith the enemy is put to flight, that partial victories are obtained during this life, and that the total victory is obtained at death. Thus by faith the martyrs ſwimmed through a ſea of blood, to the other ſide. And hence, 4thly, The great deſign of the enemy is to weaken faith, and to wreſt it out of the combatant's hand. It was by unbelief of the threatening of the firſt covenant, that Satan ruined the world at firſt: and his great buſineſs is, to keep men from believing the promiſe of the ſecond covenant. He knows their ſtrength lies there: and take away that, they ſhall be as other men, that he may do with them what he will.

Laſtly, The great deſign of a holy God, in that fight, is the trial of faith, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. 'Wherein ye greatly 'rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in 'heavineſs through manifold temptations: That the trial 'of your faith being much more precious than of gold 'that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be 'found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the ap'pearing of Jeſus Chriſt.' Faith acts in truſting an unſeen God, living upon the credit of the promiſe. Thus the Lord will have his people to go through the wilderneſs of this world, walking by faith, not by ſight. When they come to heaven, the trial of faith is over: ſo there is no more fight.

II. The ſecond thing is, to ſhew in what reſpects it is a good fight.

1. The cauſe is good. Many fight to carry their ill cauſe by force, and their fightings proceed from an eager deſire to ſatisfy their luſts. But here is a good fight for a good cauſe, cleaving to the Lord over the belly of difficulties; laying hold of eternal life. It is the cauſe of Chriſt, the cauſe of the ſinner's eternal ſalvation, which cannot be but a good cauſe, to endeavour the maintenance of it againſt all oppoſers.

2. It is an honourable fight, worthy of a man of true valour and magnanimity. The men of the world boaſt themſelves of their ſtrength in making their part good againſt worms like themſelves. In the mean time they are ſlaves to their luſts, and have neither heart nor hand to reſiſt them, but are captives at pleaſure. But the believer in his fight encounters more formidable enemies: Eph. vi. 12. 'We wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, 'but againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the ru'lers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wick'edneſs, in high places.'

3. There is a good captain in this fight, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, under whoſe ſtandard the believer fights. He went on the head of all the fighting company, and overcame; and he calls his people to make their way through an army which he has already broken: Rev. iii. 21. 'To 'him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my 'throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with 'my Father in his throne.' He is ever at their hand, and the cauſe is his; it muſt therefore be a good fight.

4. In regard of the good that is got even of the partial victories; the believers being helped to ſtand ſhocks, tho' the war be not ended, Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. 'We glory in 'tribulations, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; 'and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and 'hope maketh not aſhamed.' The ſharp trials of faith are hard in a time; but a review of bypaſt dangers, in the time of the combat, gives an exquiſite pleaſure: ſo that the man comes to ſay, 'It is good that I was afflicted.'

5. laſtly, In regard the final and complete victory in the end is ſure, Rom. vi. 20. 'The God of peace ſhall 'bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.' Many a battle the believer may loſe in the courſe of the war; but tho' the enemy prevail ſo far, yet the believer ſhall always be the conqueror at the end. The men of Ai got an advantage againſt Joſhua's men; but they got a complete victory at length over the men of Ai.

III. Why is the Chriſtian life, in the diſpoſal of holy providence, made a fight? No doubt the Lord could have given his people a conſtant ſun-ſhine as well on this ſide as the other ſide of death, and cleared the way of thoſe armed adverſaries that are ready to attack them.

1. That the members may be conformed to their head in their paſſage through the world. The life that our Lord Jeſus had in the world, was a fighting life all along, till he entered into his glory. It is very agreeable that his followers ſhould find it ſo, and ſo be conformed to their head in ſuffering as well as in reigning: Rom. viii. 17. 'If ſo be that we ſuffer with him, that we may be al'ſo glorified together.'

2. That the nothingneſs, and utter unworthineſs of the creature may convincingly appear; ſo as they themſelves and all others may ſee it is owing purely to free grace, not to them. We find the Lord uſually laid thoſe very low whom he minded to raiſe up on high; as in the caſe of Joſeph, Moſes, and David: and this to ſtain the pride of all glory, that they might ſee that it was wholly of free grace, and owing to no merit of theirs. The Lord accordingly minding to bring a ſelect company into heaven, in the firſt place brings them into the wilderneſs. There they are ſtung with ſerpents, &c. whereby much corruption and weakneſs appears in them, and afterwards they are brought unto a wealthy place.

3. For the greater confuſion of the grand adverſary, whom he cauſeth poor weak creatures to triumph over after they have maintained a fight with him; Rom. xvi. 20. 'The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your 'feet ſhortly.' Our Lord Jeſus overcame and baffled Satan's temptations in the wilderneſs. He triumphed over him on the croſs, Col ii. 15. 'Having ſpoiled prin'cipalities and powers, he made a ſhew of them openly, 'triumphing over them in it.' Satan renews the battle againſt his members on earth: and what is the iſſue? The ſtripling David, with his ſling and ſtone, lays Goliah on the green. The weak believer, through faith, confounds the united wit and force of men and devils, which tends to the greater confuſion of the enemy.

4. For the greater glory of the Captain of their ſalvation, the more full diſplay of the freedom and efficacy of his blood and Spirit. (1.) Every wound the believer gets in this fight, puts a new jewel in Chriſt's crown. That is a new item for the believer in the debt book of free grace, and ſo puts him more in free-grace's debt. (2.) Every wound the believer gives in this fight, conſidering his weakneſs, and the ſtrength of the enemy, does the ſame.

5. For that they may have a greater variety of experiences: Rom. 1. 4. 'Patience worketh experience; and 'experience, hope.' The exerciſed Chriſtian is the man of moſt experience. There is a great variety of promiſes in the covenant, for the various caſes the children of God may be in: and that his people may have experience of the reliſh of theſe promiſes, he brings them into the caſes to which theſe promiſes are adapted. Who find the ſap of that promiſe, Iſa. xxxiii. 16. 'Bread ſhall be given 'him, his waters ſhall be ſure,' like thoſe that are put to a fight of faith for their daily bread; or of that, Deut. xxxii. 36. 'For the Lord ſhall judge his people, and re'pent himſelf for his ſervants; when he ſeeth that their 'power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left,' like thoſe whoſe caſe is brought to an extremity in point of hopeleſſneſs?

6. laſtly, That heaven may be the more ſweet to them, when they come to it. It is in this reſpect that heaven is called a place of comfort. None will find reſt ſo ſweet as the wearied man. A child of God come to his journey's end, after many ups and downs, will ſing the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb in a higher ſtrain, than if he had never been in danger from his firſt ſetting out.

IV. The fourth thing is, to ſhew why their fight is called a fight of faith. The reaſon is, becauſe by that means all the glory of the victories obtained redounds to free grace; Rom. iv. 16. 'It is of faith, that it might 'be by grace.' The Lord is jealous of his own glory, and ſinful man is very apt to aſcribe ſomething to himſelf; therefore faith is pitched upon, for its activity lies in theſe two.

1. In carrying the ſinner quite out of himſelf. Hence, Believers are ſaid to have no confidence in the fleſh. The unbeliever's great ſtrength lies in ſummoning together all his natural abilities, and in confidence thereof trying the battle. But faith makes a man to be denied to all his own abilities, and not to lean to himſelf. And therefore as fire burns keeneſt in ſharp froſt, ſo faith acts moſt vigorouſly, when ſentence of death is paſſed on all probable means, as Abraham's faith.

2. In leaning upon the Lord for all. Faith goes out to the battle in the name of the Lord, holding by his promiſe, truſting that he will make it out: and ſo it is the mouth of the ſoul that ſucks the ſap of the promiſe, by a fiducial application of it.

V. I will touch at ſome particular fights of faith, the Chriſtian may have in his courſe heavenward, ſuch as,

1. In a call to ſome more than ordinary work or duty. 2. In deſertion. 3. In temptations from Satan. 4. In afflictions. 5. With this preſent evil world. 6. With ſin. 7. With death.

FIRST, There is a fight of faith, in a call to ſome more than ordinary work or duty. Thus Abraham was called out to this field, Gen. xxii. 1.; Moſes to bring the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, Exod. iii.; and Jonah, to preach to the Ninevites.

Here the believer gets as much as he is able to wreſtle with; yea, and ſometimes as much as lays him by, his faith failing. Thus Jonah was ſo put to it in this fight, that he goes to fly towards Tarſhiſh, to ſhift the duty.

Now, what makes the difficulty here, are, (1.) The hardneſs of the work in itſelf. (2.) A deep ſenſe of our inability for it. For ſometimes it is that which the Chriſtian ſeems of all things to be moſt unfit for (3.) The greater danger there may be in it, ſo that the Chriſtian muſt run a riſk in ſetting about it. Sometimes he muſt riſk his reputation, as in Jonah's caſe; ſometimes he muſt riſk even his ſafety or life. Here there is a particular fight of faith to be fought. And therein faith is to be exerted.

1. In complying with God's call in the faith of the promiſe of ſtrength for it. Philip. iv. 13. 'I can do all 'things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.' God never calls his people to any duty, but what they have ground to expect furniture for from himſelf. 'No man 'goeth a warfare on his own charges. The way of the 'Lord is ſtrength to the upright.' And God ſuits the back to the burden. It is much alike then whether it be little work and little ſtrength, or great work and ſtrength conform thereto.

2. In following the duty, in the faith of divine protection, as far as he ſees good. Faith truſts God with one's ſafety in the way of duty, according to the promiſe, Pſal. xci. 11. 'He ſhall give his angels charge over thee, 'to keep thee in all thy ways.' As long as one is found in the way where God bids him go, he may be ſure God will ſet a hedge about him, and make all work for his good.

SECONDLY, There is a fight of faith in deſertion. Here the believer is on the dark mountains in a ſpecial manner, the Lord in a depth of ſovereign wiſdom withdraws. And in this caſe there may be ſeveral things very heavy.

1. Darkneſs covering the believer's ſpirit, whereby he goes mourning without the ſun. Their former light is taken away, and miſts ariſe, ſo that they miſs their way.

2. Indiſpoſition for duty, proceeding from a liſtleſſneſs to communion with God, or from the extremity of trouble. So that the ſoul is not more unfit for duty, than when there is moſt need.

3. An army of doubts and fears attacking them, doubting of their love to God, and God's love to them.

4. The terrors of God ſet in battle array againſt them. They remember God, and are troubled. The man is carried captive from Sion to Sinai; and the law bends a proceſs againſt him. God appears as an enemy.

Now, faith's part here in this fight is,

1*ſt*, To juſtify God in the diſpenſation, and to ſubmit to ſovereignty, believing he doth all things well. The man has to do with him whoſe will is the law, and ſo muſt not adventure to call him to an account.

2*dly*, To cleave to Chriſt by a faith of adherence; ſaying, 'Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.' He muſt reſolutely adhere, over the belly of diſcouragements.

3*dly*, To believe an outgate in due time; Mic. vii. 8. 'When I fall, I ſhall ariſe; when I ſit in darkneſs, the 'Lord ſhall be a light unto me.' Iſa. l. 10. 'Who is 'among you that feareth the Lord, that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light? let him truſt in the name of 'the Lord, and ſtay upon his God.'

4*thly*, To hold the concluſion of our intereſt, notwithſtanding of the arguments drawn from the divine diſpenſation to prove us naught. Job xxvii. 6. 'My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go: my heart ſhall 'not reproach me ſo long as I live.'

5*thly*, Continuing in the way of duty notwithſtanding; as Job did, Job. i. 20, 21. who, notwithſtanding all the calamities that befel him, ſtill bleſſed God.

THIRDLY, There is a fight of faith in temptations from Satan. Natural men he tempts to ſin, to get them kept the ſurer in his gripes; the godly, that he may mar their communion with God, and make their lives bitter, if he cannot get them back entirely to his ſervice; both, that he may get God diſhonoured by them. The temptations are too many to be reckoned up particularly; but I ſhall take notice of theſe eight things following, in which ye would ſet yourſelves to fight the fight of faith.

1. Temptations to ſin, after ſome ſeeming or real enjoyment of God in ordinances. Nothing is more ordinary than a ſubtle or furious attack of the devil on a perſon brought into a better caſe than ordinary. Satan is a proud, envious ſpirit. The better it is with a ſoul, the more likely is the honour of God to be advanced, and their own ſalvation. Neither of theſe can Satan endure. In this caſe, faith is to manage a fight, by,

1*ſt*, Believing the ſcripture warnings and inſtances of this: Luke xxii. 31. And the Lord ſaid, Simon, Simon, 'behold, Satan hath deſired to have you, that he may ſift 'you as wheat.' Compare with 2 Cor. xii. 7. Hereby the ſoul will be ſet to watch before the temptation come, and when it is come, will ſee that it is no more than what God's people have met with.

2*dly*, Reſiſting, not in confidence of vows and reſolutions, but in confidence of the grace that is in Chriſt, 2 Cor. xii. 9. 'My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my 'ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.' 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is 'in Chriſt Jeſus.' It is confidence in what we have in ourſelves that mars all.

2. Temptations to the ſin that one is moſt eaſily led aſide unto, Heb. xii. 1. 'Let us lay aſide every weight 'and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us.' Satan will be ſure to attack you on the weak ſide, where he is moſt likely to prevail. He knows what is the ſin of one's conſtitution, age, calling, and the like, and there to ſet on where the wall is weakeſt. But he that minds for heaven, muſt reſiſt, and fight againſt him, and that in faith.

1*ſt*, Believing the neceſſity of overcoming, even in that particular, Matth. v. 29. 'If thy right eye offend 'thee, pluck it off and caſt it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, 'and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell.' Men would do well to remember that there the one thing lacking, which ruins all, may lie. And if the devil can get the man kept under the dominion of any one luſt, it will ſerve his purpoſe for that man's ruin, though he have many good things about him.

2dly, Believing that ſuch temptations may be overcome and got maſtered, Luke xvii. 6. ' If ye had faith as a ' grain of muſtard ſeed, ye might ſay unto this ſycamine ' tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the ſea; and it ſhould obey you.' Theſe temptations men do ſo naturally incline to comply with, that they think it is in vain to reſiſt them; for it will not do, Jer. ii. 25. ' Thou ſaidſt there is no hope. No, for I ' have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go.' This is the language of unbelief, which faith muſt contradict.

3dly, Believing, that, in the uſe of means, ye ſhall overcome, through grace and ſtrength from the Lord: Mark xi. 24. ' What things ſoever ye deſire when ye ' pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have ' them.' This faith makes the ſoul in this caſe like a giant refreſhed with wine, oppoſing Chriſt's ſtrength to its own weakneſs: and ſo brings it off victorious.

3. Temptations to the groſſeſt ſins. No body is out of hazard of theſe, while in this world, 1 Cor. x. 12. ' Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall.' Satan makes great helliſh gain by theſe; he defiles the conſcience, gets God diſhonoured, and religion expoſed to reproach by them. He gets the maſk pulled off many hypocrite; and gets ſincere Chriſtians ſometimes to go halting to the grave by them. They that would ſee heaven muſt reſiſt, and reſiſt in faith.

1ſt, Believing that they are ſnares for ſoul-ruin, according to Prov. vi. 27, 28. ' Can a man take fire in ' his boſom, and his clothes not be burnt? Can one go ' upon hot coals and his feet not be burnt?' It is the work of faith to diſcern, by the glaſs of the word, Satan's devices, and art of deſtruction; that the ſoul, ſeeing them ſo, may conceive a horror of them. ' Abhor what is evil.'

2dly, Believing that it is not the temptation, but the yielding to it, that will provoke God againſt you. I own that ſuch temptations are often ſent as a puniſhment for other ſins, as Judas's covetouſneſs was puniſhed with a temptation to betray Chriſt for money; and by ſuch means God often ſhakes himſelf looſe of hypocrites, and ſpues them out of his mouth, Rev. iii. 16. And it is often the thought of ſerious ſouls, that temptations to ſins ſo very groſs are a ſign of the Lord's hatred againſt them; yet that is a plain miſtake; for what ſin is there ſo groſs but a child of God may be tempted to it? Aſaph was tempted to deny a providence, Pſal. lxxiii. 13. Job was tempted to blaſpheme and curſe God, Job i. 11, 12. Chriſt himſelf was tempted to diſtruſt, ſelf-murder, and worſhipping of the devil, Matth. iv. The faith of theſe things will be ſtrengthening under ſuch horrid temptations.

3dly, Believing the word condemning and forbidding theſe ſins, and ſo oppoſing heaven's word of command and threatening unto the temptation. This is faith's wielding the ſword of the Spirit againſt the tempter, which is fitted to awe the heart with the authority of God, and fill it with abhorrence of the temptation. Whenever the temptation is given, there ſhould preſently be ſome apt ſcripture to oppoſe to it by faith; and as oft as temptation is repeated, do ye repeat the word in faith; and Satan will fly at length.

4thly, Believing the promiſes ſuited to the caſe. There is no temptation any can be in, but there is a promiſe ſuited for it in the word, which is the armour faith muſt wield in order to overcome. James iv. 7. ' Reſiſt the ' devil, and he will flee from you.' And in the faith of the promiſe make reſiſtance, not doubting but it ſhall be accompliſhed in your caſe; and according to your faith ſo ſhall it be; as with Peter on the water.

4. Temptations artfully ſuited to one's circumſtances. Satan has a helliſh art of framing his temptations to people's circumſtances, wherein they are moſt likely to take with them. Thus Chriſt being hungered, the devil tempted him to diſtruſt, Matth. iv. 3. Job was tempted to deſpair under his afflictions; and Achan to ſteal. Thus he has his temptations ſuited to the aged and the young, the poor and the rich. He knows that in ſuch a caſe he rows with the ſtream. But reſiſt ye in faith.

1ſt, Believing that Satan watcheth all opportunities againſt you, 1 Pet. v. 8. ' Be ſober, be vigilant; for the ' devil as a roaring lion, walketh about, ſeeking whom ' he may devour.' This will make you watch againſt him, when he has ſuch an advantage againſt you, that he will not let ſlip. They had not need to ſleep who were within the enemy's gunſhot.

2dly, Believing that the Lord has you upon your trials in that particular, to which ye are ſo tempted, Gen. xxxix. 9. ' How can I do this great wickedneſs, and ſin againſt ' God?' Men think, when an occaſion of ſinning lies before them, that now is the time to gratify the luſt: but happy were they could they think, Now, here is a trial for me, and God is looking on to ſee how I will behave.

3dly, Believing that as the devil ſuits his temptations, ſo Chriſt ſuits his aſſiſtance, to the circumſtances of poor ſinners; ſo that reſolving to reſiſt you may ſay, There are more with us than againſt us. Whatever way the ſtream runs with the temptation, ſtretch out your hands to ſwim againſt it, in faith of the promiſe, Iſ. xl. 28, 29.

5. Temptations from one ſin to another. Satan knows that one ſin makes way for another. So Eve's luſtful look to the forbidden fruit, made way for her taking and eating it and that for giving to her huſband and his eating; and ſo the whole world's ruin was completed. Thus it is uſual for Satan to prevail with thoſe that have yielded to him in one temptation, to lie for covering it again. Some ſins natively lead to others; thus drunkenneſs make men an eaſy prey to uncleanneſs. And ſome, when once the devil has got them to be harlots, the temptation from that and from their credit, has made them murderers; ſome murdering their children after they are born, and ſome before; the latter as well as the former guilty of innocent blood in a degree beyond Onan, whom the Lord himſelf ſlew as a murderer. But happy they who reſiſt the beginnings of ſin, while in the bud; but where ye are fallen into the ſnare, fight againſt the temptation to add ſin to ſin, or cover one ſin with another.

1ſt, Believing, that there is mercy for penitents, but none for thoſe who harden themſelves in their wickedneſs: Prov. xxviii. 13. ' He that covereth his ſins, ſhall not ' proſper: but whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall ' have mercy.' Nay, there is not a more ready way under heaven to expoſe ſinners to the arrows of God's wrath, than to be hardened in wickedneſs.

2dly, Believing that the deſign of the temptation to one ſin from another, is plainly the ruin of the ſoul. Thus he drove Judas from the betraying of Chriſt, into an attack againſt his own life. For thus the one ſin becomes a need-nail to the other, ſhutting up the ſoul under the guilt of it, not to be removed, but by a miracle of mercy.

3dly, Believing that all the miſery that can follow in the world, upon one ſin, is not to be laid in the balance with the wrath of God, that is kindled by running into another ſin becauſe he has been guilty of one. This all ſuch as ſo do will find, either in this world or in hell, when God ſhall make all their ſins together lie on their own heads. For ſooner or later ſin will find out the guilty.

4thly, Believing the promiſe of pardon through the Redeemer's blood, however atrocious and heinous the ſin is. Some are led on from one ſin to another, becauſe they have no ſenſe of the ill and danger of it to their ſouls: the faith of God's teſtimony to their ſin would cure this, and make them cry out, Undone. Others have a ſecret deſpair of finding mercy, and ſo they proceed from evil to worſe; but the faith of the promiſe of pardon would cure that: Iſa. i. 18. ' Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: though your ſins be as ſcarlet, ' they ſhall be white as ſnow; though they be red like ' crimſon, they ſhall be as wool.'

5thly, Believing the promiſe of renewed ſtrength even to thoſe that have ſlighted it before. They who have been foiled by one temptation, may get victory over another. They may have taken a large ſtep on the devil's ground, who yet looking to Chriſt by faith, may ſtop and go no further.

6. Temptations ſuddenly caſt in, and reſolutely continued. This is a furious aſſault of the devil, which he often makes uſe of in blaſphemous injections into the minds of poor ſinners; where the ſoul is in no better caſe than one, who defending a thatched houſe, no ſooner gets one fire-ball quenched, but another is thrown in on him. If at any time this be your caſe, reſiſt vigorouſly in faith.

1ſt, Believing, that theſe are your affliction, but no further your ſin than you yield or conſent to them. This is clear from the ſuggeſtions made to our Saviour, while yet there was no ſin in him. Satan does with theſe as harlots laying their brats at the door of honeſt matrons, ſo confounding the poor ſinner, that he takes the voice of Satan for his own voice. But unleſs ye yield to them, and embrace them, Satan only ſhall account for them.

2dly, Adhering reſolutely by faith to the Lord Jeſus, as your Lord and Saviour did. John xii. 27. ‘ Now is ‘ my ſoul troubled; and what ſhall I ſay? Father, ſave ‘ me from this hour; but for this cauſe came I unto this ‘ hour.’ If ever that reſolute adherence is neceſſary, it is neceſſary at ſuch a time. The great end and deſign of the tempter by theſe furious attacks, is to drive the poor toſſed tempted creature from his hold of Chriſt: but we ſhould be like the traveller in a windy day, that holds his cloak the faſter the harder it blows.

3dly, Believing that there is no ſafety in parleying with the tempter, but the temptation is to be rejected with abhorrence. It was Eve's parley with the tempter, that laid the foundation of the ruin of the world. Setting on the Second Adam, he got a refuſal immediately, Mat. iv. Theſe ſuggeſtions are not ſo far to be liſtened to, as that one ſhould think with himſelf whether he ſhould comply or no. The Lord rebuke thee, is the ſafeſt anſwer.

4thly, Believingly oppoſing the Lord's word to them, which condemns and forbids the thing tempted to. In thoſe temptations our Saviour met with, which were ſhocking even to the light of nature, it is remarkable he ſtill oppoſes ſcripture to them, Matth. iv. 7, 10. For that is a divine ordinance for repelling of temptation, to be reiterated in faith as often as Satan repeats his temptation.

5thly, Believing, that there is grace in Chriſt Jeſus ſufficient for repelling theſe violent temptations, and that it is ſufficient for you in particular. 2 Cor. xii. 9. ‘ My ‘ grace is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made ‘ perfect in weakneſs.’ If Satan prevail ſo far as to cauſe the tempted to think, that the violence of the temptation is ſo great that they cannot ſtand againſt it; this is ſuch a weakning of faith, that the breach can hardly miſs to be made there, as a breaking forth of an high wall in an inſtant. And Satan cannot obtain it of the tempted, but by turning of his eyes from Chriſt into himſelf. Therefore, in that hour of darkneſs, let the tempted keep his eye on the fulneſs of ſtrength in Chriſt: 2 Tim. ii. 1. ‘ Therefore be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus.’

6thly, Believing the promiſe of victory to the ſtruggler with temptation, James iv. 7. ‘ Reſiſt the devil, and he ‘ will flee from you.’ The faith of the victory animates the tempted to continue the ſtruggle, and will make him be like a giant refreſhed with wine, and bring him off victorious. ‘ According to thy faith, be it unto thee.’

7. Temptations ſtriking at the foundation of religion, ſuch as againſt the being of a God, and the divine authority of the ſcriptures. Theſe are what the devil cannot himſelf believe; though he fain would, yet he cannot be an infidel as to the ſcriptures. But he ſometimes would palm theſe atheiſtical principles even on ſaints of God, who want not an atheiſtical principle in them to work upon. If at any time Satan attack you with ſuch temptations, ye muſt reſiſt them.

1ſt, Believing that they are the ſpawn of the old ſerpent in the corrupt heart, Pſal. xiv. 1. ‘ The fool hath ſaid in ‘ his heart, There is no God.’ It is ſaid of the beaſt in Rev. xiii. 6. that ‘ he opened his mouth in blaſphemy a‘ gainſt God, to blaſpheme his name, and his tabernacle, ‘ and them that dwell in heaven.’ This is the reception they ſhould get immediately, faith diſcerning the cloven foot in them, at their firſt appearance. Whether they come from the devil, or the corrupt heart moved by him, it is all a caſe in this point; believe them to be deviliſh, and treat them with abhorrence. And the ſooner ye oppoſe them, the victory will be the more eaſy.

2dly, Reſolutely believing the foundation principles which the temptation ſtrikes againſt, over the belly of the devil's objections againſt them, though ye cannot anſwer them: Heb. xi. 6. ‘ He that cometh to God, muſt be‘ lieve that he is.’ 2 Tim. iii. 16. ‘ All ſcripture is giv‘ en by inſpiration of God.’ Hence is that exhortation of the apoſtle, Eph. vi. 16. ‘ Take the ſhield of faith, ‘ wherewith ye ſhall quench the fiery darts of the wicked.’

There is not wanting ſtore of reaſons to ſupport the great foundation principles of religion; and nothing but ſophiſtry can be brought againſt them, which reaſon ſufficiently enlightened may diſcover. There are arguments for the being of God, and the authority of the ſcriptures, to convince atheiſts. When you are aſſaulted with theſe temptations, I dare not adviſe you to the bringing reaſons for theſe principles againſt him, but to a reſolute holding the truth over the belly of his objections; becauſe,

(1.) They are firſt principles, and ye are not obliged to diſpute them with any, unleſs it were to keep an oppoſer from ruin, as in the caſe of atheiſts. But this has no place in a combat with the devil, of whom there is no hope.

(2.) Becauſe the devil is a ſpirit with whom we are not to commune without a ſpecial call. Our Lord, could have reaſoned the devil out of it, yet oppoſes to his temptations the teſtimony of ſcripture. It is the ſafeſt way for us, whatever we have to ſay in temptation, to ſay it to God, rather than to the devil.

(3.) Becauſe the devil is a diſputant too ſubtle for us, and in the way of reaſon may quickly over-reach us. I make no queſtion but the devil is a philoſopher beyond our greateſt ſcholars: and men may expect from him moſt ſubtle turns of wit to elude their arguments, and to ſtart objections not eaſy to anſwer. And therefore it is not ſafe to engage in a diſpute with him.

But do ye reſolutely believe the principles you have received on divine authority, which ye have no reaſon to quit on the devil's contrary teſtimony, ſince he is known to be a liar. And this method of holding the concluſion reſolutely, is recommended to us by the practice of the ſaints, Matth. xv. 25. Therefore, while Satan caſts in theſe temptations, enter your proteſt againſt them, you do believe, and will through his grace believe theſe foundations, and will not quit them.

3dly, Believing and applying the promiſe of ſaving illumination and teaching of the Spirit. Light from the Lord will diſpel the miſts that Satan raiſes in the corrupt heart. Hence ſays our Lord to Peter, Matth. xvi. 17. ‘ Bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-jona: for fleſh and blood ‘ hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father which is in ‘ heaven.’ And this light is brought in, by faith's applying the promiſes ſuited to the caſe. And the tempted ſhould lift his eyes unto the Lord, that he may ſhine into his ſoul, and diſpel the darkneſs, according to his promiſe.

4thly, Believing the ſcripture accounts of the myſteries of providence from whence Satan raiſeth theſe temptations. Satan ſometimes obſerves the ſpirits of ſaints fretted with ſore afflictions, the wicked proſpering, and they in great diſtreſs: here he plants his cannon, to beat down the foundations of all religion. And the believer reſiſts him by believing the ſcripture account of theſe myſteries of providence. This is the way to undermine Satan's battery, to raſe the foundation on which he builds.

What will that malicious ſpirit make of the long diſtreſſes of God's people, and the proſperity of the wicked, againſt the being of God, and the certainty of his word? The ſun may hide his head in winter, but will any ſay therefore there is no ſun? Is not one day with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day? Doth not the ſcripture ſhew, that there is a judgment to come, and a long eternity to ſhew God's good pleaſure in the veſſels of his mercy, and his wrath againſt the veſſels of his wrath, though neither the godly have two ſummers, nor the wicked two winters in one year? Have not prayers lain over, that have got an anſwer at length?

Thus believing is the method of reſiſting in theſe temptations. Howbeit, when ye are free of temptation in theſe matters, it would confirm your faith of the foundation principles of religion, with all the reaſons and arguments ye can draw together for them.

8. laſtly, Temptations of deluſion. This is a kind of temptation moſt hard to reſiſt, Satan therein preſſing to ſin under the notion of duty. It is a great trial of faith, and has always a lamentable upſhot, according to the nature thereof, Iſ. i. ult. But ye muſt reſiſt in faith.

1ſt, Believing your own weakneſs and darkneſs, together with the diligence of Satan, according to the ſcripture, 2 Cor. iii. 5. ' We are not ſufficient of ourſelves, to think any thing as of ourſelves: but our ſufficiency is of God.' 1 Pet. v. 8. ' Be ſober, be vigilant, becauſe your adverſary, the devil, goeth about as a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour.' It is ſelf conceit that betrays men into the ſnare: for theſe are in little fear of his wiles, and ſo are the more eaſily catched.

2dly, Believing the ſcripture to be the only rule of faith and manners, and to improve it ſo: Iſ. viii. 20. There is an itch in the nature of man, to be wiſe above what is written; and ſometimes Satan has made his gain thereof, by viſions, impreſſions, &c. But in ſuch caſes, take heed to yourſelves, and examine it by the written word. Therefore what is of God will abide the trial of the word, and the more cloſely it is brought to it, it will appear the more clear: what is not ſo, will loſe all its luſtre there, as ill wares when they are brought out to the light of the ſun. And therefore thoſe who are under deluſion, are loath to examine by the word. 1 John iv. 1. ' Beloved, believe not every Spirit, but try the ſpirits whether they are of God; becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world,' 2 Pet. i. 19. ' We have alſo the word of prophecy more ſure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, till the day dawn, and the day ſtar ariſe in your hearts.' The ſcripture is the way of communication betwixt heaven and us: it is from the Holy Spirit, and he cannot contradict himſelf. Therefore ' though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other goſpel unto you, than that ye have received, let him be accurſed.'

Laſtly, Believing the promiſe of guidance into all truth, John xvi. 13. ' Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth.' Pſal. xxv. 9. ' The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way.' The ſoul thus emptied of itſelf, and leaning to the Lord Chriſt for his teaching, will not want teaching in the uſe of means. Pſal. xxviii, 7. ' The Lord is my ſtrength and ſhield; my heart truſted in him, and I am helped.' Our Lord Jeſus is the appointed guide of his people. He is given ' for a light of the people.' Divine manifeſtations are always ſanctifying and humbling; deluſions puff up, and leave the ſoul as unholy as they found it. And even when duty is preſſed in deluſion, it will readily be found either out of ſeaſon, or not the duty of one's ſtation, or to have ſome ſuch flaw in it or other.

FOURTHLY, There is a fight of faith in afflictions: Heb. x. 32. ' Call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions.' One may as well think to travel without the flies annoying him in a hot ſummer's day, as to go through the world without meeting with afflictions. They are common to good and bad. In the Lord's way one cannot miſs them; Acts xiv. 22. ' We muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.' In the way of ſin one will meet them too: Eccleſ. x. 8. ' He that diggeth a pit, ſhall fall into it.' Sovereigntv diſtributes them, to ſome more, to others leſs; but to all ſome. The native effect of afflictions on the guilty creature, is to drive it away from God. So that it is owing to ſomething elſe that they do good to ſinners. And that,

1. To a word of divine appointment. Afflictions are an ordinance of God for good to ſinners: Iſa. xxvii. 9. ' By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin.' And a divine appointment will alter the nature and operation of a thing. The ſavour of burnt fleſh is very unpleaſant, but the ordinance made it a ſweet ſavour, Gen. viii. 21. Clay laid on one's eyes is a mean natively to make one blind: yet, by a divine ordinance, it cured blindneſs, John ix. 6, 7. So afflictions natively drive away the ſoul from God, but, by a divine ordinance, lead it to him.

2. To a receiving of them in faith: 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. ' For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' Whoever would profit by a divine ordinance, muſt receive it in faith. For to every divine ordinance there is a promiſe annexed to be believed: and the promiſe being believed, the ordinance has its effect. So that we ſee afflictions do good to ſome, to others no good, but ill: It is faith and unbelief that make the difference.

Wherefore ye muſt fight in faith againſt the tendency of afflictions in themſelves. And if ye aſk, What is that tendency in afflictions on the guilty creature, which he muſt fight againſt? and, How muſt one fight againſt it? I anſwer in the ſix following particulars. It is,

1. To impreſs the perſon with the apprehenſion that God is his enemy, and that he is ſeeking his ruin. Even Job himſelf was carried away with his hard thoughts of God, Job xxxiii. 10. ' Behold, he findeth occaſions againſt me, he counteth me for his enemy.' Guilt lying on the conſcience, makes it full of hard thoughts of God. Whenever the guilty ſoul hears from heaven by affliction, it is ready to ſtrike in his mind, Now this is for my ſin, and God is proclaiming war from heaven againſt me. Hence affliction is ſeveral times the means of awakening the ſecure ſinner; though he can never come to God till he believe.

Now, ye muſt fight againſt this in faith.

1ſt, Believing, that though all afflictions are ſigns of God's hatred of ſin, and his ſeeking the ruin of it; yet no affliction on you in this world can be ſuch a ſign of God's hatred of your perſon, and his ſeeking your ruin. God's deareſt children may have as heavy afflictions on their backs, as any other perſons in the world. And no wonder, ſince God's only begotten Son had the heavieſt burden of afflictions that ever was on the back of a man.

2dly, Believing, that afflictions are God's ordinance for good to the afflicted, even as the preaching of the word to them: Prov. xxix. 15. ' The rod and reproof give wiſdom.' They are the diſcipline of God's houſe, as the word is the doctrine of it: Heb. xii. 6. ' For whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth.' So the deſign of the rod is your good, as the deſign of phyſic is the health of the patient; though, one, by miſguiding under it, may indeed kill himſelf; even as one, by not complying with the deſign of the affliction, may wound his own ſoul. It is certain, that afflictions have a word of divine appointment for good; but how can ye ſhare of it, if ye do not believe them to be an ordinance of God for good?

3dly, Believing, that God is ſeeking your good, as uſing towards you the very ſame means that he does towards his own children: 2 Pet. iii. 9. ' The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, but is long ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.' Should a phyſician give you the very ſame remedy that he gives to his own child, ſick of your diſeaſe: what but unreaſonable jealouſy ſhould make you think he deſigns ill to you? And what but unbelief can make you think, God ſeeks your ruin by affliction, with which he works the cure of his own?

4thly, Believing the promiſe annexed to that ordinance, That your affliction ſhall do you good: Iſa. xxvii. 9. ' By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin.' Zeph. iii. 12, 13. ' I will alſo leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord.' This is the way to partake of the efficacy of affliction; and it is the faith of it that makes the ſaints welcome the rod, to be patient under it, and to comply with the deſign of it; while thoſe that expect no good of them, get as little many times.

2. To take all heart and hand from him in his approaches to God, Pſal. lxxvii. 3. ' I remembered God, and was troubled; I complained, and my ſpirit was overwhelmed.' The guilty conſcience takes up the affliction, and juſt knocks him down with it, before the Lord. He is filled with conſternation before an angry God, and can look for no good at the Lord's hand. The affliction lies ſo heavy upon the ſinner, that he cannot think there is any hope of God's hearing his prayers, or making him welcome to the throne of grace. Job ix. 16. 'If I had called, and he had anſwered me; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.' But ye muſt fight againſt this in faith,

1ſt, Believing, that there are bowels of compaſſion in God, while nothing but frowns appear in his countenance. And it is faith's work, to take up theſe bowels of mercy in an afflicting God. Queſt. What way ſhall one perceive them? Anſw. While ye behold his anger in his providences, ye muſt look to his word by faith, and there ye will ſee theſe bowels of mercy: Iſa. xlix. 14 —— 16. 'But Zion ſaid, The Lord hath forſaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me.' chap. lxiii. 9. 'In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his preſence ſaved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.' And ye may be helped hereto, by conſidering the heart of a father ſmiting his own child; where in a ſenſe, the heart goes not along with the hand. Thus the church prays, but in faith: Iſa. lxiii. 15, 16. 'Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy glory; where is thy zeal and thy ſtrength, the ſounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercies towards me, are they reſtrained? Doubtleſs thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledge us not: thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, thy name is from everlaſting.' And this the church doth on good grounds: Lam. iii. 33. 'For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.'

2dly, Believing the teſtimony of God's word, as to inſtances of perſons that have had God's heart towards them, while his hand has been lying heavy on them. Thus it was with Job; he was moſt dear to God, yet he was given up unto the power of Satan to afflict him. Theſe things are written, that ye through patience and comfort of the ſcriptures, might have hope.

3dly, Believing the promiſe of hearing the prayers of the afflicted, Pſal. l. 15. 'Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorify me.' Oppoſe this promiſe in faith, to the operation of the affliction on you before the Lord: take this cordial when ye begin to faint in your approaches to God. 'Lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees.' Is there a ſecret whiſper, that you are ſo afflicted that you need not pray? It is unbelief. Say ye, ſince I am ſo afflicted, I am called to pray, James v. 13. and there is a particular encouragement in Pſal. cii. 17. 'He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute.'

3. To fright the ſinner away from God. Our firſt parents ſaw they were naked, and fled to hide themſelves from the Lord. When the conſcience is fired with guilt under affliction, its natural motion is to run away from God. Hence the ſorrow of the world is ſaid to work death, becauſe the more deep one is drenched in it, the farther he goes from God. Satan knows this very well, and therefore he is eager to have ſinners afflicted, and to make their lives bitter; though he is ſometimes outſhot in his own bow, as in Job's caſe. But ye muſt fight againſt this in faith.

1ſt, Believing that God ſends afflictions, not to fright the ſinner from him, but to bring him to him, Hoſ. v. 1. 'Hear ye this, O prieſts, and hearken ye houſe of Iſrael, and give ear, O houſe of the king; for judgment is toward you, becauſe ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net ſpread upon Tabor.' It is God's ordinary method to bring home runaways and backſliders: Hoſ. ii. 7. 'And ſhe ſhall follow after her lovers, but ſhe ſhall not overtake them; and ſhe ſhall ſeek them, but ſhall not find them; then ſhall ſhe ſay, I will go and return to my firſt huſband, for then was it better with me than now.' Satan's deſign is one thing and God's is another: and though Satan row with the ſtream, a touch from the hand of God will carry his purpoſe.

2dly, Believing that none can better their caſe by running away from the Lord: however hard their caſe may ſeem with him, they can never mend themſelves by going to another hand. Hence Peter ſaid to Chriſt, John vi. 68. 'Lord, to whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.' The ſinner under affliction is like Hagar, flying from the face of her miſtreſs Sarai; but the beſt courſe the angel of the Lord directed her unto, was, to return to her miſtreſs, and ſubmit herſelf under her hands. Jonah fled from the preſence of the Lord, and ſhunning the journey to Nineveh, caſt himſelf into a whale's belly. And thoſe that take that courſe in their affliction will not ſpeed better.

3dly, Believing your reconciliation with an offended God through Chriſt, 2 Cor. v. 19. 'God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them: and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation.' God was never ſo angry with any of Adam's children, but he was ready to lay by his anger for the ſake of Chriſt, apprehended by faith. The whole tenor of the goſpel holds out this truth: and the law is ſuffered to laſh the ſinner, and afflictions are laid on him to the end he may improve it for his reconciliation with God.

4. To bring the ſinner to caſt off religion, and lay aſide the duties of it. Matth. xiii. 21. 'When tribulation, or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by and by they are offended.' Thus we find a profane generation arguing the vanity of religion, and the duties of it, from their afflicted and low circumſtances, Mal. iii. 14. 'Ye have ſaid it is in vain to ſerve God: and what profit is it, that we have kept his ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hoſts?' No leſs a man than Aſaph was near turning Atheiſt on this very ſcore, under a ſtrong temptation, Pſal. lxxiii. 12, 13, 14. 'Behold, theſe are the ungodly, who proſper in the world, they increaſe in riches. Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning.' And ſo it has fared with many, who in their proſperity have kept up a form of religion, that have been quite ſoured as to religion in adverſity, and they have viſibly given up with it; like the mixt multitude in the wilderneſs.

Here is great need to fight the fight of faith,

1ſt, Believing that proſperity is not tied to religion, nor yet to irreligion: but whatever of the ways one takes, affliction will meet him in the world: Eccleſ. ix. 2. 'All things come alike to all; there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked,' &c. If men take up religion for worldly proſperity, no wonder they lay it aſide again upon the diſappointment. But their laying it aſide will not ſecure them from affliction. Therefore men ſhould look ſo to religion itſelf, as to be wedded to it for its intrinſic value. But in the way of religion men may find a good conſcience under affliction, while they find an ill conſcience in the way of caſting it off.

2dly, Believing, that the advantage of religion is to be repeated after the time of trial is over, Rev. ii. 10. 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.' Now is our ſeed-time; and the ſowing muſt be in tears, where the reaping time of joy is to follow. The harveſt of glory in heaven comes moſt full after a wet ſeed-time.

3dly, Believing, that there is an advantage in religion for bearing of afflictions, 2 Cor. i. 12. 'Our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world.' Promiſes applied by faith, are full of comfort to the afflicted. The Lord's word is full of light as to the nature and ends of them: ſo that the Bible is the beſt company for thoſe in affliction. This well is deep, and faith muſt draw.

4thly, Believing, that the promiſes with reſpect to affliction, both as to the iſſue of them in another world, and as to ſupport under them in this, ſhall be made out to you, Pſal. lxxiii. 24. ‘Thou ſhalt guide me with thy counſel, and afterward receive me to glory.’ It is the faith of the upper Canaan, and of proviſion in the wilderneſs-world, that fits for the wilderneſs life.

4. To provoke the ſinner againſt God, to cauſe him to murmur againſt him, and arraign and condemn in his heart, the conduct of holy providence in the ordering of his lot: 1 Cor. x. 10. ‘Neither murmur ye, as ſome of them alſo murmured, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer.’ Hard affliction laid on a man in whom dwelleth a corrupt heart, is apt to raiſe the black band of murmurings and practical blaſphemy againſt God: like a ſtick ſtirring up a muddy pool, or an ant's neſt. It made even Job to curſe the day of his birth. Job was much overcome with his affliction, when he ſaid, chap. xxx. 21. ‘Thou art become cruel to me: with thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thyſelf againſt me.’ Fight againſt this tendency of affliction in faith,

1ſt, Believing, that God is your Sovereign Lord, having all power over you. There may be myſteries of providence in his dealing with us, which we cannot account for: but there can be no unjuſt ſtep in his procedure with us: Deut. xxxii. 4. ‘He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he,’ Jer. xii. 1. ‘Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee.’ We are his own by creation, and have forfeited our mercies by ſin; let faith view him in the throne of ſovereignty, and ſilence us, Matth. xx. 15. ‘Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?’

2dly, Believing, that you are debtors to mercy for that it is not worſe with you than it is; Lam. iii. 22. ‘It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe his compaſſions fail not.’ However hard any one's affliction is in this world, it is certain they deſerve worſe, Ezra ix. 13. ‘Thou our God has puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities deſerve;’ and that, Pſal. xc. 11. ‘who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath.’ This will make one to give thanks for what is kept off, rather than murmur for what is laid on.

3dly, Believing, that there is certainly need for all you meet with, 1 Pet. i. 6. ‘Wherein ye greatly rejoice, tho' now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations.’ A holy wiſe God ‘doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.’ Nay, he gives all by weight and meaſure, and will not put in one grain beyond what the caſe requires. What though ye cannot ſee it? ye have yet ground to believe it from the word, and may ſee it in the glaſs of God's infinite wiſdom, the contrivance of which your lot is. So that whatſoever he doth to you, is not only well done, but beſt done in your circumſtances.

4thly, Believing, that, through the grace of our Lord Jeſus, all you meet with ſhall work for your good, Rom. viii. 28. ‘We know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.’ God can carry on the good of a perſon, by that which he is apt to think is for his ruin; as was the caſe with Jacob, when he ſaid unto his ſons, Gen. xliii. 36. ‘Me have ye bereaved of my children: Joſeph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all theſe things are againſt me.’ And though the good of them may be long ere it appear, yet where it is believed, it will come at length. Now, this and all other promiſes are held forth to you in Chriſt to be believed and applied to yourſelves.

6. laſtly, To cauſe the ſinner harden himſelf in ſorrow. So we render that expreſſion of Job's, Job vi. 10. ‘I would harden myſelf in ſorrow:’ but it is not the ſenſe of that place. Affliction had this good effect on Jacob, who, when ‘all his ſons, and all his daughters roſe up to comfort him’ concerning the loſs of his ſon, ‘refuſed to be comforted; and ſaid, For I will go down into the grave unto my ſon mourning.’ It had alſo this bad effect on Aſaph, Pſal. lxxvii. 2. ‘In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, my ſore ran in the night, and ceaſed not: my ſoul refuſed to be comforted.’ Under affliction the caſe ſometimes appears ſo hopeleſs, that the afflicted ſtaves off comfort, when offered. They bid farewell to joy and comfort, and draw the curtains of ſorrow about themſelves: they have no comfortable proſpect, they look for none, and reſolve to hold there. This is dangerous. Fight againſt it in faith, 1ſt, Believing the promiſe of a comfortable outgate at length. This hardening one's ſelf in ſorrow, whatever it is founded on, is the fruit of unbelief, and caſts diſcredit on the promiſes of God, Lam. iii. 32. ‘But though he cauſe grief, yet will he have compaſſion according to the multitude of his mercies.’ It is faith's work to believe the accompliſhment of them, tho' one ſees not how.

2dly, Believing the promiſe of a comfortable mixture in the affliction while it laſtes. Pſal. xxxvii. 24. ‘Tho' he fall, he ſhall not be utterly caſt down: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand.’ And they had the experience of the outmaking thereof, 2 Cor. iv. 8, 9. ‘We are troubled on every ſide, but not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed.’ God has given a promiſe of ſtrengthening believers to bear their trials, Iſ. xl. 29, 30, 31. ‘He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength. Even the youths ſhall faint and be weary, and the young men ſhall utterly fall. But they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength: they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, they ſhall walk, and not be faint.’ The Pſalmiſt experienced the accompliſhment of this promiſe, Pſal. cxxxviii. 3. ‘In the day when I cried, thou anſweredſt me, and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul.’ God has given a promiſe of cordials now and then to ſupport them, Hoſ. ii. 14. ‘Therefore, behold I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderneſs, and ſpeak comfortably unto her.’ Micah vii. 8. ‘Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I ſhall ariſe.’

3dly, Believing that your patient ſuffering of affliction is as acceptable to God through Chriſt, as your doing for God: 2 Tim. ii. 12. ‘It is a faithful ſaying, If we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign with him.’ God has ſeveral pieces of work that he puts into the hands of his people: ſome he calls to do great things, others to ſuffer great things. Whatever it is the Lord carves out to you, ply that; God will accept it at thy hand through the Mediator. Suffering is as really ſervice to God, as doing is.

Thus we have ſeen the evil tendency of afflictions in themſelves, and how we are to fight againſt it by faith. But there are three ſpecial caſes wherein that force of affliction is greater than ordinary, and requires a ſtrong faith to ſtand the ſhock.

1. When a ſtroke from the hand of the Lord comes on a man in the way of his duty, which he is doing in God's command. This is apt to make a man ſtagger, eſpecially when it is a duty others have an ill eye on: for by it God ſeems to give ſentence againſt the man and his work. When people are going on in an ill way, it is no wonder Heaven works againſt them; but when the Lord meets a man as an enemy in the way of duty, that is a great trial. It is apt to make one leave duty.

Here is great need to fight in faith.

1ſt, Believing, that that is no ſign that the way you are in is diſpleaſing to God. It has been the trial of the Lord's people, when they have been called upon ſignal pieces of ſervice to God. We are to obſerve providences, but not to make a Bible of them. Jonah ſeemed to be favoured by providence when he ſet his face to go to Tarſhiſh, yet he was wrong. Jacob had God's call to return to his own country, and a promiſe of the Lord's being with him. But what a train of troubles met he with in his way thither? ſuch as his meeting with Eſau, his thigh put out of joint in wreſtling with the angel, &c. And you may read the trials Moſes met with in his going down to Egypt at God's command to redeem the Iſraelites.

2dly, Believing, that God has holy deſigns in the matter, becoming his infinite wiſdom, which ye may afterwards come to ſee, if ye ſee them not in the time; tho' in the mean time he is pleaſed with your way, John xiii. 7. ‘ What I do thou knoweſt not now ; but thou ſhalt know hereafter.’ Sometimes he deſigns to correct for ſome miſmanagement about the duty, as in Moſes's caſe for not circumciſing his ſon; ſometimes to hide pride from mens eyes, as was the apoſtle's caſe, and as in the caſe of the children of Iſrael their being foiled by the children of Benjamin. And this he doth always for the trial of his people's faith, regard to duty, &c. So Satan may be permitted to act againſt them for their trial; and ſure he will be the more eager, the more important the duty is.

3dly, Believing, that there is no ſafety in leaving the road of duty, meet with what they will in it, Prov. x. 9. ‘ He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely : but he that perverteth his ways, ſhall be known.’ A rebuke in the way of duty is ſweeter than a warm ſun ſhine in the way of ſin; Moſes eſteemed the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures in Egypt. There is communion with God to be had in ſuch providences, and they furniſh men with uſeful experiences for their after life.

2. When the affliction is extraordinary, ſo that it draws the eyes of beholders to notice it. When people's afflictions are no more than what is ordinary, they are more eaſily borne ; but when God ſeems to point out one to others, by ſome unordinary ſtroke, how hard is it to keep off concluding that God has a particular hatred againſt us ? There is need to fight in faith here, 1ſt, Believing, that it has been often the lot of God's children, to meet with ſuch kind of trials as would ſeem to have imported a particular hatred of them, Heb. x. 33. ‘ Ye were made a gazing-ſtock, both by reproaches and afflictions,’ 1 Cor. iv. 9. ‘ I think that God hath ſet forth us the apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed to death. For we are made a ſpectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.’ This was the lot of Chriſt himſelf, Pſal. xxii. 6. ‘ I am a worm, and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people.’ How was Job's heart pierced with that queſtion, Job v. 1. ‘ Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee ; and to which of the ſaints wilt thou turn ?’ It is very rare, that any of God's children have ſomething more than ordinary about them to the advantage, but they get ſomething more than ordinary to try them. Of all the patriarchs there was not one that had more divine manifeſtations than Jacob, nor ſo many and great afflictions neither. Of all the ſons of Jacob, there was none that was raiſed ſo high as Joſeph, and none ſo afflicted. Heman was a man of more than ordinary reach, and ſo of afflictions, Pſal. lxxxviii. 15. ‘ I am afflicted and ready to die, from my youth up : while I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted.’ Moſes was the meekeſt man in the earth, and never a man had more ado with it ; Job was the mirror of patience, and none ſuffered more.

2dly, Believing the illimited power of ſovereignty, which requires abſolute reſignation : Matth. xx. 15. ‘ Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?’ It is a ſilencing query, Rom. ix. 20. ‘ Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God ?’ Sovereignty takes one piece of clay, and ſets it on a throne ; another, and ſets it on a dunghill ; reaches to ſome the ordinary meal of affliction, but makes another's meſs five times as much. And who will ſet bounds to ſovereignty ?

3dly, Believing, that theſe different aſpects of providence, are but for the time of trial ; and they will ſoon be at an end : Job 23.——26. ‘ One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet. His breaſts are full of milk, and his bones are moiſtened with marrow. And another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eateth with pleaſure. They ſhall lie down alike in the duſt, and the worms ſhall cover them.’ It is no matter whether one be king or fool on the ſtage ; for in a little they get behind the curtains, and each one appears as he really is. Ordinary and unordinary afflictions will ſoon have an end ; and they that bear their own part right, happy will they be.

3. When the affliction is of long continuance. Some afflictions are like a ſummer-ſhower, heavy in their time, but ſoon over, but the moſt trying are the continuing afflictions, that are like a ſtormy winter, that blows hard. Many times deliverance is looked for, but it comes not. Any promiſing ſigns that appear miſgive ; and the ſtorm grows ever the longer the more hopeleſs. Here is a ſore ſhock to abide, which requires to fight in faith, 1ſt, Believing, that this is a part of the diſcipline of God's houſe, whereby he exerciſes his own children. Jer. viii. 20. ‘ The harveſt is paſt, the ſummer is ended, and we are not ſaved.’ David complains of his being weary of his crying, of his throat's being dried ; of his eyes failing while he waited for his God. The church was ſo long continued in affliction, that ſhe forgot proſperity. Many of the Lord's people have been ſo long under the hatches, that they have hung up their harps on the willows, and yet have been delivered.

2dly, Believing, that the longeſt night will have a morning, and that though the affliction continue long, it will not always. Pſal. ciii. 9. ‘ The Lord will not always chide : neither will he keep his anger for ever.’ If the queſtion be, ‘ Watchman, what of the night ? watchman, what of the night ?’ the anſwer is, ‘ The morning cometh, and alſo the night : if ye will inquire, inquire ye ; return, come.’ The ſky that has long loured may clear ere night : the wound may be looked on as incurable, that yet will be fairly healed. And if it ſhould not be removed in time, yet the faith of a bleſſed eternity may keep up the heart, when ‘ God ſhall wipe away all tears from the eyes ; and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain,’ Rev. xxi. 4.

2dly, Believing, that God knows the fitteſt ſeaſon for removing affliction, and not we. John vii. 6. ‘ My time is not yet come ; but your time is always ready.’ He keeps times and ſeaſons in his own hand, and at the fit time he will remove it, but not before, if it is to be removed in mercy. Mens hearts muſt abide much hewing, and God may have much ado with an affliction that is not ſoon done. The affliction is too ſoon over, that is removed ere the deſign of it be anſwered. None blames the huſbandman, that he ſows not his ſeed, before the ground be fit to receive it.

Laſtly, Believing, that the more we are reſigned to the the Lord we lie the fairer for deliverance, Pſal. x. 17. ‘ Lord, thou haſt heard the deſire of the humble : thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear.’ Man's extremity is God's opportunity. Witneſs Abraham on the mount, the diſciples at ſea, the Iſraelites at the Red ſea. Happy they who leaving the deliverance on the Lord, make it their care to anſwer the calls of providence by the affliction while it is continued.

FIFTHLY, There is a fight of faith with this preſent evil world, 1 John v. 4. ‘ Whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.’ This preſent evil world is a party oppoſite to God in Chriſt, and on the devil's ſide, inſomuch that he that is a friend to it, is an enemy to God. And therefore we muſt either fight againſt it, or be ruined by it. And there are two particulars in the world, that we muſt fight the fight of faith againſt : 1. The things. 2. The men of the world.

1ſt, The things of the world are dangerous enemies, becauſe of the corruption of our hearts. 1 John ii. 15. ‘ Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.’ O the fearful havock of ſouls that is made thereby! By them many ſaints have been caſt down, and many ſinners have been ſlain thereby. The things of the world ſet out three bands againſt us, whom we muſt either overcome by faith, or be ruined by.

1. The white band of the world's ſmiles.
2. The black band of the world's frowns.
3. The mixed band of the world's cares.

Firſt, The things of the world ſet out the white band of the world's ſmiles. And they are ſtained with the blood of many ſouls ; Prov. i. 32. ‘ For the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, and the proſperity of ‘fools ſhall deſtroy them.’ The ſmiling world does with the ſons of men, as the panther is ſaid to do with other beaſts. He draws them after him with the ſweet ſmell of his breath, and then devours them. The white band fight againſt ſouls with two kinds of weapons.

1. Profits of the world. Thus it ſet upon Judas with thirty pieces of ſilver, and ſo ſlew him. The Pſalmiſt obſerves the ſnare in theſe, and therefore gives the watch-word, Pſal. lvii. 10. ‘Truſt not in oppreſſion, and become not vain in robbery: if riches increaſe, ſet not your hearts on them.’ Many a man, who has ſtood his ground againſt the black band of the world's frowns, has been overcome with the white, like the man in the fable with the ſun and the wind.

2. Pleaſures of the world, viz. the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life. Theſe are the ſilken cords, with which ſouls are drawn to deſtruction; wherewith men are bound, as with iron fetters; the breaking of which will coſt a flood of tears. Hence prays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. li. 8. ‘Make me to hear joy and gladneſs; that the bones, which thou haſt broken, may rejoice.’ With many they end in a judicial upgiving to vile affections. Theſe weapons are wielded two ways.

(1.) In expectation. It is the natural deſire of all men, ‘Who will ſhew us any good?’ Pſal. iv. 6. The world ſteps in and makes ſuch an offer as Satan did to Chriſt, Matth. iv. 8, 9. And when once the hope of expectation of its profits and pleaſures is greedily embraced by an inordinate affection, the ſoul is ſet on fire therewith, and the poor creature runs to its ruin on its own feet. And ſays the apoſtle, 1 Tim. vi. 9. ‘They that will be rich, fall into a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in deſtruction and perdition.’

(2.) In fruition or enjoyment, Luke xviii. 24. ‘And when Jeſus ſaw that he was very ſorrowful, he ſaid, How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!’ Such is the corruption of the heart in man, that it is ten to one if the world draw not the heart away from God. Men are apt to love the world inordinately, even when it gives them gall to drink: how hard muſt it be not to be overcome with it, when it courts men, and lays itſelf in their boſom, Deut. xxxii. 15. ‘But Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs, then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation.’

Ye muſt fight againſt the ſmiling world by faith, if ever ye would have the ſmiles of the Lord's countenance.

1ſt, Believing the danger that is in the world's ſmiles, to your ſouls. The danger is in the ſoul's being drawn to ſin againſt God, and ſo in end to be pierced with ſorrows. Agur ſaw this and believed it; and therefore prays thus, Prov. xxx. 8, 9. ‘Give me neither poverty, nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me; leſt I be full, and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord?’—The ſmiling world is apt to betray men into a conceit of themſelves, forgetting God, giving up themſelves to corrupt luſts, and affections, &c. and ſo to work the ruin of the ſoul. Believe this on the teſtimony of God, and ſo ſhall ye watch againſt it.

2*dly*, Believing the vanity and inſufficiency that is in the world, and all the ſmiles thereof, Pſal. cxix. 96. ‘I have ſeen an end of all perfection, but thy commandment is exceeding broad.’ Eccleſ. i. 2. ‘Vanity of vanities, ſaith the preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity.’ What do they avail to one's eternal happineſs? They may quickly leave us, and will certainly leave us at length; we muſt go as we came, naked. They are inſufficient, they cannot give eaſe to the heart of a man; neither can they ſatisfy the ſoul; witneſs the diſappointment the rich man met with, Luke xii. 16.

3*dly*, Believing the tranſcendent profit and pleaſure, that is to be had in the favour of God, communion and fellowſhip with him through Jeſus Chriſt. Believe that ye may have it, yea, that ye ſhall have it, ſeeking it thro' Chriſt; and ye ſhall overcome the ſmiling world. Pſal. iv. 7. ‘Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and wine increaſed.’ Being thus lifted up in your affections to heaven, the earth, and all that is in it, will appear very little in your eyes. It is blindneſs to the things of a better world, that makes the preſent evil world ſo bulky with men.

4*thly*, Believing the ſufficiency of his grace to carry you above them, 2 Cor. xii. 9. ‘My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.’ There is ſtrength in the Mediator for mens overcoming the world, believe the promiſe with application to yourſelves, and ye ſhall be more than conquerors. The promiſe brings ſalvation with it; and the faith of it looſed Zaccheus's heart from the world, Luke xix. 8.

Secondly, The things of the world ſet out the black band of the world's frowns. The world oft times brings up a train of croſſes againſt men, to fright them away from God. Men muſt lay their account with their ilk-days croſs; and ſometimes all goes wrong together with them; as in Job's caſe. Croſſes in worldly things do often much miſchief to the ſoul; they irritate corruptions, diſcompoſe them for duty to God, and lead them aſide into manifold temptations, Prov. xxx. 9.

Some have a fighting life with the world all their days, but, alas! it is not the fight of faith, but a faithleſs fight, that ruins the ſoul. Ye will know it by two things.

1. All their fight is to get ſomething of the world, not to be kept from the evil of it. The world does not proſper with them, as with others; and all their concern is to make a ſhift for throughbearing, which ſwallows up all other concerns with them. So they live as if the curſe of the ſerpent were lying on them, to lick the duſt all their days. The world flies from them; and yet they court it above all things. God croſſes them in it, to bring their hearts off it, yet it is their main purſuit.

2. Their fight with the world takes from them all ſavour of the word of God, and religion. An inſtance of this ye have, Exod. vi. 9. where, when Moſes had ſpoken to the children of Iſrael all the promiſes commanded him of God, mentioned in the preceding verſes, it is ſaid, ‘But they hearkened not unto Moſes, for anguiſh of ſpirit, and for cruel bondage.’ The fight of faith makes the goſpel ſavoury to men; but this carnal fight makes it taſteleſs; it rankles their ſpirits with reſpect to religion, that many think religion is for the wealthier ſort; but as for them, they have another thing ado. And thus the frowning world ruins them for time and eternity.

I would adviſe you to another ſort of fighting with the frowning world. Fight in faith againſt it.

1*ſt*, Believing, that the ordering of your lot is in the hand of a holy wiſe God, who knows beſt what is fit for you, whether proſperous or croſs. The faith of this would make you embrace the world's frowns, as well as proſperity, as Job did, who ſaid, ‘Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked ſhall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.’

2*dly*, Believing that the world's frowns, and ſmiles too, are but empty paſſing ſhews, which will be buried in forgetfulneſs. As the world's ſmiles appear more pleaſant than they are, ſo its frowns appear more terrible than they are really: Eccl. i. 2. Vanity of vanities, ſaith the preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity. The one and the other are like the foam on the water, appearing big, but ſoon paſs away. But look to them with an eye of faith, and ye will ſee they are but empty noiſe, which will quickly be laid. The longeſt term of their continuance is but a few years at moſt. When one comes to the grave, the rich and poor are alike there; the black and white band are both diſbanded there.

3*dly*, Believing, that ye have greater things to be taken up about, than either the world's ſmiles or frowns, Pſal. iv. 6, 7. ‘Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.’ The one cannot make you happy, nor the other miſerable. But the favour of God and his wrath are matters of weight; let it be your care to obtain the one, and eſcape the other. Theſe things are eternal, the other temporal; Slight not the ſubſtance, with concern for the ſhadow: Matth. xvi. 26. ‘For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and loſe his ſoul?

4thly, Believing, that you are unworthy of the leaſt ſmile of common providence, Gen. xxxii. 10. ‘I am ‘not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies, and of all the ‘truth, which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant; for ‘with my ſtaff I paſſed over this Jordan, and now I am ‘become two bands.’ Lam. iii. 22. ‘It is of the Lord's ‘mercies we are not conſumed, becauſe his compaſſions ‘fail not.’ Why do croſſes in the world go ſo deep with men, but becauſe of the want of humiliation? whence is that want, but from unbelief? The humble ſoul fighting with the world will be ſurely be victorious, becauſe however it frowns on him, he takes it kindly out of the hand of the Lord, as not worthy of better.

5thly, Believing, that your ſouls are in hazard by the frowning world, as well as the ſouls of others by the fawning world, Prov. xxx. 8, 9. ‘Give me neither po‘verty, nor riches, feed me with food convenient for ‘me;——leſt I be poor, and ſteal, and take the name of ‘my God in vain.’ The devil holds ſome faſt in worldly adverſity, as well as he does others in proſperity. Some think, that becauſe they are poor in the world, they will ſurely be well in another world. O deceive not yourſelves. As God has no regard to mens riches, he has as little regard to their poverty: but be they poor or rich, if they be not in Chriſt, they will be ruined for ever.

6thly, Believing the great promiſe of the goſpel with application to yourſelves, Heb viii. 10. ‘This is the ‘covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after ‘thoſe days, ſaith the Lord;—I will be to them a God, ‘and they ſhall be unto me a people.’ Hoſ. ii. 19. ‘And ‘I will betrothe thee unto me forever; yea, I will betrothe ‘thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and in judgment, and ‘in loving-kindneſs, and in mercies.’ Your croſſes in the world may be taken by you for an alarm, ſaying, Depart, here is not your reſt. God is ſetting fire to the neſts you build among the things of the world; and holding out to you the great promiſe of the goſpel. O embrace it, and truſt him in it; and thus ſhall ye defeat the frowning world. Believing God to be your God in Chriſt, ye will be eaſy whether the world ſmile or frown.

Laſtly, Believing, that, through the grace of Chriſt, the frowns of the world ſhall be turned to your good: Rom. viii. 28. ‘We know, that all things work together for ‘good, to them that love God, to them that are called ‘according to his purpoſe.’ How often has honey been gotten out of the carcaſe of the lion, and much good within the thorn hedge of afflictions? The croſs has brought forth good fruit in them that have been exerciſed thereby: and God is kind to you, in that he makes the world ſo ſtrange to you, that ye may the more ſeek after acquaintance with him.

Thirdly, The things of the world ſet out the mixed band of the world's cares. There is none will be free of attacks from theſe: even a crown is lined with cares. Yea, we muſt needs care; our daily bread will not drop down into our mouths, nor will our neceſſary buſineſs be managed without thought. But men are in danger by lawful things, and not by unlawful only. And the cares of the world are often ruining unto the ſoul, they are apt to put the man on a rack, to ſtretch out one's mind as on tenter-pins, degenerating into a faithleſs anxiety, to ſwallow up all other concerns, and to render the Lord's word quite unprofitable. Fight in faith againſt them, 1ſt, Believing, that the ſucceſs of your affairs depends on the bleſſing of God on your endeavours, not on your anxious care about them: Pſal. cxxvii. 1. Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain. The vanity of our anxiety may be very plainly read in many experiments: Matth. vi. 27. ‘Which of ‘you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his ſta‘ture?’ In providence's management of the world how often is it ſeen ‘that the race is not to the ſwift, nor the ‘battle to the ſtrong, neither bread to the wiſe, nor rich‘es to men of underſtanding, but time and chance hap‘peneth to them all,’ Eccl. ix. 11.; How often does ſome unforeſeen event render a hopeful project vain? and, on the other hand, ſet right again what ſeemed to be quite marred?

2dly, Believing, that the beſt way to ſecure what is neceſſary for you in this world, is to be mainly taken up about the things of another life, Matth. vi. 33. ‘Seek ye ‘firſt the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, and all ‘theſe things ſhall be added unto you.’ They that are careful how to pleaſe God, God will ſee to them that they be provided. They whoſe main care is for the welfare of their ſouls, may expect, that, the temporal welfare of their bodies ſhall be ſeen to by heaven. This is the ſhorteſt and ſureſt way to proſper.

3dly, Truſting the Lord with all your concerns which require your care, depending on him as the ſovereign manager, and as ſure and ſafe for you, Pſal. xxxvii. 3. ‘Truſt in the Lord, and do good; ſo ſhalt thou live in ‘the land, and verily thou ſhalt be fed.’ And ye ſhould truſt him as to your own conduct, both for direction and proſpering: Prov. iii. 5, 6. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own underſtanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy paths. This implies three things.

(1.) Laying your burden of care over on the Lord himſelf, believing that he will care for you; many an unbelieving lift we take of our own burden, and then complain we are not able to go under it: but Chriſt is appointed the great burden-bearer for ſinners, and they are called to caſt their burdens on him, Pſal. lv. 22. If they will needs take their burdens, and keep them on their ſhoulders, who can help it? But faith's work is to truſt him with all.

(2.) Believing, that he will do the beſt: Pſal. lxxxv. 12. ‘The Lord ſhall give that which is good.’ xxxiv. 10. ‘They that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good.’ He knows what is beſt for us, we know it not: and we owe to him a faith ſo far implicit, as to believe whatever God doth is beſt done; and whatever way he leads us, that it is beſt for us to follow. It is the property of faith, thus to reſign all to the Lord, truſting, that whatſoever is truly beſt for us, he will bring it about.

(3.) Staying yourſelf upon the word of the promiſe, Gen. xxxii. 12. ‘I will ſurely do thee good.’ Thus faith is to be an anchor of the ſoul in doubtful events. While anxious care leaves a perſon nothing to fix on; faith fixeth on the promiſe of God, and renders the ſoul eaſy, come what will.

2dly, The men of the world are dangerous enemies alſo. There is an old enmity, which will not ceaſe to work in them. They are agents for the devil, factors for hell. No man will get to heaven without a ſtruggle with them; for they are oppoſite parties to all that really mind to be there, Pſal. xvii. 12, 14. ‘Deliver my ſoul ‘from the wicked, which is thy ſword: from men which ‘are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, which ‘have their portion in this life, and whoſe belly thou ‘filleſt with thy hide treaſure.’ And our Lord forewarns his diſciples of the world's hatred, John xv. 19. ‘If ye ‘were of the world, the world would love his own: but ‘becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you ‘out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.’ Now, the men of the world manage the battle three ways, viz. (1.) with the tongue, (2.) with their feet, (3.) with their hands; and ye muſt ſtill reſiſt them in faith.

1. The men of the world fight againſt God's children with the tongue. They are the ſeed of the ſerpent; and therefore it is no wonder to ſee them ſpit their venom againſt ſuch as go not their way. Hence we read of their being continually gathered together for war; of their having ſharpened their tongues like a ſerpent; of adders poiſon being under their lips, Pſal. cxl. 2, 3. Iſhmael's mocking Iſaac, is called perſecution. The trial of the Hebrews was the reproaches of ungodly men. See what was formed againſt Jeremiah, Jer. xviii. 18. ‘Come, ſaid ‘they, and let us deviſe devices againſt Jeremiah: for ‘the law ſhall not periſh from the prieſt, nor counſel ‘from the wiſe, nor the word from the prophet: come, ‘and let us ſmite him with the tongue, and let us not ‘give heed to any of his words. See what a ſecret conſultation was formed againſt David, Pſal. lxiv. 2, 3. ‘Hide me from the ſecret counſel of the wicked ; from the inſurrection of the workers of iniquity : who whet their tongues like a ſword, and bend their bows to ſhoot their arrows, even bitter words.’ God’s people are to fight in faith in this caſe, 1ſt, Believing that our God is able to blunt the edge of their ſwords, and the points of their arrows, and will do it ſo far as he ſees meet, Job v. 21. ‘Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue.’ It is in their power to fling dirt upon God’s children ; but it is not in their power to cauſe it ſtick, unleſs the Lord has ſaid it for the trial of his people. God has the hearts of all men in his hands, and his people may confidently truſt him with the preſerving of their reputation while they keep his way.

2dly, Believing that all the dirt a miſchievous world flings on the Lord’s people, the day will come, that God will wipe it off them, and throw it back on them that caſt it : Iſ. li. 1. ‘For the moth ſhall eat them up like a garment, and the worm ſhall eat them like wool: but my righteouſneſs ſhall be for ever, and my ſalvation from generation to generation.’ A lying tongue is but for a moment, and will rebound upon them that uſe ſuch a helliſh weapon. God has ſecured by promiſe the taking away of reproaches from off God’s people, Pſal. xxxvii. 6. ‘And he ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day.’ And ſo, in the faith of the promiſe, they may be very eaſy ; and conſidering the uſe God may have for them for their good, may find ſoul-refreſhment in them, Matth. v. 11. ‘Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſely for my ſake.’ And the apoſtle ſays, 2 Cor. xii. 20. ‘I take pleaſure in reproaches, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt’s ſake.’

2. The men of the world fight againſt God’s children with their feet ; that is, by the example of their unholy lives. And much miſchief they do by that means ; Hence ſays our Lord, Matth. xviii. 7. ‘Wo unto the world becauſe of offences ; for it muſt needs be that offences come : but wo to the man by whom the offence cometh.’ It is hard to bear up againſt the courſe of the world, conſidering the corruption of nature that is in the beſt. By the force of ill examples, many good men have been worſted, and many that had not the root of the matter in them have been ruined, Matth. xxiv. 12. ‘And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold.’ Fight againſt it in faith, 1ſt, Believing, that the way of the world is the way to eternal ruin, Eph. ii. 2. ‘Wherein in time paſt ye walked according to the courſe of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience.’ Are we not told, that the multitude is going in the way to deſtruction ? and that there be very few which are on the way to heaven ? So that whoever mind for heaven, muſt needs be world’s wonders, like Joſhua and his fellows.

2dly, Believing, that, through the grace of the Lord Jeſus, ye ſhall be enabled to ſtand the ſhock of the corrupt example of the world. The eye of faith will diſcern the greater ſtrength to be on the ſide of the wreſtler againſt ill example. 1 Kings vi. 16. ‘Fear not : for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them.’ And ſays the apoſtle, Rom. viii. 26. ‘If God be for us, who can be againſt us ?’ And for us he will be, if we truſt him for our upbearing againſt it. He ſtrengthens the ſpoiled againſt the ſtrong : and be the force of the current never ſo great, they can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth them, Philip. iv. 13.

3. The men of the world fight againſt the children of God with their hands. There is never a wicked man in the world, but, by his natural make, is a perſecutor. And none is fit to travel the road to heaven, but they that are reſolute to hold on, notwithſtanding all the miſchief the world may do them, Luke xiv. 26. ‘If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple.’ Sometimes indeed God binds their hands, that they can do nothing againſt his people ; but the perſecuting nature never leaves them, and according as providence looſeth the cord, ſo will they vent it. But reſiſt in faith, 1ſt, Believing, that it is little they can do, do their worſt. Luke xii. 4, 5. ‘Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that, have no more that they can do. But, fear him, who, after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell : yea, I ſay unto you, Fear him.’ The utmoſt reach of the moſt malicious and powerful perſecutors, is but to the body. And what is the body in compariſon of the ſoul ? The faith of this carried up the martyrs, and armed them with a holy contempt of the impotent rage of their perſecutors.

2dly, Believing that they are ever under the check and controul of a gracious God, engaged on the ſide of thoſe that keep his way, Pſal, lxxvi. 10. ‘Surely the wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, the remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain.’ How ſpitefully did Laban purſue Jacob, and Saul David ? but God put a check on them. Faith will diſcover in this caſe an almighty power for protection, and man to be but a fading worm.

3dly, Believing the eternal reſt that remains for the people of God, 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. ‘Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory ; while we look not at the things which are ſeen, which are temporal ; but at the things which are not ſeen, which are eternal.’ It is but a ſhort time we are to remain among the inhabitants of this world : the firm faith of that would make us very eaſy whether we have their ſmiles or frowns. Our great concern is to fight our way to the better world, and reſolutely to cleave to the Lord, over the belly both of the things and men of this world.

SIXTHLY, There is a fight of faith with ſin : Heb. xii. 4. ‘Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, ſtriving againſt ſin.’ Of all things, there is nothing ſo oppoſite to God as ſin is. The devil brought it into the world at firſt : and fearful havock has it made, deſtroying the moſt part of Adam’s children, wounding and doing miſchief to all. And none can reach heaven, but thoſe who fight it, and overcome it : and there is no fighting againſt it, but in faith. And that ye may know what you have to fight againſt here,

1. There is the captain of this helliſh band ; that is, the ſin of our nature.

2. There is a ſwarm of helliſh luſts, as ſoldiers under the command of the ſin of our nature.

Firſt, There is the captain of this helliſh band ; that is, the ſin of our nature, called the old man. Sin is woven into our very natures ; our nature has got a wrong ſet by Adam’s fall. It is averſe to good, and prone to the wrong way. This corrupt diſpoſition is moſt active, and by its activity fights againſt the ſoul. And it exerts itſelf againſt the ſoul three ways.

1. With its guilt, whereby it binds over the ſoul out of Chriſt to his revenging wrath, and even the believing ſoul to fatherly anger and diſpleaſure, the conſcience feeling this band of ſin on it, is frightened and fired. The man ſees himſelf, by reaſon of the corruption of his nature, an object of God’s indignation, liable to the fearful ſtrokes of his hand : even as a ſerpent is liable to the ſtroke of a man’s hand wherever he meets with it. Now, if ever ye would break theſe bonds of guilt, fight againſt them in faith.

1ſt, Believing, that Jeſus Chriſt has made a complete ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God, for the ſin of our nature, Rom. vi. 6. ‘Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed.’ In reſpect of the ſin of our nature we needed a Saviour ; and it was cleared by him, as well as our actual tranſgreſſions. So that there is a ſufficient remedy provided againſt the guilt of the ſin of our nature, in Jeſus Chriſt ; ſo that no man needs to deſpond in that caſe.

2dly, Believing the promiſe of remiſſion of ſin thro’ the blood of Chriſt : Eph. i. 7. ‘In him we have redemption through his blood ; the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace.’ While the conſcience is fired with guilt, faith muſt diſcern the promiſe of remiſſion through Chriſt, held forth in the goſpel, and faith muſt embrace that promiſe, relying on it as the Lord's own promiſe: and ſo ſhall the guilt be removed, and the conſcience purged: your warrant is, Acts xiii. 38. 'Be it known unto you, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins.'

3dly, Believing and pleading the perfect holineſs of Chriſt's birth and nature, as a public perſon. Thus faith may triumph over the ſin of one's nature, as to the guilt of it. While the law ſays, Thou haſt an unholy nature, and therefore muſt die the death: Yea, may the ſoul ſay, True, my nature is unholy in me; but Chriſt has ſatisfied for that guilt; and I have a holy nature in Chriſt, in him as a public perſon I was born holy, and retain the holineſs of nature: and therefore I muſt not die, but live.

Object. But, alas! I dare not apply Chriſt's perfect holineſs to me, for I fear I have not a right to it. Anſw. There is a twofold right. (1.) To a thing. (2.) In it. What right has a beggar to a penny which a man holds out to him, ſaying, Ha' there is a penny? He certainly has a right to that penny; he may lawfully take it out of that man's hand, and put it in his pocket. Such a right every one of you has to Chriſt's righteouſneſs. It is God's gift held out to you to be received by faith. If the beggar refuſe it, though he had a right to it, he is juſtly deprived of it; and the man may put it in his own pocket again: but if he do take it, then he has a right in it; it is his own in poſſeſſion, and cannot be taken from him again. Go then, and take the gift of righteouſneſs out of Chriſt's hand, verily believing that ye have a right to it.

2. With its motions and activity. It is an active principle, ſtill tending to corrupt the ſoul more, fighting for the throne in the heart, and to cauſe the ſoul obey it, in fulfilling its luſts. And it muſt be fought againſt: it is a reſtleſs enemy, preſent at all times, eſpecially active at ſome times, and particularly when one would do good; it is like a dunghill, ſtill ſending forth its filthy ſtreams. And as it ſtrives to ſtrengthen itſelf, ſo the Chriſtian muſt fight againſt it, to get it mortified, and ye muſt for this cauſe fight in faith againſt it.

1ſt, Believing, that it is your moſt dangerous enemy; for ſo indeed it is. Never did Paul cry out to be delivered from the moſt bloody men that were ſet againſt him, as from indwelling ſin, Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!' It is a domeſtic enemy; an enemy more dangerous than all we have without, whether devils or the preſent evil world. Were it not for it, they would have a cold coal to blow at. But this furniſhes them with notable advantages againſt us.

2dly, Believing Chriſt to be the great ordinance of God for ſanctification, and looking for your ſanctification from him, on the credit of the promiſe, Iſa. xlv. 22. 'Look unto me and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none elſe.' Men have by nature's light been convinced of the neceſſity of ſanctification; ſome have thought one means proper to attain it, and others another. Pagans have thought the ſtudy of moral virtue, proper means for it, the Jews the obſervation of Moſes's law, moral, ceremonial, and judicial. The Papiſts have thought a multitude of uninſtituted ceremonies, faſtings, whippings, &c. all proper to ſanctify the unholy. Legaliſts look on their own faithleſs endeavours, their watchings, &c. as proper means to obtain it. But all in vain.

But God has appointed his own Son to be the great ordinance for ſanctification of the unholy, that the praiſe of our ſanctification may be his own. And he has lodged the fulneſs of the Spirit of holineſs in him, to be partaked of in the way of believing: look how the ſtung Iſraelites were cured, by looking to the brazen ſerpent, believing that by that means they ſhould be healed; ſo is an unholy ſinner made holy, looking unto Jeſus, for ſanctification. Hence the church, believing the promiſe of ſanctification, ſays, Mic. vii. 19. 'He will turn again, he will have compaſſion upon us: he will ſubdue our iniquities: and thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea.'

3dly, Struggling againſt it in the faith of its having got its mortal wound, in the death and reſurrection of Chriſt. No wonder they be ſtill under the power of indwelling ſin, who ſtruggle againſt it, without an eye to the death of Chriſt. But the ſoul eyeing the death of Chriſt as the death of ſin, will be thereby animated to act againſt it. The ſins of all that are Chriſt's were imputed to him, and he having expiated the guilt of them, roſe again free of that guilt: ſo, in virtue of his death and reſurrection, it loſes its power over thoſe that are his. And by the faith of it we become partakers of it.

4thly, Believing that we ſhall get the victory over it through Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. vii. 24, 25. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.' They will fight well who are ſure of the victory; and it is faith's work to believe the victory over ſin, Rom. xvi. 20. 'The God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.' This was included in the firſt promiſe, Gen. iii. 15. 'The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the head of the ſerpent;' which was propoſed to our firſt parents to be by them believed.

3. With its ſticking ſtill cloſe to the ſoul. It cleaves to us, like a ſtain that cannot be got fully waſhed off. It is like the fretting leproſy in the walls of the houſe, not to be quite removed till the houſe be pulled down. Notwithſtanding all the ſtruggles againſt it, it cannot be got to the door till death. Fight in faith againſt it, 1ſt, Making no truce with it, but ever ſeeking its ruin, in the faith of Chriſt's excellency. The eye of faith fixing on the glory of Chriſt has a transforming virtue. 2 Cor. iii. 18. 'We all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.' And thus the heart is ſeparated from ſin, while yet it cleaves to the ſoul. Like the houſe of David and the houſe of Saul: between whom the war continued, till the houſe of Saul was quite ſunk.

2dly, Believing that the victory will be at length full and complete. However it appear to be fixed with bands of iron and braſs, yet the breaking thereof, ſhall come ſuddenly, at an inſtant. As the walls of Jericho fell down on the ſeventh day, that were not moved while the Iſraelites compaſſed them the ſix days: ſo at death theſe walls will fall down, and be razed to the foundation.

Secondly, There is a ſwarm of helliſh luſts as ſoldiers under the command of the ſin of our nature. Theſe are the members of the old man, that war againſt the ſoul. They ſeek to drive the ſoul from God, they puſh on men to eat forbidden fruit, and at length drown the ſoul in deſtruction and perdition, where they get the final victory. Againſt theſe alſo ye muſt fight in faith, reſiſt them, deny them, weaken, mortify, and crucify them.

It is a difficult fight; but faith will help you out in it, as difficult as it is.

1. Their name may be legion, becauſe they are many. All ſin is in the corrupt nature of man; and there is never a temptation in the world, but there is in our nature ſome luſt or other akin to it. Look through the world, and ſee all the abominations which any where appear; ſome are atheiſts, adulterers, &c. But the corrupt affections are in every body's heart naturally, Prov. xxvii. 19. But reſiſt ye, believing, that, through the grace of the Lord Jeſus, the victory is to be got over them all. There is neither ſtrength nor multitude to be feared, where one by faith can oppoſe both, almighty power being engaged on the ſide of the wreſtlers againſt ſin, 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus.' The blood of Chriſt is of infinite value, and faith muſt rely on it.

2. Their allies are the powers of hell. All the ſnares and temptations that are in the world, are allied to ſome luſt of the heart, which anſwers to them as tinder to fire. But ye ſhould reſiſt, believing that greater is he that is in you, than is in that combat. Oppoſe to theſe by faith the divine attributes, his power, wiſdom, &c. the name of the Lord, which is a ſtrong tower, &c.

3. Their lodging is the corrupt heart: thence they iſſtir out againſt us. The heart of man is like a common inn, often ſo thronged with ſtrangers, that there is no room for the maſter. But ye muſt reſiſt them, believing that your helper is as near you as your enemies. O it is a trying conſideration to a gracious ſoul to think, that ſin is mixed with one's very conſtitution. But let faith diſcern the union betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul; let the Chriſtian believe that Chriſt dwells in him by an indiſſolvable union; ſo he may get clear of ſin at length.

4. Their qualities are very bad. They are the brats of Babel, the offspring of hell. And,

1*ſt*, They are greedy and inſatiable luſts. They are like the grave, that never ſays, It is enough. Where they are indulged, they fill the man's hands continually, ſeeking meat for them, to the provoking of God. And the more they are fed, the more they crave; ſo they 'are 'like the troubled ſea, when it cannot reſt, whoſe wa'ters caſt up mire and dirt.'

But ye muſt reſiſt them, if ye mind for heaven. Make no proviſion for them, but ſtarve them, however painful that may be, Rom. xiii. 14. 'Make no proviſion for the 'fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.' This is the way to rid yourſelves of their trouble: for mens luſts are like fire, that will die out if there be no fuel laid to it. And if ye would do this, ye muſt do it.

(1.) Believing that there is fulneſs enough in Chriſt, to ſatisfy the ſoul, to give the heart reſt, that it ſhall need none of thoſe things which nouriſh luſts. The one pearl diſcovered, ſtays the purſuit after the many. Hence faith contracts the deſires of the ſoul into one, which is the better part. O what is the cauſe men are ſo taken up to ſatisfy their luſts with their proper food, but the not believing the fulneſs of Chriſt?

(2.) Embracing that fulneſs of Chriſt for and inſtead of thoſe things your heart luſts after. This is the import of ſelling all and buying the field; the ſoul taking Chriſt for theſe things, as in buying one takes the commodity bought inſtead of all he pays. The ſureſt way to mortify luſts is by faith, whereby the ſoul makes a happy exchange; inſtead of ſuch luſts, embracing Chriſt, from him to draw that ſatisfaction he ſought in the luſt. Thus men deal with their hearts, as men with children, giving them one thing to get another from them.

(3.) Believing, that you ſhall find that ſatisfaction in Chriſt, which ye ſought in your luſts, Matth. xi. 28. 'Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, 'and I will give you reſt.' Iſ. lv. 1. 'Ho, every one 'that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath 'no money, come buy wine and milk without money 'and without price.' And if you believe it not, ye believe not the goſpel, and the leſs ye believe it, the ſurer gripe will your heart hold of its luſts. But the more firmly you believe it, the more will you let go your luſts.

2*dly*, They are hurtful luſts. And they extend their hurt to the tendereſt part of a man, and not only to the wounding, but ruining of it, if the effect thereof be not ſtopped. They extend their hurt not only to the party in whoſe breaſt they are lodged, but to others, Eccleſ. ix. 18. 'One ſinner deſtroyeth much good.' Sometimes one's luſt involves many in guilt; like a fire breaking out in a houſe, burning down the houſes neareſt it. Thus Achan's luſt involved his whole family in guilt, and Adam's luſt ruined the whole world.

Ye muſt beware of them, and of the hurt by them. Do not think ye may entertain them, and not be hurt by them. Reſiſt the beginnings of your luſts, nip them in the bud. The longer they go on, they will be the harder to maſter. If they have got upon you, by all means endeavour to hinder their ſpreading; and ſpeedily quench them, if they are ſpread. Do this in faith,

(1.) Putting yourſelves under the divine protection. by truſting in the ſhadow of the wings of a God in Chriſt. Hence ſaid Boaz to Ruth, chap. ii. 12. 'The Lord re'compenſe thy work, and a full reward be given thee 'of the Lord God of Iſrael, under whoſe wings thou art 'come to truſt.' Faith ſees the hazard the ſoul is in from hurtful luſts, and therefore diſpoſeth the ſoul to put itſelf in the Lord's hand for keeping, as the chickens get in under the wings of the hen.

(2.) Applying the Redeemer's blood for purging away the guilt of luſts. This is the only way to remove the hurt of them in that caſe. The guilt of them caſts the conſcience in a fever; but faith applying the blood of Chriſt, obtains pardon of the guilt, and a cool to the ſick conſcience. The acceſs to this blood is free to all, Zech. xiii. 1. 'In that day, there ſhall be a fountain opened to 'the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, 'for ſin and for uncleanneſs.'

(3.) Truſting to the fulneſs of the Spirit, for breaking of the power of theſe luſts. We are not man enough for the leaſt of theſe powers of hell; therefore we are to go out againſt them in the name of the Lord, and ſo we ſhall do valiantly; for he 'ſtrengtheneth the ſpoiled a'gainſt the ſtrong; ſo that the ſpoiled ſhall come againſt 'the fortreſs,' Amos v. 9. Thus many who have long been a prey to their luſts, receiving the Spirit of life from Jeſus Chriſt, have ſhook them off. And in them has been fulfilled in a ſpiritual ſenſe, Iſ. xiv. 2. 'The people 'ſhall take them, and bring them to their place; and 'the houſe of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſs them in the land of 'the Lord, for ſervants and handmaids: and they ſhall 'take them captives, whoſe captives they were, and they 'ſhall rule over their oppreſſors.' And this in virtue of that, Pſal. lxviii. 18. 'Thou haſt aſcended on high, 'thou haſt led captivity captive,' &c.

3*dly*, They are reſtleſs luſts. They are like the midges in a ſummer-day, ever in motion, working to the annoyance of the ſoul. Temptations are thick in the world, and they never want ſomething to ſtir them up. They are ever on the field of battle, never at peace.

(1.) Warring among themſelves, one againſt another. And the ſoul of man is what they are warring for, which ſhall be governor of it. In this reſpect the poor ſinner's heart is like a town ſituated in the territories of ſeveral ambitious princes, which is toſſed and harraſſed amongſt them, one fighting to turn out another. Thus pride and ambition draw the man one way, covetouſneſs another way; contrary luſts at once fight in him. And there is no peace for the man, but by mortifying them.

(2.) They war againſt the ſoul. All of them are enemies to it, and ſeek its ruin. Though they be contrary one to another, yet they conſpire together for the deſtruction of the ſoul; like Herod and Pontius Pilate againſt Chriſt. The ſoul, in reſpect of its make and conſtitution, is allied to heaven, and therefore is the butt of their rage.

Wherefore if ye mind for heaven, ye muſt lay your account with a continued warfare. Ye muſt never lay by your armour, but ſtand ever in a fighting poſture, Eph. vi. 14. 'Stand therefore, having your loins girt about 'with truth,' &c. As there is no peace to be made betwixt contrary luſts, ye muſt not ſide with any of the parties, but maintain a fight againſt both. Fight in faith,

[1.] Believing, that this war will iſſue in a profound laſting peace. Though the war with your luſts muſt be a laſting one; it is good news, that it will not be everlaſting; but the peace will be ſo. Take courage, O Chriſtian, the laſt ſtroke will be given ere long in this battle, which will be the deciſive ſtroke. The enemies 'ye ſee 'to day, ye ſhall ſee them again no more forever,' Exod. xiv. 13. In heaven ye will get eternal peace and reſt. There the men of war lay by their ſwords, and put on their crowns.

[2.] Believing, that your helper is ever as ready as your enemies. It is a weighty conſideration, that Satan walks about as a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour, and onr enemies within are reſtleſs. But faith wants not a ſolid relief to oppoſe unto this, looking to the promiſe, Pſal. cxxi. 4. 'Behold, he that keepeth Iſrael, 'ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep.' At what time ſoever the enemies attack us, we may have acceſs to our help, and the faith of the promiſe will fetch it in as quickly as by a look, Iſa. xlv. 22. 'Look unto me, and be ye ſav'ed, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there 'is none elſe.'

[3.] Believing, that his grace is ever ſufficient for you. Though the war laſt long, the ſtock of ſtrength cannot be waſted, ſince it is an inexhauſtible treaſure in Chriſt Jeſus, to which one can never come amiſs, if ye fight in your own ſtrength, ye will ſoon find it waſted: but faith's work is to fetch in ſtrength from Chriſt, and it is ſufficient.

Laſtly, They are deceitful luſts. We are apt to be beguiled by them, if we take not good heed. They deceive ſinners, take them captive, and ſlay them. They are the golden cup in Satan's hand, by which he miniſters poiſon to the ſoul. They are deceitful: for,

(1.) They always promiſe what they never perform. Who is the man that is not diſappointed in them, looking for that ſatisfaction he never finds? How was Judas deceived that way?

(2.) They often commend themſelves to men under the maſk of ſome harmleſs thing, or ſome real virtue. Thus, like Satan, they transform themſelves into an angel of light. So many call evil good, and good evil, &c.

(3.) There is a hidden miſchief in them, when they are moſt ſmiling. There is a hook always, which is covered with the bait, James i. 14. 'Every man is tempted, 'when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed.' It is a metaphor taken from fiſhes caught by the bait, and drawn out of the water. But,

Ye muſt not be ignorant of Satan's devices. Be not raſh, but try ere ye truſt. Forbidden fruit may be fair to look at, and the devil's ground may be very ſmooth, and the ſinner ſee no hazard where death is at his elbow. Therefore fight as againſt a deceitful enemy, Eph. vi. 11. And fight in faith,

[1.] Believing the teſtimony of God concerning the heart, that it is 'deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked.' and therefore keeping a watchful eye over it, Prov. xxviii. 14. 'Happy is the man that feareth always: 'but he that hardeneth his heart, ſhall fall into miſchief.' Faith is the ſoul's going out of itſelf to the Lord, and brings off the man from leaning to his own underſtanding. For theſe are the things that betray a man into the hands of deceitful luſts.

[2.] Truſting to the conduct of Chriſt. He is the Captain of ſalvation, the appointed leader of his people in the wilderneſs, and he will teach thoſe who are willing to be taught, and there is no way to get clear of the deceitful luſts, but by looking to the Lord for light to diſcern our way. For he is made wiſdom for us, and by faith in him, the way-faring men, though fools, ſhall not err in the way of holineſs.

LASTLY, There is a fight with death. This is the laſt enemy ye will have to grapple with; 1 Cor. xv. 16. 'The laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed, is death.' There was never any that eſcaped this combat, but Enoch and Elias; as for all others, the encounter with it is appointed. And there is no freeing of any from this battle, many trouble not themſelves to fight with temptation, or with ſin, but live at peace with their enemies; but, they muſt feel the bitterneſs of death. If ever ye would fight it ſo as to overcome, ye muſt fight in faith. Here conſider,

1. How death may attack you; and,
2. In what ſhapes it may be [illegible].

1ſt, How death may attack you. And that,

Firſt, With ſorrow and heavineſs. Death is apt to let in a flood of ſorrows upon poor ſinners: ſo that thoſe who have ſpent their days in mirth, find all ſwallowed up in that flood; and they who have had a life of ſorrows, feel then the flood ſwelling to the brim. And there are two ſluices death opens to let in this flood.

1. The ſeparation of the man from this world, it comes to ſeparate betwixt him and his neareſt relations; to put an end to any portion of his under the ſun, that he ſhall no more have acceſs to his own houſe, bed, or board. This is apt to let in a flood of ſorrow upon the man, and there is no way to hold out againſt it, but one of theſe two,

1ſt, By turning it into the matter of joy: like thoſe 'which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad when they can 'find the grave;' when the man is ſo wearied of the world, that his heart leaps for joy, when God's meſſenger knocks at his door.

2dly, By a Chriſtian reſignation to the will of the Lord, the man being ready calmly to deliver up into the hands of God, all he has here.

Now, if ye would fight death's ſorrows on this head, viz. ſeparation from the world, either of theſe ways; ye muſt do it in faith.

(1.) Believing, that, through the merits of Chriſt, ye ſhall be admitted into a better world, ſet down at a better table, and lie better, even in Abraham's boſom; nothing elſe will work the ſoul into that Chriſtian reſignation, the heart of a man will never be content to give away this world's goods, while it has no comfortable proſpect of better: therefore Chriſtian reſignation at death, will be according to faith's view of things in the other world.

(2.) Truſting the ſame Lord Jeſus with the charge and care of thoſe whom ye are to leave and are concerned for, 1 Pet. v. 7. 'Caſting all your care upon him, for 'he careth for you.' With an eye to this, the Lord has made that promiſe, Jer. xlix. 11. 'Leave thy fatherleſs 'children, I will preſerve them alive; and let thy widows 'truſt in me.' Ungodly men can have no ſuch comfort, as a godly man may have in this way of believing.

2. The ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, the ſoul and body are cloſely knit; but death comes to looſe the ſilver cord that knits them together; like a whirlwind to carry them far aſunder. The ſoul has a ſure proſpect of ſeparate ſtate, which it has no experience of; and the conſideration thereof is apt to fill it with ſorrow, on the account of its foreſeen widowhood.

There is no making head againſt this, but in faith;

1ſt, Believing the ſoul's union with Jeſus Chriſt. Thus the ſoul has full comfort againſt the ſeparation that death makes. Though the man's ſpirit parts with his body, yet the Spirit of God dwells in the ſoul. God would have his people believe this particularly; and for that cauſe he has appointed the ſacraments, ſignifying and ſealing their union with Chriſt.

2dly, Believing the bleſſed reſurrection of the body. It ſtays the ſorrow of friends at their parting, that they look to meet again in peace: and when the ſoul and body are parting, the ſtronger the faith of the joyful reſurrection is, the leſs will the ſorrow be on that head. All that are Chriſt's have good ground for it: John xi. 25. 'I am the 'reſurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, tho' 'he were dead, yet ſhall he live.'

Secondly, Death may attack you with fear and terror. Hence we read of being brought to the king of terrors, Job xviii. 14. And therefore the ſcripture expreſſeth the great conſternation by the terrors of death; as in Pſal. lv. 4. 'The terrors of death are fallen upon me,' Job xxiv. 17. 'For the morning is to them even as the ſhadow of 'death: if one know them, they are in the terrors of 'the ſhadow of death.' Death will fill them with fear, who have been a terror to others in the land of the living. But faith will bear out, where natural courage falls like a dike of ſand before a ſweeping flood. Now, there are three ſources of the terrors of death.

1. Guilt lying on the ſoul, 1 Cor. xv. 56. 'The ſting 'of death is ſin.' By the guilt of ſin the ſinner is bound over to death, that is the ſting wherewith it pierces men. The guilt of ſin binds over the ſinner to death in its full extent; the moderated guilt of it binds over the ſinner to unſtinged death. When death comes up, it takes the man priſoner as a guilty man; and ſo fills him with terror. Here muſt be a cloſe fight of faith to ſtop this ſource of fear and terror.

1ſt, Over the belly of all your fears, ſtretching out the hand of faith to Chriſt, and ſo transferring all your guilt on him. Ye muſt truſt to the obedience and death of Chriſt, for the removal of your guilt; believing, that for his ſake all your ſins ſhall be pardoned. And for the warrant of your ſo truſting, ye muſt diſcern the pardon offered to you through Chriſt in the goſpel; and ſo, amidſt all your doubts and fears, anchor your ſouls on the faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe. Thus ye ſhall pull out death's ſting, obtaining the removal of guilt by faith in the blood of Chriſt.

2dly, Believing and applying to yourſelves Chriſt's full anſwering of the demands of the law, whereby the law is diſarmed of its curſe, and the bond of it as a covenant is looſed from off you. Death's ſtrength lies in guilt: take away guilt off the ſoul, death is like Samſon without his hair. The ſtrength of guilt lies in the law as a covenant; remove the bond of the law from off the man, and the man's guilt is like the cords the Philiſtines bound Samſon with. Let faith apply to the ſoul Chriſt's obedience and death, and his fully anſwering the demands of the law; and then the law can have no more effect on you, than a ſubſcribed bond paid and diſcharged, and rent in pieces, can have on you.

2. The unſeen unknown world, therefore called the land of darkneſs, Job x 21. One is apt to be ſeized with fear, when they are to be carried into a place they do not know. Death comes to carry us to another world, which we never ſaw, and that makes it terrible. It is the world of ſpirits: the bleſſed ſpirits dwelling in the upper regions, the damned ſpirits in the lower. We are ſo unacquainted with the inhabitants of that world, that the ſight of a ſpirit, good or bad, would be enough to fright us while here: what wonder then that death be terrible, coming to carry us where there are none but ſpirits? Here is need for faith, to bear up againſt the fear riſing from thence. We muſt then ſtay our hearts by faith, 1ſt, Firmly believing the ſcripture-account of the unſeen world. Though we have never ſeen it, yet the map of it has been laid before us in the Bible: and there we have deſcribed both the upper and lower part of it. And in that map, drawn by inſpired pens, the lower part of that world is not more dreadful, than the upper part is pleaſant. The faith of heaven is ſtaying to the heart in ſome meaſure.

2dly, Firmly believing the ſcripture account of the way to heaven; that Chriſt is the way to it, and that by faith we walk in him to it. If we believe not this, our hearts have nothing to ſtay themſelves on, but are left at an uncertainty, in our encounter with death. Therefore labour to ſtrengthen your faith of this, that it may not be yea and nay, but yea with you, that 'he that believeth ſhall be ſaved.'

3dly, Believing in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for your ſafe paſſage to the upper part of the unſeen world, committing your ſoul to him, as the captain of ſalvation appointed of God to bring many ſons to glory. Take hold of him by his word of promiſe, and labour to gripe ſome particular promiſe for that end, as Iſa. xliii. 2. 'When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee: when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt; neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee.' Iſ. xxxv. 10. 'And the ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return and come to Zion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy upon their heads: they ſhall obtain joy and gladneſs, and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away.'

4thly, Believing that your Lord Chriſt is Lord of the unſeen world, and that it is wholly under his dominion. It is in his hand that the diſpoſing of ſouls to any part of that world is. Neither is he to fight with the prince of darkneſs, on that ſide, about any ſoul. When one comes there, the devil cannot touch him, till he has given him up to him as an executioner. And he has ſaid it, that none that believe in him ſhall be damned, Mark xvi. 16.

5thly, Believing, that as ſoon as your ſoul leaves your body, God will receive it into his own hand, Pſal. xxiii. 4. 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me, thy rod and thy ſtaff they comfort me.' It ſhall be conducted by angels into Abraham's boſom. Believe, that the ſame God who brought thee out of the womb, when thou waſt a naked and helpleſs infant, and by his providence preſerved thee, will take the ſame care of thee, when entering into the unſeen world. This is the comfort of faith in death; Pſal xxii. 9, 10. 'But thou art he that took me out of the womb; thou didſt make me hope, when I was upon my mother's breaſts. I was caſt upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.'

Laſtly, That thy God will fit thee for the place, however unfit thou art for it now: he will do it in a moment, as appears from 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. 'Behold, I ſhew you a myſtery; We ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,' &c. Believe that he will fit thee, not only for the ſight of the ſpirits there before thee, but for communion with him. And thou mayeſt confirm thy faith of this, by the experience thou haſt had (1.) of his fitting thee for communion with the inhabitants of this world, though thou cameſt into it an infant, knowing no body there, no not the mother that bare thee; and (2.) of his fitting thee for communion with himſelf, though thou waſt by nature dead in ſin.

3. The judgment. The appearing before a tribunal is an awful thing. When a guilty creature is lying on a death-bed, and conſiders that in a little he is to be carried before his Judge in another world, to give account of his deeds done in the body, and to receive his ſentence for eternity, in well or wo; no wonder fear and terror ſeize him. There is no fighting againſt this but by faith, 1ſt, Receiving and embracing the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. So in Rev. xvii. 17. the offer of Chriſt is made, after the warning given of Chriſt's coming to judgment: for this only is the way how a ſinner may ſtand before him. While a ſinner breathes in the world, he is in the way: and that is the time to agree with the adverſary. Chriſt and all his ſalvation is offered: and it is the work of faith to receive him, held forth in the goſpel-promiſe.

For this cauſe it is neceſſary to judge ourſelves, and condemn ourſelves; to call over all our bypaſt life, with the ſin of our nature: and renouncing all confidence in ourſelves, to fly to a crucified Chriſt, upon the ground of God's faithfulneſs in the promiſe: John iii. 16. 'For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.'

2dly, Believing, that the ſame Jeſus who is offered in the goſpel, is the Judge whom you are ſhortly to appear before, John v. 22. 'For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.' This is a fit means to abate the terror of a judgment ſeat to a believer. For thus the ſoul may ſee, that the very ſame perſon who is the redeemer, is the judge. And thus a fountain of conſolation is opened againſt the terrors of death ariſing from the judgment.

3dly, Believing that the judgment will not proceed upon you according to the law of works, but according to the law of faith. The law of works adjudgeth every one that ſins to die; and unbelievers ſhall be judged by it. The covenant of grace adjudgeth every ſoul united to Chriſt to live eternally, for the ſake of Chriſt's obedience and death imputed to him.

Laſtly, Believing that Chriſt's blood is a perfect covert, within which no drop of wrath can fall; and that faith's plea will never be rejected, for God's faithfulneſs is impawned for it. Let the believer then be comforted againſt the terror of death from this quarter.

Thirdly, With deſpondency. This is the moſt fearful weapon wherewith death attacks a man: when it goes about to make his heart ſink within him, and fill him with fear of eternal death. This may be the caſe of thoſe whom death ſeizing after a life ſpent in profanity and wickedneſs, their ſins ſtare them in the face, and are apt to fill them with deſpair. Here is need of faith in a ſpecial manner.

1ſt, Believing the efficacy of Chriſt's blood. The ſoul would behold that blood as the blood of the Son of God, and ſo of infinite efficacy to do away guilt; his Spirit as of infinite efficacy, to wipe away the deepeſt ſtains of ſins as others, 1 Cor. vi. 11. as a water-flood, ſweeping away whole dung hills, as well as mole hills.

2dly, Believing, that ye are ſtill within the compaſs of the goſpel offer. Yea, it is directed to you in particular, Jer. iii. 1. 'Though thou haſt played the harlot with many lovers, yet return again to me, ſaith the Lord.' God has made no exception of ſinners of any ſize, tho' ordinarily a profane life has a good end; they that live graceleſsly, for the moſt part die hardened; yet the caſe of the penitent thief on the croſs, ſhews a poſſibility of its being otherwiſe.

Laſtly, Believing the promiſe of the goſpel, over the belly of all objections. Though you are in a boiſterous ſea, where one wave comes after another ; yet quit not your gripe, but hope againſt hope as Abraham did ; for it will have a good iſſue, as in the woman of Canaan.

2dly, Conſider in what ſhapes death may attack us. There is one way of coming into the world, but there are many ways of going out of it. Which of them may be ours, we know not : wherefore it concerns us to be ready for death, in whatever ſhape it come upon us. I will take notice of theſe four.

1. A violent death by the hands of men. That is the heavieſt death, as in the caſe of malefactors, by the hand of public juſtice ; and men falling ſacrifices to their rage in private quarrels. And I would adviſe you to live by faith, that ye may be kept from ſuch a death. But even in a good cauſe men may be brought to it. And in that ſhape, death muſt be fought, 1ſt, Believing, that was the kind of death Chriſt died, and his own may ſafely venture on it for his ſake. The ſaints of the higheſt claſs have died ſo, and our Lord will have all his to lay their account with it ; Luke xiv. 26. 'If any man hate not his own life, he cannot be my 'diſciple ;' though he does not call them all to it. But many who have been called to it, have rejoiced in it.

2dly, Believing that great truth, Matth. xvi. 25. 'Whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it ; and whoſoever 'will loſe his life for my ſake ſhall find it.' When one's life comes in competition with the cauſe of Chriſt, they will ſometimes make ſhipwreck of the faith ; whereas they to whom Chriſt's honour is more dear than their own lives, eternal glory will make up their loſs.

2. A painful death. Death in any ſhape can hardly want pain : but it is more painful to ſome than to others. What ſtruggles and wreſtlings have ſome before their ſouls leave their bodies ! What meaſure of theſe pains is allotted to us, we do not know ; but every one will at length feel his own part of them.

Our buſineſs is to bear them Chriſtianly and patiently ; and that we will never do to purpoſe, but by faith.

1ſt, Cleaving to Chriſt in them by faith. Faith's view of the eternal reſt in heaven, is the beſt cordial in the pains of death. When the ſoul believes that the laſt pain is coming on, after which ſorrow and ſighing ſhall for ever fly away, it will make him bear the ſharpeſt pains of death Chriſtianly and patiently.

2dly, Believing that the body of ſin and death which thou haſt had many a battle with in thy life, is by that means to be put to the door. Death came in by ſin, and ſin muſt go out by death. Every pain looſeth a pin of the tabernacle ; and according as death makes its progreſs in the believer's body, ſin is the nearer to a removal out of his ſoul. A Chriſtian will abide ſore thruſts patiently in the faith of this their thruſting out his worſt enemy.

3dly, By the eye of faith diſcerning death unſtinged, by the death of Chriſt. Hoſ. xiii. 14. 'I will ranſom 'them from the power of the grave : I will redeem 'them from death : O death, I will be thy plagues : O 'grave, I will be thy deſtruction :' and therefore a dying ſaint ſhould believingly ſing, 'O death, where is thy 'ſting ? O grave, where is thy victory ?' That whereby the believer's dying body is pained, is not death's ſting ; he may therefore bear it the better. Death's ſting ſtings the ſoul and conſcience. Theſe pains are but as a bee's ſting in compariſon of that.

3. A longſome or lingering death. Death makes quick work with ſome, but with others it is ſpun out to a great length ; whereby they have many deaths in one. This is a great trial, and therefore we ſhould be prepared for it, and lay up timely for it. We will never manage it well but by faith.

1ſt, Believing always that it is coming ; but at what hour, we know not. The faith of this will make us keep up our watch. They may watch at firſt, who may let it down while the bridegroom delays his coming ; as the fooliſh virgins did. But the faith of this will put us on Job's reſolution, Job xiv. 14. 'All the days of my ap'pointed time will I wait till my change come.'

2dly, Believing that therein the Lord has you on your trials. And if God opens to any of us a ſcene of trial of more variety and greater length than that of others, we ſhould behave well in the trial laid to our hand.

3dly, By the eye of faith diſcerning the eternal weight of glory, on the other ſide of the trial ; and if we weigh the one by the other, the moſt longſome ſtruggle with death will appear both light and momentary, 2 Cor. iv. 17. 'For our light affliction which is but for a mo'ment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal 'weight of glory,' &c.

4. Laſtly, A ſudden death. Death ſometimes makes a wide ſtep, ſo that it is upon a man ere he perceives it coming. It may be our lot ; for it is common to good and bad. Good Eli died ſo, as well as Ananias and Sapphira. It concerns us to be prepared for it : which we can never be but by believing. And,

1ſt, Securing ourſelves within the true ark, by believing in Jeſus Chriſt. Then come death when it will, we are ready : it will not looſe the marriage knot betwixt Chriſt and our ſouls. If then it come ſuddenly upon us, it will waft us more ſpeedily into Immanuel's land.

2dly, Reſolutely renewing the actings of faith on Chriſt, at death's ſudden approach. What a man has done before, he may do again ; and a believer may renew his acting of faith, upon death's ſhort warning. If death be ſudden, the act of faith may be as ſudden : and therefore is compared to a look.

And thus I have gone through the Chriſtian warfare, even to the laſt battle. May the Lord thus teach our hands to war, and our fingers to fight.

The EVERLASTING ESPOUSALS.

Being a Sermon preached at the adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, Auguſt 1714.

Hos. ii. 19.

And I will betrothe thee unto me for ever.

THIS ſolemn ordinance is the feaſt of the eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and believers, as alſo the ſeal thereof ; wherefore it is neceſſary the gueſts be ſuch as are eſpouſed to Chriſt, otherwiſe the ſeal is but profaned. The text ſhews, that all is ready on Chriſt's part ; there is nothing to hinder the match, if ſinners be willing. Our eyes do ſee this day, that even the ſeal of the covenant, the holy ſacrament, is ready for us ; and thus we have an occaſion to advance our eternal intereſt. There is ſuch an affinity betwixt marriage and death, that every marriage contract among men runs in theſe terms, "Till "God ſhall ſeparate us by death :" ſo that the dying day muſt needs ſtare the parties in the face on their marriage day. But, behold here is a marriage contract plainly excluding that clauſe, I will betrothe thee unto me for ever.

I have already explained theſe words ; but I ſhall put you in remembrance of the nature of betrothing or eſpouſing, as it was uſed among the Jews, ſeeing it gives light into the text. Betrothing or eſpouſing was the bridegroom's taking the bride into a marriage covenant

It was done publickly before witneſſes, under a canopy or tent ſet up for that purpoſe; and hereunto it is thought the Pſalmiſt alludes, Pſal. xix. 4, 5. 'In them hath he 'ſet a tabernacle for the ſun: which is as a bridegroom 'coming out of his chamber.' Some competent time intervened betwixt the eſpouſals and the ſolemnizing and conſummating of the marriage. Nevertheleſs, by the eſpouſals they were truly huſband and wife, as appears from Matth. i. 18, 19, 20. where, while Mary was yet but eſpouſed to Joſeph, he is called her huſband, and ſhe his wife: and therefore, if a betrothed virgin was defiled in the city, both the man and woman were to be ſtoned to death: 'the damſel becauſe ſhe cried not, being in the 'city,' (and therefore held conſenting,) 'and the man 'becauſe he hath humbled his neighbour's wife,' Deut. xxii. 23. So they were puniſhed as adulterers.

Thus you ſee the covenant God propoſeth is a marriage-covenant; that our Maker may be our Huſband. However men may think it unbecoming the gravity of the matter, to ſpeak of the great tranſaction betwixt a Saviour and loſt ſinners, under the notion of a marriage; it is ſufficient to us, that the infinitely wiſe God has not thought it unbecoming, but ſees it to be a condeſcenſion neceſſary for our weakneſs. And it muſt needs be dangerous to mock at that manner of ſpeaking the Lord's word warrants; I will betrothe thee unto me, ſays the text.

The parties in this marriage covenant, are Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, and the captive daughter of Zion, loſt ſinners. The Father hath made this marriage for his Son, Matth. xxii. 2. And the apoſtle tells us, it is Chriſt whom ſinners are eſpouſed to; I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, that I may preſent you as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 2. It is the glorious Bridegroom that propoſeth the marriage-treaty; I will betrothe thee. It is the peculiar quality of this marriage-covenant, that it is for ever. The Lord brought Iſrael into a viſible church-ſtate by the Sinai covenant; but that covenant did not laſt: here he promiſeth to bring them back by the new covenant, from mount Zion; and that this covenant ſhall be perpetual. But, as theſe words look to the ſpiritual Iſrael, the elect ones both of Jews and Gentiles, the covenant is declared to be everlaſting, not confined within the narrow boundaries of time, but reaching forward through all the ages of eternity.

DOCT. I. The way laid down in the wiſdom of God, and purſued in the goſpel, for reinſtating loſt ſinners in the favour of God, is the eſpouſing of them to Jeſus Chriſt.

I have already ſpoke to this doctrine at large, and therein explained the nature of a ſinner's eſpouſals to Jeſus Chriſt in ſeveral particulars. There are two points yet remaining, which I ſhall propoſe in a ſecond doctrine.

DOCT. II. As ſinners may be eſpouſed to Chriſt, ſo whomſoever he eſpouſeth to himſelf, he eſpouſeth for ever, never to part with them.

In handling of this doctrine,

I. I ſhall ſhew, that ſinners may be eſpouſed to Chriſt.

II. I ſhall conſider the perpetuity and everlaſtingneſs of this marriage-covenant; and then apply it.

But, before I enter on theſe things, it will be neceſſary to reſume ſome particulars touching the nature of the eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and ſinners: to give you a view thereof in few words.

Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt comes, by his meſſengers, into the bride's mother's houſe (the publick ordinances,) and courts her conſent: but words will never prevail in that caſe; he comes forward, by his Spirit into the inner chamber of her heart, and there propoſeth the marriage-treaty, and brings it to a happy iſſue. We may take up this in three things; (1.) Chriſt, by his Spirit, enters the inner room of the heart, with the fiery law going before him as his harbinger; and ſo terrible is the ſight, that the ſinner begins exceedingly to fear and quake; but yet has no kindneſs for the Bridegroom, no heart to the match. So a tribunal is erected within his own breaſt; he is accuſed, and condemned as a breaker of the law, and then beholds his need of a Saviour. (2.) God reveals his Son in the ſinner, by the light of the goſpel ſhining into his heart. The royal Bridegroom is manifeſted unto the ſoul in his glorious ſuitableneſs to its caſe; and withal, in his willingneſs to betrothe the wretched creature to himſelf. (3.) The Spirit of Chriſt powerfully touches the heart of the ſinner, who is thereby made willing to join hands with him in the marriage-covenant. Thus the treaty of eſpouſals comes to be concluded, which we may ſum up in theſe three particulars.

Firſt, The parties are pleaſed with one another; Chriſt is pleaſed with the ſinner, and the ſinner with him. And then the language of the bride's heart is, 1ſt, I am pleaſed with his perſon. I have been long ſeeking a match for my ſoul, a reſt to this reſtleſs heart; but, whatever I caſt mine eyes upon, I ſtill perceived ſomething about it that was ſhocking, ſomething it lacked, which I could not want: but here is a covering of mine eyes; he is altogether lovely. 2dly, I am pleaſed with all his offices. There is a glorious ſuitableneſs in each of them to my caſe. I am weak, fooliſh, and ignorant; it is good he is a Prophet. I am laden with guilt, it is good he is a Prieſt: the ſight of his precious blood revives my fainting ſoul. My luſts are ſtrong, it is good he is a King mighty in battle. 3dly, I am pleaſed with the marriage-covenant; it is well drawn; there is nothing to be added to it, nothing to be altered in it. 4thly, I am pleaſed with the marriage duties; the laws of the royal Bridegroom. Laſtly, I am pleaſed with the croſs, content to cleave to him for better and worſe, Luke xiv. 26.

Secondly, As Chriſt left his Father's houſe for her, ſhe gives up with her own people and her father's houſe for him. She renounceth the firſt huſband, namely, the law, as a covenant of works, never to look for her living by it, any more, Rom. vii. 4. She renounceth all her luſts and idols, and ſets a particular mark of diſgrace on the beloved luſt ſhe had a particular fondneſs for.

Laſtly, The glorious Bridegroom's conſent to be her head and huſband ſhe finds in the word, which the Spirit applies to her, and ſhe by faith applies to herſelf. So Chriſt gives himſelf to her, ſhe receives him, and gives herſelf to him, and from that bleſſed moment ſhe may ſay, 'My beloved is mine, and I am his,' Cant. ii. 16.

Thus ſhe is united to Chriſt, joined unto the Lord, and made one ſpirit with him. And from this union reſults a communion betwixt the parties, agreeable to the nature of the ſpiritual marriage.

Now, having given this ſhort account of the nature of the eſpouſals,

I. I ſhall evince, that ſinners may be eſpouſed to the Son of God. Behold, we bring you glad tidings of great joy; if ye be willing to be eſpouſed to Chriſt. To clear this, conſider theſe following particulars, which may be motives to ſtir you up to accept of Chriſt in the marriage covenant.

Firſt, This match was from eternity projected and concluded, in the cabinet-council of the Trinity, Jer. xxxi. 3. 'I have loved thee with an everlaſting love: therefore 'with loving-kindneſs have I drawn thee.' God, from eternity foreſeeing that all mankind would be ruined by the fall of Adam, ſet on foot a project for recovering loſt ſinners, and ſecuring them when recovered. Man being joined to God at firſt in a ſimple covenant of friendſhip, that covenant was found too ſlender a bond for ſuch an unſtable creature: wherefore a marriage-covenant is deviſed; for that will ſeparate betwixt friends, under the ſtricteſt bonds of friendſhip, which cannot ſeparate betwixt huſband and wife. Now, the King's friend turning to be his enemy by the breach of the firſt covenant; to bring the criminal out of priſon to court again, and reſtore her to favour, it is concluded, that ſhe be eſpouſed to the King's Son, and ſo united to him, as there ſhould not be ſuch a breach betwixt God and the ſinner again.

Secondly, The Bridegroom and all his relations are well pleaſed with the match. We have his own mind, 'I 'will betrothe thee unto me for ever.' But will he indeed betrothe me? may the ſinner ſay. 'Yea, I will be'trothe thee,' ſaith our Lord in the following words, twice in one verſe. Why truly, it is hard for ſenſible ſinners to believe it. If ye would know how it agrees with his Father's mind, Iſaiah will tell you, 'The Lord is 'well pleaſed for his righteouſneſs ſake,' Iſa. xlii. 21. Yea, he ſolicits for him, Matth. xvii. 5. 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; hear ye him.' It is very agreeable to the mind of his Spirit; 'All things are ready; come unto the marriage,' Matth. xxii. 4. The angels, when firſt the Bridegroom came in perſon into the bride's country, ſung to his arrival, 'Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace, good-will towards men,' Luke ii. 13, 14. Yea, there is a full ſatisfaction with it through all the Bridegroom's country: 'Joy ſhall be in heaven over one ſinner that repenteth.'

I might here tell you, that the mighty ſtir made about this match in the bride's country, to hinder it, is a plain evidence of the reality of it. When the royal Bridegroom was going forth to purſue his deſign of love to loſt ſinners, their father, the devil, addreſſed him, and offered him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, if he would give over the ſuit. When that did not take, he aſſaulted and murdered him, by his helliſh agents, that the match might be marred; but Jeſus having overcome death, ſat down at the right hand of the Father, ſo he can reach him no more; he turns his rage againſt the bride, and employs his power to the utmoſt againſt her to ſtop it. No ſooner does ſhe begin to lay to heart the offered eſpouſals, than ſhe finds her own people and her father's houſe ſet againſt it, and muſt lay her account with vehement toſſing ſhe was not acquainted with before. Her father, the devil, miſrepreſents Chriſt, as a huſband ſhe cannot have a comfortable life with: if that prevail not to make her lay aſide the thoughts of it, he rages and threatens: if ſhe will proceed in it, he ſhall cauſe her repent that ever ſhe entertained the motion, and bring her back again from her new huſband, to her great confuſion; and that therefore it is better for her to draw back in time, and take ſecond thoughts of the offers made her by other hands. Her friends, even the world that lieth in wickedneſs, uſe all methods to diſcourage her: they cry out, ſhe will ſtain the reputation of their family, and diſgrace them all: and, be ſure, they will make her the fool of the company at leaſt, if their hands be bound that they cannot imbrue them in her blood. And, to crown the difficulty, the hungry luſts ſhe was wont to feed, and in a ſpecial manner, the beloved luſt, hang about her weeping, becauſe they muſt be ſtarved, if the match go on. All this evidences that ſinners may be eſpouſed to Chriſt.

Thirdly, The lawful impediments of this match are all removed, at the Bridegroom's expences. When the purpoſe of this match was declared, there ſtood up to object againſt it, parties concerned, whoſe mouths could not be ſtopped with fair words. Juſtice ſays, The bride is my debtor, and, foraſmuch as ſhe hath not to pay, ſhe muſt be ſold into the hand of vengeance, to ſatisfy the debt. She is my criminal, ſaith the law: ſentence of death is paſſed on her, Gal. iii. 10; and whitherſoever one may go to pick out a ſpouſe to himſelf, he muſt not go into a priſon, and bring forth a condemned woman to be eſpouſed to him; for though marriage break term of ſervice, it muſt not break law: therefore there muſt be an execution-day before a marriage-day. She is my lawful priſoner, ſays the devil, and I will not give her up; 'Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?' Iſa. xlix. 24. Theſe were lawful impediments, which would have put an effectual ſtop to the marriage betwixt Chriſt and ſinners; but his heart was intent upon it, and therefore he ſet himſelf to remove them out of the way. Accordingly, he became ſurety to juſtice for her debt, and paid it to the laſt farthing: and now that the ranſom is paid, the jailor muſt needs let his priſoner go.

Fourthly, The marriage contract is drawn up and ſigned by the Bridegroom, bearing his conſent to match with the captive daughter of Zion: ye have it in our text, and the words following, 'I will betroth thee unto me for ever, yea, I will betrothe thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and in judgment, and in loving kindneſs, and in mercies. I will even betrothe thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and thou ſhalt know the Lord.' This is his word which he hath ſealed with his precious blood. And he hath ſent it to you, that ye may conſent to it, and ſo the match is made betwixt Chriſt and you.

Queſt. "But why is this marriage contract drawn up "before the bride's conſent be obtained, yea, and with"out conſulting her at all?" Anſw. We have no ground to complain of this: we have nothing to contract on our part. We have nothing to bring with us, for all our father's houſe go in rags, Rev. iii. 17. Nay, we are worſe than nothing; our father Adam left us with a burden of debt, yea and a burden of the curſe beſides. And well may we increaſe, we can never pay one farthing of the old or new accounts. But our Lord ſeeks no portion with us, he is willing to betrothe us to himſelf, Iſa. lv. 1. 'Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money.' Nay, he will have nothing with us, nor have we any thing worth his taking. And if we do not come to Chriſt content to receive all freely, we may fear we meet with Simon's entertainment, 'Thy money periſh with thee.' Acts viii. 20. Were a prince to marry a beggar's daughter, and ſhe ſhould preſent herſelf to the marriage in her beggarly attire, patched up after the beſt faſhion of her father's houſe; would he not ſay, Take her away, and ſtrip her of theſe garments, ſhe ſhall bring none of them to me: they would be a ſtain to my honour! clothe her with change of raiment on my own expence! The application is eaſy: we have nothing to commend us to Chriſt, and if we pretend to any thing of that kind, we diſhonour the Royal bridegroom. There is no reaſon then we ſhould have any thing ado in the marriage contract, but to bleſs God that it is brought to our hands, and ſign it with our whole heart.

Beſides, had our advice been taken to the framing of it, we ſee ſo little into our true intereſt, we would certainly have marred it, inſerted ſome clauſe that would at length have ruined us. Finally, It is one of the articles of the covenant, that Chriſt ſhall gain the ſinner's conſent, John vi. 37. 'All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me.' And ſo ſaith our text, 'I will betroth thee unto me.'

It may be, ſome are ſaying in their hearts, "O that "I knew my name were in that marriage-contract, how "joyfully would I then ſign it! but I fear it is not to be "found there." I anſwer to this, conſider there are two copies of it, the one ſealed, and the other opened. 1. There is a ſealed copy laid up in heaven, under the cuſtody of the Bridegroom and his Father: in this are to be found the names of all that are, or ſhall be, eſpouſed to Chriſt; and behold the ſeal thereof, 2 Tim. ii. 19. 'The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them are his.' 2 There is an open copy thereof, let down to earth, and lodged in the bride's hand: this ye have in the Bible, the book of the covenant. It bears not the names of thoſe that are to be eſpouſed to Chriſt, but runs in that form, "We underſubſcribers," &c. Now, the Royal Bridegroom has ſigned this, and it is incumbent on you to ſign it likewiſe, conſenting to take Chriſt, offered to you in the goſpel; Iſa. xliv. 5. 'One ſhall ſay, I am the Lord's: and another ſhall call himſelf by the name of Jacob: and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand unto the Lord.' Now, upon this, I offer theſe two things.

1ſt, A view of the ſealed copy is the peculiar privilege of thoſe that are eſpouſed to Chriſt, by ſubſcribing to the open copy: 'The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him: and he will ſhew them his covenant,' Pſal. xxv. 14. And to require a ſight of that which is laid up in heaven, before ye have complied with the deſign of that which is lodged in your own hands, is to endeavour to overturn the order and method of grace. But, 'Shall the earth be forſaken for thee? and ſhall the rock be removed out of his place?' Job xviii. 4. Thoſe that are eſpouſed to Chriſt, though they ſhall get a full view of it in heaven; yet it is but a ſlender view they get of it now: at beſt, the Lord opens it a little to the believer, ſo as he can ſee to read his own name in it, but cannot ſee the name of his wife or child therein, though their names be really in it. And it may be, ſome of the ſaints never ſee their own names in it, till they come to glory, being ‘ through fear of death, all their life time ſubject ‘ to bondage.’

2dly, Though your name be not in the open copy, yet it is indorſed to you, and every one of you; therefore ye have a warrant to ſign it for yourſelves. Wilt thou anſwer to the name of thirſty ſinner? Then read your name, and ſee how it is directed to you, Iſa. lv. 1. ‘ Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters.’ Wilt thou anſwer to the name of willing ſinner? Then it is directed to you, Rev. xxii. 17. ‘ Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.’ Art thou called heavy-laden ſinner? Ariſe then, the maſter calleth thee, Matth. xi. 28. ‘ Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.’ Are ye a loſt ſinner? ‘ The Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt,’ Luke xix. 10. Nay, art thou the chief of ſinners? Even to thee is the word of this ſalvation ſent; ‘ Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners, of whom I am chief,’ 1 Tim. i. 15. But, whatſoever artifice ye may uſe to diſown theſe, or any of theſe to be your name; ſurely ye are men, ſons of men, therefore it is directed to you, and every one of you: ‘ Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men,’ Prov. viii. 4. But to proceed,

Fifthly, The proxies for the Bridegroom are ſent forth to make ſuit for ſinners to be eſpouſed to him; ‘ Now then we are ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us,’ 2 Cor. v. 20. And ſurely this muſt be glad tidings to thoſe who are willing to be eſpouſed to our Lord. We are impowered to treat with you, in his name, for this bleſſed match; to declare unto you that he is willing to be yours; and we call unto you, according to the tenor of our commiſſion, Matth. xxii. 4. ‘ All things are ready; come unto the marriage.’ Deſpiſe not our call; for he is great who has ſaid, ‘ He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me,’ Luke x. 16. And, by the refuſal of his word in our mouths, ye run the riſk of eternal ruin, Mark xvi. 16. ‘ He that believeth not ſhall be damned.’

Sixthly, The Bridegroom has already put on his marriage robes: the Son of God hath clothed himſelf with the robes of humanity, that he might be a ſuitable match for the children of men. ‘ Foraſmuch then as the children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame.’ Heb. ii. 14. Such was the diſtance betwixt God and his guilty creatures, that the ſinner could never have joined hands, but with an incarnate God. The bride could never have been able to look on the glorious Bridegroom, in his divine glory and majeſty, without being confounded at the ſight: therefore was his wedding garment taken off on earth, wherewith he hath covered himſelf in view of the marriage. Behold! it is a dyed garment, and of the right colour for a marriage robe; which in this caſe is only red, Iſa. lxiii. 1. ‘ Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?——Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine fat?’ Let thy ſoul then ſay unto him, Ruth iii. 9. ‘ Spread thy ſkirt over thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinſman.’ It was an ancient ceremony in marriage for the man to throw the ſkirt of his garment over the woman's head, in token of appropriating her unto himſelf, her ſubjection to him. It is applied to the ſpiritual marriage, Ezek. xvi. 8. ‘ I ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and covered thy nakedneſs; yea, I ſware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, ſaith the Lord God, and thou becameſt mine;’ i. e. married to me; for ſo marriage is expreſſed in the old Teſtament. And thence that phraſe is found in the New Teſtament, Rom. vii. 4.

Now, no ſkirt but a bloody ſkirt could ſerve his purpoſe. The bride is a criminal, and ‘ without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion,’ Heb. ix. 22. Therefore there can be no marriage with the Son of God but under a covert of blood. And therefore the chariot wherein Chriſt's ſpouſe is carried to his Father's houſe, hath a covering of purple, Cant. iii 10. Now, this purple covering is the blood of our ſlain Redeemer, which covers the ſoul from the ſtorm of God's wrath, as the covering of a chariot defends from ſtorms that come from above. Behold then a crucified Saviour, meet to eſpouſe guilty ſinners to himſelf.

Seventhly, The wedding garment for the bride is ready, being purchaſed at the expence of the bridegroom. It is the white raiment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is offered to all that hear the goſpel This is that glorious raiment which beautifies the ſoul in the ſight of God, wherewith Chriſt's ſpouſe is arrayed, as the lilies, with that for which they toil not, neither do they ſpin, though there were ſore toil and bloody ſweat at the making of it. Thus her wedding garment is taken off in heaven, even as his was taken off on earth: a bleſſed evidence of a deſign of perfect peace betwixt heaven and earth in the way of a marriage covenant.

Eighthly, The tent for the eſpouſals is ſet up, even the church. The tabernacle of God has viſited our earth, and therein erected a church, which is the tabernacle he has ſet for the ſun of righteouſneſs, as a Bridegroom, there to eſpouſe ſinners to himſelf. This tabernacle God hath been threatening to pull down, for our contempt of the goſpel; which calls us to comply with the eſpouſals offered: and ſeveral of the cords thereof are broken already; but had not the Lord been on our ſide, it had been lying on the ground by this time. Thanks to God, it is yet ſtanding: but wo to thoſe who ſhall not be eſpouſed to Chriſt before the tabernacle be removed.

Ninthly, The feaſt of the eſpouſals, namely, the holy ſacrament we are now to partake of is ready, that the eſpouſed bride may feaſt and rejoice in her Bridegroom. Though the table be not in heaven, yet the proviſion is from heaven, even the fleſh of Chriſt, which is meat indeed, and his blood, which is drink indeed. This holy feaſt is the ſeal of the marriage covenant, whereby Chriſt ſeals the covenant to us, 1 Cor. xi. 25. ‘ This cup is the new teſtament in my blood.’ The Bridegroom's ſeal is a red bloody ſeal, like his marriage robe.

Queſt. But what need is there of a ſeal to the Lord's covenant? Anſw. God's word is as good ſecurity as his writ, and his writ as good as his ſeal: but the difficulty ſinners find in believing requires them all: and therefore the Lord condeſcends to give us all we could require of the moſt faithleſs man on earth, that we may believe him; his word, his writ, yea, and his oath too. Some of you find no difficulty in believing your welcome to Chriſt. I dare not commend the leaſt doubt of God's word, as it is very diſhonouring to God. But I fear the unacquaintedneſs of many with the difficulty of believing, proceeds rather from a ſpirit of pride, than from the ſpirit of faith. The marriage covenant betwixt God and creatures, is ſuch a great thing, that it is a great matter to believe it. And nothing but ‘ the working of God's mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt when he raiſed him from the dead,’ will make a ſenſible ſinner really believe it. If a prince ſhould ſend a writ to a beggar woman, wherein he appoints her a free houſe, and a few pence weekly, to maintain her while ſhe lives, there would be no difficulty in believing this; it being a ſmall thing: but, ſuppoſing him to ſend an ambaſſador to eſpouſe her unto him; in this caſe, if ſhe were truly ſober, ſhe would hang down her head, and ſay, Do not mock a poor woman. And if upon the producing the marriage contract, ſhe began to believe it, and roſe up to ſubſcribe it; it would be no great marvel, if, looking to her rags and naſtineſs, ſhe ſuddenly halted, and ſaid, I am a fool to believe this; till conſidering the words of grace in the marriage contract, the nature of the prince's oath and ſeal, her heart were overcome into a belief of it. The application is eaſy; there is great need of the ſeal of the marriage covenant betwixt Chriſt and ſinners, and it is ready for you.

Tenthly, Here are witneſſes enow. Here are the friends of the Bridegroom, to bear witneſs to the eſpouſals. Yea, as Joſhua ſaith, Joſh. xxiv. 27. ‘ Behold, this ſtone ſhall be a witneſs unto us.’ And they will ſurely witneſs either for or againſt us. They will at leaſt bear witneſs to the offer of the eſpouſals made here this day.

Laſtly, Here is the Bridegroom, and here is the bride; the eternal Son of God, and a company of wretched loſt ſinners gathered together in this place. He has given his conſent already in the words of the text read in your hearing, 'I will betrothe thee unto me for ever.' What would you have more? would ye have him to declare it by a voice from heaven? Nay, but this is a more ſure word of prophecy. Bear witneſs then, ye friends of the bridegroom; witneſs all, and every one of you here preſent; witneſs ye ſtones of the place, That the eternal purpoſe of this match is declared, the Bridegroom and all his relations are pleaſed with it, the lawful impediments of it are removed, the contract is drawn up, the proxies for the Bridegroom are ſent forth; he hath put on his marriage robes, and the wedding garment for the bride is ready, the tent for the eſpouſals is ſet up, the feaſt and the ſeal are ready, the Bridegroom and the bride are both preſent: and, as for the Bridegroom he hath given his conſent already; and therefore there is nothing wanting to make up the eſpouſals betwixt the Son of God and ſinners here preſent, but their conſent.

And ſhall it be wanting? Are not ye ſaying, Ye friends of the Bridegroom, ye neighbours, ye ſtones bear witneſs for me, that my heart conſents to take him as he offers himſelf in the marriage covenant, renouncing the law, as a covenant of works; renouncing all my luſts; giving up myſelf, ſoul and body, to be his, and for him; to be his wholly, his only, and his for ever?

II. We ſhall ſpeak of the perpetuity of this marriage-covenant. Here I ſhall enquire, in what reſpects the eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul are for ever.

Firſt, They are for ever in deſign.

Secondly, They are for ever in fact.

FIRST, They are for ever in the deſign of the parties. In eſpouſals amongſt men it is not ſo: the deſign is only for the term of life; for the parties know one another to be mortal, and death will ſeparate them. But in the ſpiritual eſpouſals the parties join hands never to part; they both look upon it as a contract for eternity.

Firſt, Chriſt takes the ſinner with a deſign to be that ſinner's huſband from the moment of the eſpouſals for ever; and his deſigns cannot be broken; he knows perfectly before the eſpouſals, whatſoever will fall out betwixt him and his ſpouſe in the courſe of the marriage; and with a view of all future events, he takes her for ever with a fixed purpoſe, 1ſt, Never to put her away while ſhe deſires to abide with him. Nay, 2dly, Never to part with her, though ſhe ſhould deſire to go away, Jer. xxxii. 43. 'And I will make an everlaſting covenant with them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me.'

Secondly, The ſoul conſenting to the eſpouſals, takes Chriſt, with a deſign to be his ſpouſe for ever. Howſoever hypocrites deal with him, the believer takes Chriſt with a ſincere purpoſe never to part with him.

1. The believer takes Chriſt with a ſincere purpoſe never to go away from him, whatever hardſhips he meet with, for cleaving to him and following him: his reſolution is, 'So will not we go back from thee,' Pſal. lxxx. 18. He may indeed fear that he will leave Chriſt; nevertheleſs he can appeal to God's omniſcience, he has no ſuch deſign, but his ſoul lothes it. He has counted the coſt, he has weighed in the balance father and mother, and wife and children, yea, and his own life alſo; and finds that the Royal Bridegroom downweighs them all; and therefore he is peremptorily reſolved, whatever becomes of them, he will never leave him.

2. The believer takes Chriſt with a ſincere purpoſe never to part with him, however unkindly his Lord may carry himſelf towards him; 'Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him,' Job xiii. 15. This is his deſign, although he may be very hardly beſtead in keeping his ground in a time of trial: but in the day of eſpouſals, the ſoul ſees there is no help in any other, and reſolves, that if it die, it ſhall die at his door.

And thus, in the ſpiritual eſpouſals, the voice of the bride, ſweetly anſwers the voice of the Bridegroom; I will betrothe thee, ſaith he, unto me for ever. Amen, ſays the bride, for ever, ever, ever.

Allow me here to diſtinguiſh this eternity, this for ever of the bride, in three parts, each of which ſhe has in view, in her cloſing with the marriage-covenant.

1. She has in view the beginning of that eternity, which is from the very moment wherein ſhe is eſpouſed. So ſhe is to be altogether his, from that moment. Chriſt ſays, 'To-day if ye will hear my voice;' ſhe dare not ſay, To morrow; no, not the next hour; for that would be a day or an hour kept back of eternity, covenanted away to him, and now no more her own.

2. She has in view the remaining time-piece of that eternity, which lies on this ſide death, Pſal. cxix. 112. 'I have inclined my heart to perform thy ſtatutes alway, even unto the end.' She foreſees there will be many difficult ſteps in her way through that piece of it: but now, that we have once met, ſaith her ſoul on this ſide death, we ſhall never part. 'Whither thou goeſt, I will go; and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God my God,' Ruth i. 16. The conſideration of theſe difficulties ſtirs up the ſoul to take hold of Chriſt for that part of the ever, Pſal. xlviii. 14. 'This God is our God for ever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death.'

3. In the eſpouſals the ſoul has a view to death, the entrance of proper eternity. The work we have in hand is weighty indeed; it is work for eternity. I think I may ſay, there will not be a ſoul eſpouſed to Chriſt, nor a worthy communicant at the table of the Lord, in this place this day, who will not do their death-bed work here, as if they were fully perſuaded they ſhould never go from the place they ſit upon, but in their coffins. If they take Chriſt, ſurely they take him for ever.

There are two things, which, how long ſoever men may put off, yet they will find neceſſary to do them on their death-beds; one is, to diſpoſe of their ſouls for eternity; the other is, to diſpoſe of their effects, whatſoever they have in the world: both theſe will be done by the worthy communicant at the Lord's table, or whereſoever any ſhall be eſpouſed to Chriſt this day.

(1.) Whoſoever ſhall here be eſpouſed to Chriſt, will diſpoſe of his ſoul for eternity here, as if he were on his death bed. Obſerve how the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, as if he had been to draw his laſt breath, Pſal. xxxi. 5. 'Into thine hand I commit my ſpirit.' So conſenting to the covenant now, is but doing our death-bed work betimes. And there is good reaſon to do it now; for we know not at what hour our Lord will come. They who manage this work aright, will ſurely act for eternity, which they have in their view.

(2.) Whoſoever ſhall here be eſpouſed to Chriſt, will here diſpoſe of all that he has, as if he were lying on his deathbed. And indeed the ſoul's joining with Chriſt, is a dying after a ſort; therefore it is very natural the man make his will, ſeeing he is a dying. It is a dying unto ſin, and ſo he will ſolemnly give up with ſin, leaving all his guilt to be caſt into the ſea of the Redeemer's blood; leaving all his luſts to be broken by the Redeemer's ſanctifying Spirit. It is a dying to the world; and ſo he will give up all his earthly enjoyments to Jeſus Chriſt, pleading no more right to diſpoſe of them himſelf hereafter, than a dead man can claim to. Whoſo give themſelves to the Lord, will make a tender of their relations to him alſo, that they likewiſe may be his; and will lay down at his feet their houſes or lands, liberty and life, and whatſoever is dear to them in the world.

Thus in the eſpouſals, the believer diſpoſeth of his all as on a deathbed, leaving all to the Lord; taking him for and inſtead of all for ever. For the eſpouſals are for ever in deſign, in the deſign of both parties.

SECONDLY, The eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul are for ever in fact. As this match is deſigned to be everlaſting, ſo it is everlaſting indeed. It ſhall never end, but laſt it ſhall, from the moment it is made, through all the ages of eternity.

1. It is everlaſting, without interruption.
2. It is everlaſting, without expiring.

Firſt, It is everlaſting without interruption: it ſhall never be broken. The marriage covenant betwixt Chriſt and his ſpouſe, is not like Adam's covenant, where a man might be in this day, and out to morrow; nay, it is a bond of peace with God, which the believer ſhall never be ſhaken out of. The ſpouſe of Chriſt receives a kingdom which cannot be moved, Heb. viii. 28. Marriage covenants among men may be broken, before the time come wherein they would expire of courſe: but the marriage covenant betwixt Chriſt and believers is not liable to ſuch uncertainties. If the relation could become extinct in any caſe, it would come to paſs in one or all of theſe four; 1. In the caſe of the adverſity of either party. 2. In the caſe of the advancement of either party. 3. In the caſe of deſertion. Or, 4. In the caſe of the ſpouſe's unchaſtity. But in none of theſe caſes is the covenant broken, or the relation extinguiſhed.

1ſt, The eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and the believer ſtands firm, in the caſe of the adverſity of either party. This caſe is fatal to many covenants among men, of whom there are many who are like the 'great graſhoppers which 'camp in the hedges in the cold day: but when the ſun 'ariſeth they fly away.' They ſtick cloſe in a time of proſperity, but adverſity drives them off, and they renounce the covenant. But, in this covenant, the parties will never break with one another, how low ſoever either of them be brought.

(1.) Chriſt will not break with his ſpouſe, though ſhe be brought very low; he will cleave to her in her greateſt adverſity. If thou be eſpouſed to Chriſt, though thy worldly comforts fail, poverty and want overtake thee; yea, though thou be brought ſo low by diſtreſs as to be unable to do any thing for thyſelf or thy Huſband; yet know, that in that caſe the covenant ſtands firm. Our Lord will not diſown his ſpouſe though ſhe be going in rags. Job was very low before that God turned his captivity; but as low as he was, the Lord owns his relation to him, Job xlii. 7, 8. 'Ye have not ſpoken of me the 'thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath. Go to my 'ſervant Job, and my ſervant Job will pray for you, for 'him will I accept: ye have not ſpoken of me the thing 'which is right, like my ſervant Job.' Four times in theſe two verſes, the Lord calls him his ſervant Job. And thus the covenant ſweetens what is bitter in the believer's lot, and makes his thorny crown of afflictions better than a crown of gold.

(2.) Chriſt's ſpouſe will not break with him when he is in adverſity. The apoſtle ſpeaks of the afflictions of Chriſt, to wit, in the members of his body. Theſe offend hypocrites; and in ſuch a time many of them fall off; but Chriſt's people follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth. Though enemies ſhould prevail to lay Jeruſalem in heaps, they will favour the very duſt thereof for his ſake. They will take part with him, though all the world ſhould ſide againſt him; they will never break with their Lord and Huſband, upon the account of the moſt bitter cup his enemies can fill up to them.

2dly, The eſpouſals ſtand firm in the caſe of the advancement of either party. This caſe has been fatal to ſome matches among men: but here lordſhip does not change manners. The bride makes choice of Chriſt for her head and huſband, while the world generally deſpiſes and rejects him. The day approacheth wherein ſhe ſhall ſee him come in the clouds of heaven, in the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels, ſit down on his throne, judge the world, and put all his enemies under his feet: but will he then forget the ſoul that is now eſpouſed to him? No. When 'our God ſhall come, and ſhall call 'to the heavens from above, and to the earth that he may 'judge his people;' behold how the eſpouſed ſoul is remembered; 'Gather my ſaints together unto me, thoſe 'that have made a covenant with me by ſacrifice.' On the other hand, howbeit the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them, yet the ſpouſe of Chriſt will never change her huſband, however proſperous her outward condition be. As the world's frowns will not frighten, ſo its ſmiles will not entice a believer away from Chriſt. He will contemn its bribes as well as its boaſts, Cant. viii. 7. 'If 'a man would give all the ſubſtance of his houſe for 'love, it would be utterly contemned.'

3dly, The eſpouſals ſtand firm, and the covenant remains ſure, even in the caſe of deſertion on either ſide. And this is a caſe which often falls out in the preſent ſtate and courſe of the ſpiritual marriage.

(1.) Sometimes the Lord, for holy ends, deſerts his ſpouſe in great meaſure: then the ſoul, that was dandled on the knee is caſt down; ſhe, that was crowned with loving kindneſs, has the crown kicked off her head: but though the marriage covenant is hid from her, it is not torn in pieces; ſtill the relation ſtands, and there is no total deſertion in the caſe, Jer. xxxii. 40. 'And I will 'make an everlaſting covenant with them, that I will 'not turn away from them to do them good.'

(2.) Sometimes the fooliſh creature deſerts her huſband, ceaſeth to entertain actual communion with Chriſt; then does ſhe gad about among created things, as if ſhe had her choice yet to make; and ſhe begins to neſtle in ſome forbidden place. But her Lord will not ſo part with her; he will ſet fire to her neſt, and graciouſly bring her back again, as the Pſalmiſt prays, Pſal. cxix. 176. 'I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep; ſeek thy ſervant.' Chriſt's ſpouſe never totally forſakes him; for ſo runs the everlaſting covenant with reſpect to her part, 'I 'will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not de'part from me,' Jer. xxxii. 40.

Laſtly, But what ſhall we ſay in the caſe of the unchaſtity of the ſpouſe of Chriſt? We muſt not ſpeak wickedly for God, Job xiii. 7. It is evident from the Lord's word, that even in that caſe, the eſpouſals ſtand firm, and the covenant remains ſure, Jer. iii. 13, 14. 'Thou——haſt ſcattered thy ways to the ſtrangers, under 'every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, ſaith 'the Lord. Turn, O backſliding children, ſaith the Lord, 'for I am married unto you.' Our caſe is deſperate, if the infirmities of Chriſt's ſpouſe make void the marriage-covenant. But ſurely our Lord will put a difference betwixt weakneſs and wickedneſs; and we know no ſin a believer falls into but ſins of infirmity. 'For ſin ſhall not 'have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, 'but under grace,' Rom. vi. 14. There is a clauſe in the covenant touching the miſcarriages of believers: 'If 'his children forſake my law, and walk not in my judg'ments; then will I viſit their tranſgreſſion with the 'rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes. Nevertheleſs, my 'loving kindneſs will I not utterly take from him, nor ſuffer 'my faithfulneſs to fail,' Pſal. lxxxix. 30, 31, 32, 33.

Look not on this doctrine as a pillow for carnal ſecurity: for although theſe who are eſpouſed to Chriſt need not fear putting away, there remains enough to frighten them, while their ſins may be purſued with ſtrokes upon their bodies, even to death itſelf; and with terrible ſtrokes on their ſouls, even to the arrows of the Almighty being within them, the poiſon whereof drinketh up their ſpirit, Job vi. 4. Yea, one ſin in them may be puniſhed with ſuffering them to fall into another. And ſo a believer has that to fear which is more to be feared than hell, if of all evils ſin be the greateſt. And he ſpoke right who ſaid, "That if on the one ſide were preſented unto him the "evil of ſin, and on the other ſide the torments of hell, "he would rather chuſe to fall into hell, than fall in ſin."

The ſum of the matter is this: Our Lord has brought his ſpouſe, into a paradiſe on earth, while the rebellious dwell in a dry land; and of the tree of life ſhe may freely eat; but, under the pain of her Lord's diſpleaſure, ſhe muſt not taſte the forbidden fruit. Nevertheleſs, the day ſhe eats thereof, is not the term day, that ſhe muſt remove; nay, but he will chaſtiſe her, till ſhe vomit up the ſweet morſel. And he may ſo bruiſe her in his hot diſpleaſure, as her faith and hope may be expiring; yea, ſhe may loſe her life in the cauſe; only the covenant ſtands ſure, the eſpouſals are not diſannulled. The believing Corinthians provoked the Lord by unworthy communicating; and for this cauſe many ſleep, viz. the ſleep of death, which they ſhall not awake out of till the reſurrection. They profaned the ſacrament of his body and blood, which many do, and yet prolong their lives: but he made their bodies to fall, he would not ſo wink at it in them. But when God ſent their bodies to the grave for this cauſe, did he ſend their ſouls to hell for it likewiſe? No; they were within the bond of the covenant; but God purſued them ſo hard for it in this world, becauſe they were not to be purſued for it in another world; ver. 31. ‘But when we are judged, we are chaſtened of ‘ the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the ‘ world.’ So that the marriage-covenant betwixt Chriſt and believers is everlaſting, without interuption.

Secondly, It is everlaſting, without expiring. When a man has a leaſe of houſes or lands, though the tack be not broken, yet at length the years run out, and it expires of courſe: when a man marries a woman, though there be neither adultery nor wilful deſertion in the caſe, yet the marriage-bond is diſſolved at length on the death of either party: but the years of this covenant will run on through eternity, but never run out: the marriage betwixt Chriſt and believers will never expire.

1ſt, It does not expire at death. The eſpouſed bride muſt die indeed; but the marriage covenant ſhall not die with her. The time comes that the believer's laſt pulſe beats, and the ſilver cord that tied his ſoul and body together, is looſed; but even then the golden cord of the marriage covenant remains faſt. The children begotten of his body are no more his; the wife of his boſom is then free; but the eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and his ſoul continueth firm; he is ſtill joined to the Lord, and one ſpirit with him. He is carried to the land of forgetfulneſs; but if his duſt could ſpeak in the houſe of ſilence, it might ſay, on as good grounds as ever, ‘ My beloved ‘ is mine, and I am his;’ for the believer's death is but a ſleep, John xi. 11. ‘ Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth;’ Though dead, yet ſtill our friend. Nay, when his duſt is ſcattered here and there, and the ſteams of his body are flying through the air, they are well wrapt up in the bond of the covenant, which inſures the believer's reſurrection; as our Lord himſelf teacheth, while he proves it from Moſes's calling the Lord, the God of Abraham.

2dly, It does not expire with the world's ending. This world will have an end: but the marriage covenant will never end. This world's ending ſhall be by fire: 2 Pet. iii. 20. ‘ But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in ‘ the night, in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away ‘ with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with ‘ fervent heat, the earth alſo and the works that are there‘ in, ſhall be burnt up.’ What will then become of the farms and merchandiſe, great or ſmall, which now keep many from the marriage of the King's Son they are bidden to, and leave them no appetite for the goſpel feaſt? But theſe who now come into the marriage covenant, ſhall lay up ſomething for themſelves this day, which the fire of that dreadful day ſhall not reach; for though that fire ſhall burn up mountains, caſtles, and palaces, deſtroy the rights and evidences of lands and honours, handed down from father to ſon, yet it ſhall not be able to burn the marriage contract. ‘ For the mountains ſhall depart, ‘ and the hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not de‘ part from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace ‘ be removed, ſaith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee.’

But why do I ſpeak of the expiring of that marriage, when the world ends? For, when the laſt day is come, the marriage of the lamb is come; the marriage betwixt Chriſt and his ſpouſe ſhall then be ſolemnized.

Let us take a view of the ſolemnizing and conſummation of the marriage betwixt Chriſt and believers; it is within the compaſs of that clauſe in the text, for ever. I ſhall give it in theſe ſeven particulars.

1. At the laſt day the Royal Bridegroom ſhall come out of his Father's houſe, his ivory palaces, the higheſt heavens, in the robes of his glory, attended with all his holy angels, Matth. xxv. 31.

2. The bride ſhall come out of her mother's houſe, the houſe of mother-earth, Job i. 21. the grave, that darkſome, narrow, lonely houſe. But it ſhall be a joyful outgoing; never bride had the like. Hear the mirth that will be at that outgoing, Iſa. xxvi. 19. ‘ Thy dead men ‘ ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe: ‘ awake and ſing, ye that dwell in duſt.’ This is a prophecy, which will not till then have its full accompliſhment. Behold the glorious train of angels, whom ‘ he ‘ ſhall ſend to gather together his elect from the four ‘ winds, from one end of heaven to the other,’ Matth. xxiv. 31. And all ſhall rejoice together, for ‘ with glad‘ neſs and rejoicing ſhall they be brought,’ Pſal. xlv. 15.

3. The bride ſhall be preſented to the Bridegroom; ſhe ſhall ‘ meet the Lord in the air,’ 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. She ſees now his lovely picture, in the word of the everlaſting goſpel; but then ſhe ſhall ſee him in perſon. She is preſented as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 2. Look upon the bride as preſented that day; where are all her former deformities? ſhe is preſented, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, Eph. v. 27. Where is all her former blackneſs? ſhe ſhines forth as the ſun, Matth. xiii. 43. Where are all her rags? She is brought unto the king, in raiment of needle work, Pſal. xlv. 14.

4. The witneſſes are preſent; the whole congregation of heaven and earth, to be witneſſes to the marriage. There is the glorious company of holy angels; there is the black company of the wicked, of whom many were wont to ſatisfy themſelves to be only ſpectators of the eſpouſals; and now to their eternal confuſion, they ſhall be ſpectators, and but ſpectators.

5. Then the royal Bridegroom ſhall ſolemnly take his eſpouſed bride in marriage, before the world, angels, and men, ſaying, ‘ Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit ‘ the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of ‘ the world,’ Matth. xxv. 34. And in token thereof, he ſhall ſet her down with himſelf on his throne, ‘ To him ‘ that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my ‘ throne.’ Rev. iii. 21.

6. There ſhall be a glorious triumph over the enemies of Chriſt and his ſpouſe. All the wicked world ſhall ſtand trembling before them, and be driven from before the throne, in conſequence of that fearful ſentence, ‘ De‘ part from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire prepared ‘ for the devil and his angels.’ Matth. xxv. 41.

Laſtly, Chriſt and his ſpouſe ſhall be the laſt on the field, and when they have ſeen the backs of all their enemies, they ſhall go and enter into the King's palace, where they ſhall ſit down to the marriage ſupper of the Lamb, at a table that ſhall never be drawn.

So the marriage expires not with the world's ending, but is then ſolemnized and conſummated.

Shall we proceed any farther in queſt of that, which we are ſure we ſhall never find? We have looked into death, and we find the marriage expires not there; we have looked to the world's ending, it is ſo far from expiring then, that then it is conſummated; if we attempt to go further, we loſe ourſelves in the boundleſs ocean of eternity. Let us ſtop then, and conclude, that the bleſſed eſpouſals are for ever; that the ſpiritual marriage, betwixt Chriſt and believers, never never expires.

I proceed to the Application. And the only uſe I ſhall make of this doctrine is to exhort you to be for ever eſpouſed to Chriſt. Chriſt makes offer of himſelf to every ſoul here this day; and we are come in his name to gain your conſent thereto. O come into this bleſſed match: accept of Jeſus Chriſt, to be your Huſband for ever. Shall we not prevail in a treaty ſo very much for your advantage? Howſoever it be entertained, we muſt proclaim the royal Bridegroom's will and pleaſure, and make ſuit to your hearts. Therefore ‘ hearken unto me, that God ‘ may hearken unto you.’

Firſt, Are there any in all this company who have an unſtable, falſe, and fickle heart, that they can never get fixed, but ſtill it breaks all bounds? No doubt there are. To ſuch I ſay, Here is a ſuitable match for you. Come into the marriage covenant, put that heart in Chriſt's hand: theſe whom he eſpouſeth, he eſpouſeth for ever. If ye cannot keep the covenant, the covenant will keep you. The covenant of works could never keep an unſtable heart, the condition of it being perfect obedience, without the leaſt failure; a condition ye cannot fulfil, and therefore ye can have no hope from that covenant. I know the ſhifts ſome make to delude themſelves, by patching up a baſtard covenant of works, wherein they engage not with Jeſus Chriſt as a Head and Huſband, to live by him, being united to him, but they covenant with him only as a maſter, to give him their work for wages. Surely this covenant of your own making will never keep you: your hearts, howſoever you watch them, will break it; but the marriage covenant will ſecure the moſt unſtable heart amongſt us: ſo that it ſhall be as the tree whoſe root remains fixed in the earth, howbeit the branches are ſhaken by the wind. Though the ſpouſe of Chriſt may be toſſed to and fro by the blaſts of temptation, yet ‘ the ‘ root of the righteous ſhall not be moved.’ Prov. xii. 3.

Secondly, Are there any here that are mourning for their deceaſed relations? or any that are afraid of ſuch a mournful occaſion abiding them? Here is a ſuitable match for ſuch perſons, the King immortal offers to betrothe you unto him for ever. Ye cannot think of parting with your dear relations, but with greateſt ſorrow of heart. Ye that are of that diſpoſition will find a relative ſuitable to your mind by coming into this marriage covenant. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt will take you into the neareſt relation with himſelf; he is willing to eſpouſe you, and being once eſpouſed, ye ſhall never part. Death who ſnatcheth the huſband from the wife, and the child from the parent, cannot prevail here; and ſhall never be able to ſeparate betwixt Chriſt and theſe that are eſpouſed to him, Rom. viii. 38, 39. ‘ Neither death nor life ſhall be able ‘ to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt ‘ Jeſus our Lord.’

Thirdly, Are there any who know not how to get ſafe through the world in the evil day? Here is a ſuitable match for you: be eſpouſed to Chriſt; he will go betwixt you and all hazards. How bad ſoever the times be, they will ſtill be within the compaſs of that clauſe in the text, for ever. And our Lord offers himſelf to be a Head and Huſband to us for the evil day. If it be a dark day, he will be a light to you, if it be a day of war, he will cover your head; if it be a day of ſearching of corners, he will hide you in heaven. Embrace the covenant, and then, although ye ſing the triumph before the victory, ye ſhall not be aſhamed, Pſal. xlix. 5. ‘ Wherefore ſhould I fear ‘ in the days of evil?’

Fourthly, Are there any who have none to provide for them? or any under fears, that they will be in a deſtitute and helpleſs condition? Come ye into this match, and ye ſhall never want a Proviſor, who will ſurely furniſh you all that you need; ‘ Verily thou ſhalt be fed:’ yea, ‘ in the days of famine thou ſhall be ſatisfied,’ Pſal. xxxvii. 3. 19. Even your daily bread is ſecured to you by the covenant, Iſa. xxxiii. 16. ‘ Bread ſhall be given ‘ him, his water ſhall be ſure.’ The carnal world will laugh at this, and bid us ſit down and dine upon it; but they cannot laugh the people of God out of their experience, whoſe conſciences bear witneſs, that they have dined ſometimes more ſweetly upon a promiſe of the covenant, than it is poſſible for carnal men to do at their moſt plentiful tables.

Fifthly, Are there any here that have been ranging through the creation, ſeeking ſomething commenſurable to the deſires of their immortal ſpirits, but could never yet find it? Ye have not failed to meet with diſappointments, even where your hopes have been moſt raiſed: and whitherſoever ye have turned yourſelves, ye have ſtill come away diſſatisfied; ye have tried many methods to attain to ſatisfaction, and none of them has anſwered your deſign. Be perſuaded to make trial of this: embrace Chriſt in the marriage-covenant, and be aſſured he will be to you a complete covering of the eyes, and a reſt to your heart for ever, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘ Whom have I in ‘ heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I ‘ deſire beſides thee.’

Sixthly, Are there any whom no body cares for, who are rejected at every door? Our Lord will receive you; for ‘ he gathereth together the outcaſts of Iſrael,’ Pſal. cxlvii. 2. His family, ſo far as it is made up of the children of men, is made up of foundlings: Iſrael was a poor foundling; Egypt would lodge them no longer; Canaan would not take them in: but when they were caſt at all hands, the Lord took them up, Deut. xxxii. 10. He found him in a deſart land, and in the waſte howling wilderneſs: he led him about, he inſtructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye. So, however forlorn your caſe be, he will bring you into the bond of the marriage-covenant.

Ye have a ſcripture full to this purpoſe, repreſenting the caſe of the Jews, whom the Lord took into covenant with himſelf, but applicable to every ſoul whom Chriſt eſpouſeth, Ezek. xvi. 5. ‘ Thou waſt caſt out into the ‘ open field, to the lothing of thy perſon.’ ver. 8. ‘ I ‘ ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and covered thy nakedneſs: ‘ yea, I ſware unto thee, and entered into a covenant ‘ with thee, ſaith the Lord God, and thou becameſt mine.’ It is evident there is an alluſion here to the inhuman cuſtom of expoſing of infants. The Lord ſhews all theſe whom he has eſpouſed, what a ſad caſe he found them in, and how graciouſly he dealt with them in that caſe.

Thou waſt caſt out into the open field; thy caſe was as ill as that of expoſed outcaſt infants. Now, that barbarous cuſtom we find was, to leave the infants in ſome place where they might periſh, if ſome body did not take them up, as Pharaoh's daughter did Moſes, Exod. ii. Such was thy caſe, being abandoned of all, and unable to help thyſelf. This barbarity was exerciſed on thoſe infants that were lame or deformed, and who were not like to be uſeful to the commonwealth. So Chriſt's bride has nothing promiſing about her in the day he begins to manifeſt himſelf unto her; no beauty for which ſhe is to be deſired. Sometimes they expoſed infants to periſh by the waters; ſometimes they laid them down in woods or deſarts, where they might be a prey to ravenous beaſts: accordingly thou waſt caſt out in the open field, even the waſte howling wilderneſs, Deut. xxxi. 10. Thus the ſinner lay a ready prey for the devourer, and ſo thy caſe was as ill as that of expoſed infants.

But that is not all; it was worſe than theirs uſually was: they were laid out, but thou waſt caſt out; to, or in, the lothing of thy perſon, as ſome abominable thing men cannot endure to look at. When they were expoſed, they were either put in a kind of cloſe baſket, or in an earthen pot; but ſo much kindneſs was not ſhown to thee; thou waſt caſt out in the open field, or (as the word is) to the face of the field; thrown to, and left upon the bare ground without the leaſt ſhelter.

But it was yet worſe; when infants were expoſed, they were ſwathed and adorned, yea, and precious things, as gold, jewels, rings, were laid down with them for the charges either of their education or burial, if any that found them ſhould be at the pains to do either of theſe unto them. But I covered thy nakedneſs, ſaith our Lord. As for theſe whom he takes up, there is nothing to be got by them; it is of mere free grace, that he takes notice of them to help them. They have not ſo much as to cover their nakedneſs.

Now, behold how grace abounds to the foundling: I entered into a covenant with thee, and thou becameſt mine. If one freeborn had been expoſed, he loſt his freedom, and paſſed into a ſervile ſtate: but theſe whom our Lord takes up, he does not enſlave them, but eſpouſe them unto himſelf.

Finally, obſerve, That the firſt covering the Lord caſts upon the naked foundling, is the marriage robe, the robe of his own righteouſneſs. He does not delay the eſpouſals till the bride be brought into a better condition than he found her in; but takes her as ſhe is, and, eſpouſing her, covers her nakedneſs; I ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and ſo covered thy nakedneſs.

O the riches and freedom of grace! Let theſe that are eſpouſed to Chriſt already be humble; and the worſt of ſinners, who are willing now to take him, be encouraged to come forward unto the marriage.

Seventhly, Are there any amongſt us, who are difficulted in theſe weighty points of greateſt concernment, to wit, How they ſhall ſafely die, and go into another world; how they ſhall ſtand before the great tribunal? Hearken ye to this offer, Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of the other world, is willing to betrothe you unto himſelf for ever. Can there be ſuch a proper expedient for the buſineſs of another world, as to be eſpouſed unto the Lord of that world?

Can there be ſuch a proper expedient for a comfortable ſtanding before the tribunal, as to be joined now, in a marriage covenant, to the Judge that ſits on that tribunal?

Laſtly, Are there here any of the children of Adam, who have fallen off from God's favour, and are under his wrath? the gate of heaven is ſhut upon you; and ye are in danger of periſhing for ever: accept of Jeſus Chriſt for your Head and Huſband; ſo ſhall ye be reinſtated into the favour of God, and made happy for ever. 'For ſo an 'entrance ſhall be miniſtered unto you abundantly into 'the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.'

This offer is made unto you all without exception, Rev. xxii. 17. 'Whoſoever will, let him take the water 'of life freely.' The Bridegroom is ſtretching out his hand, in order to join with you in the marriage covenant; and will not ye ſtretch out your hand unto God? Will ye not give your conſent to the Son of God, to be eſpouſed unto him for ever? Before ye adventure to refuſe, there are three things I would beg of you as rational creatures.

1. Before ye refuſe to be eſpouſed to Chriſt, conſider how ye will diſpoſe of yourſelves to greater advantage. Will your betaking yourſelves into the devil's fields to feed inſatiable luſts, be to your greater advantage, than to partake of Chriſt and the benefits of his covenant? If ye reckon ſo, ye will find to your eternal loſs, ye have reckoned amiſs.

2. Before ye refuſe it, conſider how ye will do without it. You may make ſhift to live at eaſe in the world, without being eſpouſed to Chriſt: but conſider, how will ye die without it? how will ye ſtand before the tribunal of God without it?

Laſtly, Before ye refuſe this offer of the eſpouſals, make it ſure, that ye ſhall have another offer thereof; and that upon this refuſal, the ſentence ſhall not paſs againſt you. 'For I ſay unto you, that none of thoſe men, which were 'bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.' If it do paſs againſt you, ye are ruined; therefore do not adventure to refuſe him that ſpeaketh from heaven; but give yourſelves away to him in the everlaſting marriage-covenant.

Let none raiſe objections againſt themſelves, to hold them off from embracing the covenant. There is as much in the very propoſal of it, as may take off all your objections, 'I will betrothe thee unto me for ever; yea, 'I will betrothe thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and in 'judgment, and in loving-kindneſs, and in mercies. I 'will even betrothe thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and 'thou ſhalt know the Lord.'

But neceſſity has no law. In vain do we ſtand to diſpute, whether or not we ſhall take that way, which we muſt needs take, or inevitably periſh. Ye muſt be eſpouſed to Chriſt, or God will be your enemy through the ages of eternity. Ye muſt either be eſpouſed to Chriſt for ever, or ye muſt be damned for ever, Mark xvi. 16. 'He that believeth not, ſhall be damned.' If ye reject this marriage covenant, ye muſt die in your ſins. But why will ye judge yourſelves unworthy of eternal life, and reject the counſel of God againſt yourſelves? Will ye fly in the face of the grand device of the wiſdom of God for the ſalvation of ſinners? There is no ſalvation out of this covenant, ſtrangers to it have no hope, Eph. ii. 12. Wherefore, ye muſt either join yourſelves to the Lord in the covenant of peace, or he will have war with you for ever.

This covenant is drawn with the precious blood of the Royal Bridegroom; it is the new teſtament in his blood. Behold how he loved his bride, in whom there was nothing lovely! O trample not upon the blood of the everlaſting covenant!

Now, let your hearts give anſwer before the Lord unto theſe few queſtions.

Firſt, Are ye pleaſed with the Bridegroom? His Father is pleaſed with him, the angels and ſaints are pleaſed with him; and are ye not pleaſed with him? He is ſo far pleaſed with the worſt of you, as to take you for his ſpouſe; 'I will betrothe thee unto me for ever.' Are you pleaſed to take him for your Huſband?

Secondly, Are ye willing to renounce all your former lovers, and to part with all your luſts for ever? Aſſure yourſelves, if ye take him, ye muſt let theſe go away. God's covenant is a holy covenant; and ye will bring a curſe upon you, inſtead of a bleſſing, if ye come to ſeek a ſhelter to any one luſt under it.

Thirdly, Are ye content to take Chriſt in all his offices? will ye receive him as your Prophet, to teach you? as your Prieſt, to ſave you by his death and ſufferings? as your King, to reign and rule over you? Art thou content to give up thy own will to him, and that thy deſire ſhall be to thy huſband, to grant it, or withhold it, as he ſeeth meet; ſo that thou ſhalt be no more at thine own diſpoſal, but wholly at his?

Laſtly, Will ye take him for ever, from this moment, for proſperity and adverſity, for life and death, for time and eternity?

If it be ſo with you indeed, then ye are eſpouſed to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt for ever; and welcome to the feaſt of the eſpouſals at his table: but, if not, ye will get a long eternity to repent this refuſal, unleſs you change your mind, and repent of it in time.

The Myſtery of Chriſt in the Form of a Servant.

A Sermon preached at the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

PHILIP. ii. 7.

And took upon him the form of a ſervant.

OUR holy religion is a religion of myſteries; myſteries of faith, and myſteries of practice, neither of which can one be let into, without ſupernatural grace. The myſteries of faith, do, all of them lead into practice; yea, theſe which are moſt ſublime, the more they are truly believed, the more do they influence men to holineſs. Wherefore the apoſtle, in the context, to preſs the Philippians unto the practice of moral duties, particularly to love their neighbour as themſelves, and for that end to deny themſelves, and condeſcend to others for their good; lays before them, to be believed, that conſtellation of myſteries appearing in the incarnation of the Son of God: a motive to good works, unknown to the Jewiſh Rabbies, but ſealed in the experience of believers, as the moſt powerful incentive to univerſal holineſs.

In this verſe are three of theſe myſteries. The firſt, which is the leading one, is, that 'Chriſt Jeſus being in 'the form of God, not thinking it robbery to be equal 'with God, yet made himſelf of no reputation.' To be in the form of God, is to be very God, having the very nature and eſſence of God: the form being that which eſſentially diſtinguiſheth things, and makes a thing to be preciſely that which it is. And foraſmuch as the form is the foundation of his equality with God his Father; it can denote no leſs than his being very God: for no excellency whatſoever, really different from the divine eſſence, can found an equality with God; but ſtill there would remain as great a diſproportion as betwixt finite and infinite. Here then is a wonderful myſtery: Chriſt being the Supreme, the Moſt High God, equal with his Father, emptied himſelf of his divine glory, laying it aſide, caſting a thick vail over it, for a time. The ſecond myſtery is, 'He took upon him the form of a ſervant.' Thus it was that he emptied himſelf. This form, to wit, of a ſervant, was the veil he drew over his divine glory: for ſo the original words run, 'But emptied himſelf, taking the form of a ſervant.' The third myſtery is, 'He was made in the likeneſs of men.' In regard of the ſinfulneſs cleaving to mens nature, which he was abſolutely free of, he is ſaid to have been made, not in a ſameneſs with, but in the likeneſs of, men; truly man in ſubſtance and nature, but without ſin, however like to ſinful fleſh he appeared, Rom. viii. 3. 'God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh.' This was it that was prerequiſite unto, and qualified him for, taking upon him the form of a ſervant, for ſo ſtand the words in the original, 'Taking the form of a ſervant, being made in the likeneſs of men.'

It is the ſecond of theſe myſteries, And took upon him the form of a ſervant, which I am to inſiſt upon. And two things here are to be opened; namely, What the form of a ſervant is. And, What Chriſt's taking it upon him bears. I begin with the latter of theſe.

Whatever is particularly meant by the form of a ſervant, it is plain, that in the general it denotes a mean and low condition. And our Lord's taking it upon him, imports, 1. That he voluntarily ſubmitted to it, for the ſake of poor ſinners. He was not originally in the form of a ſervant, as ſome men have been, who were born in a ſtate of ſervitude; nay, he was from eternity the Son of God, his Father's equal, but he, being Lord of heaven and earth, came, of his own accord, under the form of a ſervant. It was not laid upon him againſt his will; but he freely took it on himſelf, and became bound, when he might have continued free. 2. It imports, that what he was before, namely, very God, equal with the Father, he ſtill continued to be, notwithſtanding of his ſubmitting to the form of a ſervant. He took upon him the form of a ſervant; that is, continuing in the form of God, he took upon him the form of a ſervant.

By the form of a ſervant, is not underſtood the likeneſs of a guilty man. That expoſition weakens the force of the apoſtle's argument, and the force of that term, the form of God; though indeed the thing itſelf is truth, and is taught in the laſt clauſe of the verſe. Neither is it to be underſtood of man's nature, which in reſpect of God is ſervile: becauſe Chriſt's emptying of himſelf, conſiſting, according to the text, in his taking on the form of a ſervant, was ſurely over, in his exaltation, and the full manifeſtation of his divine glory; while yet his human nature remains. Neither doth that ſervile kind of condition, into which he was brought in his ſufferings, ſeem to explain ſufficiently the form of a ſervant, which he took upon himſelf.

The plain and literal ſenſe of theſe words I take to be the true ſenſe of them, viz. That the Son of God, our bleſſed Lord Jeſus Chriſt, really became a ſervant, as really as ever man did, who ſerved for his bread. He voluntarily took upon himſelf, that wherein the eſſence of that relation, on the ſervant's part doth conſiſt: and ſo was formally conſtitute a ſervant, to all intents and purpoſes of the bargain with him whoſe ſervant he became. As this is the literal ſenſe of the words, from which we are never to depart without neceſſity; ſo it is confirmed to be the genuine ſenſe, by the true import of that phraſe being in the form of God. His being in the form of God, denotes his being very God: therefore his taking upon him the form of a ſervant, muſt denote his becoming really a ſervant.

Now, the ſcripture repreſents Jeſus Chriſt, (1.) As a ſervant in his ſtate of humiliation, and ſo he is called, a ſervant of rulers, Iſa. xlix. 7. (2.) As a ſervant in his ſtate of exaltation, Iſa. liii. 21. 'By his knowledge ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many.' Compare Acts v. 31. 'Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins.' It can hardly be a queſtion with any who reads the text and context, whether the form of a humbled ſervant, or of an exalted ſervant, is meant here? Our Lord Jeſus did take on both, the one in his humiliation, and the other in his exaltation: but it is evident, the former is here meant; and they are vaſtly different. The form of a humbled ſervant he ſubmitted to; the form of an exalted ſervant was conferred on him, as the reward of that ſubmiſſion. In this form of a ſervant, he has a moſt exalted miniſtry; being a ſervant, for whoſe law the iſles ſhall wait. 'For the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son,' and hath 'given him all power in heaven and in earth.' Matth. xxviii. 18. But in that form the text ſpeaks of, he had a ſervice low and humble, a ſurety ſervice, a ſervitude: and ſo the form was the form of a bond ſervant. In both the one and the other, Joſeph was a type of him, being firſt ſold for a ſervant; and then exalted to be ruler over all Egypt under Pharaoh.

Here is a myſtery: Chriſt Jeſus, the Father's equal, became a ſervant for us, a bond man, or bond ſervant; for ſo the word properly ſignifies, and that word is uſed in that new teſtament phraſe which we read bond or free, or bond and free, 1 Cor. xii. 13. and other ſcriptures. The greateſt inequality found in any relation among men is in that betwixt a maſter and a ſervant, ſo the loweſt levelling among them is that mentioned, Iſ. xxiv. 2. 'It ſhall be, as with the ſervant, ſo with the maſter.' Then what unparallelled condeſcenſion, was this! God's equal becoming a ſervant for ſinners! Both theſe characters met together in Chriſt, in his ſtate of humiliation, Zech. xiii. 7. 'Awake, O ſword, againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord.' Iſ. xlii. 1. 'Behold my ſervant;' the very ſame word that is rendered bond man, or bond ſervant.

Doct. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, continuing to be his Father's equal, humbled himſelf into a ſtate of ſervitude, and became his ſervant, his bond ſervant in man's nature, for poor ſinners of Adam's race. This was a ſtep lower than his becoming man; but the lower it was, the higher did his free love to man appear.

I am aware that ſome who meaſure goſpel myſteries by their carnal reaſon, may be apt to ſay here, 'This is an hard ſaying, who can bear it?' But it is undeniable that Chriſt is expreſsly called God's ſervant in the holy ſcripture, Iſ. xlii. 1. 'Behold my ſervant whom I uphold,' &c. Zech. iii. 8. 'I will bring forth my ſervant the branch.' But what kind of a ſervant unto his Father was he? did he become a bond man, a bond ſervant? Yea, he did. Pſal. xl. 6. 'Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, mine ears haſt thou opened,' or, as in the margin 'Mine ears thou diggedſt through,' that is, boredſt, as it is well expreſſed in our pſalms in metre, 'Mine ears thou bored.' This hath a view to that law concerning the bond ſervant, Exod. xxi. 6. 'Then his maſter ſhall bring him unto the judges, he ſhall alſo bring him to the door, or unto the door poſt; and his maſter ſhall bore his ear through with an awl; and he ſhall ſerve him for ever.' This is confirmed from Hoſ. iii. 2. 'So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of ſilver.' In the original it is, 'So I digged her thorough to me,' &c. the ſame word being here uſed, as Pſal. xl. 6. It is a pregnant word, which is virtually two in ſignification: and the ſenſe is, I bought her, and bored her ear to my door poſt, to be my bond woman, according to the law, Deut. xv. 17. 'Thou ſhalt take an awl, and thruſt it through his ear into the door, and he ſhall be thy ſervant for ever, and alſo unto thy maid ſervant thou ſhalt do likewiſe.' The boring of her ear as a bond woman, was noways inconſiſtent with the prophet's betrothing of her to himſelf, ſee Exod. xxi. 8.

I ſhall only add, that his moſt precious life was ſold by Judas for thirty pieces of ſilver, the ſtated price of the life of a bond ſervant, Exod. xxi. 32. 'If the ox ſhall puſh a man ſervant or maid ſervant, he ſhall give unto their maſter thirty ſhekels of ſilver, and the ox ſhall be ſtoned.' And the death he was put to, was a Roman puniſhment, called by them the ſervile puniſhment, or puniſhment of bond ſervants: becauſe it was the death that bond men malefactors were doomed unto: free men ſeldom, according to law. And it is plain, that 'Joſeph who was ſold for a ſervant,' was therein a type of Chriſt.

Now, for the opening of this myſtery, of the ſtate of ſervitude the Lord of glory put himſelf into for ſinners, we ſhall conſider the following particulars. 1. To whom he became a ſervant. 2. For whom. 3. The neceſſity of it. 4. The contract of ſervice. 5. His fulfilling of it. 6. Wherefore he engaged in it.

I. To whom he became a ſervant. The Son of God, became a ſervant to man's great Lord and Maſter. He put himſelf in a ſtate of ſervitude to his Father, who ſaid unto him, 'Thou art my ſervant,' Iſa. xlix. 3. It was with his Father he entered into the contract of ſervice; it was his Father's buſineſs he was employed in, and to him he behoved to work, John ix. 4. 'I muſt work the work of him that ſent me.' So, howbeit our Lord Jeſus was and is, the Father's equal; yet he acknowledgeth the Father greater than he, as the Lord is greater than the ſervant, John xiv. 28. 'My Father is greater than I.' Chap. xiii. 16. 'The ſervant is not greater than his lord, neither he that is ſent, greater than he that ſent him.'

Chriſt is indeed called a ſervant of rulers, Iſa. xlix. 7. But not in reſpect of the prime ſervile relation he ſtood in; but in regard of a ſecondary occaſional relation; as when a maſter obligeth his ſervant to ſerve another man in any piece of buſineſs. Thus our Lord ſubjected himſelf to the Jewiſh and Roman rulers; he paid tribute, and was by them both treated as a ſervant. But herein he was ſtill about his Father's buſineſs.

II. For whom he became a ſervant. Our bleſſed Jeſus took on the ſervice for others, who were bound to it, but utterly unable for it. The cup is found in Benjamin's ſack; therefore poor Benjamin muſt be kept a bond man in Egypt: Nay, ſays Judah, 'Let me abide inſtead of the lad, a bond man to my Lord, and let Benjamin go.' Gen. xliv. 33. An elect world is found guilty before the Lord; they muſt therefore be bond men for ever as well as the reſt of mankind: Nay Father, ſaith our Lord, who ſprang out of Judah, that yoke will be utterly inſupportable to them: I will take their ſtate of ſervitude upon me, let that yoke be laid on my neck, let me be thy bond man in their ſtead; and let them go free. So be it, ſaid God, I am well pleaſed with the exchange; thou then 'art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified.' Iſa. xlix. 3. It is evident from the context, that Chriſt is the party therein ſpoke to. By Iſrael is meant the ſpiritual Iſrael, the elect of mankind. Rom. ix. 6. 'They are not all Iſrael who are of Iſrael.' The former text ſtands thus preciſely in the original, 'Thou art my ſervant; Iſrael, in whom I will glorify myſelf.' As if the Father had ſaid to Chriſt, Son, theſe are utterly unable to make out their ſervice, I cannot expect a good turn off their hand: be it known then, that it is agreed, that I take thee in their room, to perform the ſervice due in virtue of the original contract; thou art Iſrael's repreſentative in whom I will glorify myſelf; as I was diſhonoured by Iſrael the collective body of the elect. So it was for the elect Chriſt became a ſervant.

III. The neceſſity of his becoming a ſervant for their ſalvation. No doubt all mankind might have been left to periſh, without any imputation of injuſtice, either on the Father or the Son. The ſaving of any of the loſt race of Adam, was not a neceſſary act; but an act of ſovereign free grace. Howbeit, on the ſuppoſition that God would have an elect company ſaved, there was neceſſity of Chriſt's taking upon himſelf the ſtate of ſervitude for them. This will appear from the following particulars,

1. The elect of God were, with the reſt of mankind, conſtitute God's hired ſervants by the firſt covenant, and actually entered to that ſervice, in the firſt Adam. And in token of this, we are naturally inclined in that character to deal with God; though we are rendered incapable to perform the duty of it, Luke xv. 19. 'Make me as one of thy hired ſervants.' Their work was perfect obedience to the law; the hire they were to have for it was life: 'The man which doth thoſe things, ſhall live by them,' Rom. x. 5. The penalty of breaking away, was perpetual bondage under the curſe, Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, which are written in the book of the law to do them.'

2. Howbeit they never made out their ſervice: but, by the time they were well entered home, they violated their covenant of ſervice, and brake away from their Maſter. So they loſt all plea for the hire; and juſtly became bond-men under the curſe of the broken covenant, liable for their malfices, to die the death of ſlaves, Gal. iv. 24. 'Theſe are the two covenants; the one from mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage.' Their falling under the curſe inferred the loſs of their liberty, and conſtituted them bond men for ever; as is evident from inſtances of the curſed in other caſes, as Gen. ix. 25. 'Curſed be Canaan; a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be.' Joſh. ix. 23. 'Now therefore ye (the Gibeonites) are curſed, and there ſhall none of you be freed from being bond-men.' The very ground being curſed, falls under bondage, according to the ſcripture, Gal. iii. 13. 'Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree;' which hath a ſpecial reſpect to dying on a croſs, the puniſhment for bond-men.

3. By the breaking of that covenant, they loſt all their ability for their ſervice, and were left without ſtrength. They had no ſuffering ſtrength to bear the puniſhment of their breaking away from their ſervice; but they muſt have for ever periſhed under it. They had no doing or working ſtrength left them; their work-arm was now quite broken, ſo that they could work none to any good purpoſe: nay, they had neither hand nor heart for their work again, Rom. viii. 7. 'The carnal mind——is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.' So it was not poſſible for them to make out their ſervice, Joſh. xxiv. 19. 'Ye cannot ſerve the Lord.'

4. Howbeit, the puniſhment due unto them behoved to be borne; and the ſervice itſelf behoved to be made out, according to the covenant of works; elſe they could never have life and ſalvation. The truth of God inſured this, Gen. ii. 17. 'In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.' The honour of God's holy law and covenant required it, Iſa. xlii. 21. 'He will magnify the law, and make it honourable.' And his exact juſtice confirmed it, Gen. xviii. 25. 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?'

Laſtly, Since all this behoved to be done, and they could not do it; the ſervice behoved to be fulfilled, and they could by no means work it out: it was therefore abſolutely neceſſary, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould come under the curſe due to them, take on himſelf the form, put himſelf in the room of the poor bond man, enter home to the ſervice in their ſtead, and transfer on himſelf their ſtate of ſervitude, Gal. iii. 13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us: for it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree.

IV. The contract of the ſervice. It is the covenant of grace, made between the Father and Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, repreſenting all the elect his ſpiritual ſeed. The covenant of grace is juſtly looked upon as a covenant of ſervice, ſtrictly and properly ſo called; wherein ſo much work is to be done for ſo much wages. But it is a lamentable abuſe of the covenant of grace, by legaliſts in their principles, and of the communicants in their practice, that they put the work, for earning of wages, in the wrong hand; namely, that they ſhall be the workers, and eternal life be the hire of their work. This is to trample under foot God's covenant of grace, and make a new one of our own, which he will never approve of. Heaven's device in this caſe was, that Chriſt ſhould be the worker of life and ſalvation to poor ſinners; and that they ſhould get life and ſalvation through him; and ſo work from life received, as ſons intitled to the inheritance, Rom. iv. 4, 5. 'Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs.' So the covenant of grace was, in reſpect of Chriſt, a covenant of ſervice, and the reward is of debt to him, and him only, as the ſervant that worked for it, according to the covenant; and none but he was fit for that ſervice.

Here conſider, 1. This contract of ſervice was entered into from eternity. The covenant, by which ſalvation is to be had, is not a covenant of yeſterday, or of to-day: it was made in every point thereof before the world was. What remains for us is to take hold of it by faith. 2. The deſign of it was, (1.) To illuſtrate the divine glory, much darkened by the hired ſervants of God's own houſe. There was, by ſin, an invaſion made upon God's declarative glory, and Jeſus Chriſt was choſen to make the reparation. So, whatever wrong was done to the holineſs and goodneſs of God, or any other divine perfection, by the ſin of thoſe in whoſe room he ſtood; it is laid upon him to repair it, Iſa. xlix. 3. (2.) To ſave loſt ſinners; to reſtore the Iſrael of God to life and favour. God had ſet his love from eternity on a ſelect company of mankind; they were loſt, and they muſt be ſaved; and Jeſus Chriſt enters into his Father's ſervice for that effect. 3. The ſervice which he undertook to perform, was, to fulfil the whole law for them; fully to anſwer the demands which the broken covenant of works had upon them, Heb. x. 9. 'Then ſaid he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God.' Thus the parts of the ſervice were theſe two; (1.) His bearing the puniſhment which they were bound to in virtue of the penalty of the covenant of works. And hereby he was to ſatisfy the penalty of that covenant, the law's ſanction of death. (2.) His performing the obedience which they were bound to fulfil, by the ſame covenant of works, though broken. And hereby he was to ſatisfy the commanding part of that covenant, requiring perfect obedience for life, Gal. iv. 4, 5. 'God ſent forth his Son made 'under the law, to redeem them that were under the 'law.' Chap. iii. 13. 'Chriſt hath redeemed us from 'the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us.' 4. The covenanted reward of the ſervice was a glorious exaltation to himſelf, and eternal life for them. Of the former the apoſtle makes mention, Philip. ii. 9. 'Wherefore God 'alſo hath highly exalted him.' Of the latter, Tit. i. 2. 'In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began.'

V. The fulfilling of the ſervice, according to his contract. It was a hard ſervice, but he went through with it, became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. And herein three things are to be conſidered.

1. He entered to his ſervice, in bringing a holy human nature into the world, which he retained to the end. Thus he anſwered the demand the law had on them, for holineſs of nature, as a condition of life, Iſa. ix. 6. Unto us a child is born: even that holy thing, Luke i. 35. That this was a piece of the ſervice he performed for them, appears from Pſal. xl. 6. 'Sacrifice and offering 'thou didſt not deſire, mine ears thou haſt opened;' and Heb. x. 4. 'Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but 'a body haſt thou prepared me.' Where the boring of his ears to God's door poſt, in the room of the elect, is expounded of preparing him a body, a human nature.

2. He went on in his ſervice in the righteouſneſs of his life, being obedient unto death. All that he did while he lived upon earth, was the fulfilling of the whole law in its commands; which was that wherein Adam failed, and ſo ruined all mankind. And thus the great Surety ſervant anſwered the demand of the law, for perfect righteouſneſs of life: John xvi. 4. 'I have glorified 'thee on the earth: I have finiſhed the work thou gaveſt 'me to do.'

Laſtly, Having ſuffered all his life long, he finiſhed his ſervice in his death and burial; thus anſwering the law's demand of ſatisfaction for ſin, John xiv. 30. 'When 'Jeſus therefore had received the vinegar, he ſaid, It is 'finiſhed: and he bowed his head, and gave up the 'ghoſt.' The term of his continuance in this ſtate of ſervitude, was till death, but no longer. John ix. 4. 'I 'muſt work the works of him that ſent me, while it is 'day: the night cometh when no man can work.' He was to ſerve during all the days of his life, that is, in the language of the law, for ever, Exod. xxi. 6. 'His maſter 'ſhall bore his ear through with an awl; and he ſhall 'ſerve him for ever,' i. e. till death. In common caſes the law made an exception here of a jubile intervening: but in his caſe, there could be no ſuch exception, in regard the true jubile was to be brought about by his death, Howbeit, in the grave 'the ſervant is free from his ma'ſter,' Job iii. 19. ſo, having ſerved out his full time, he put off the form of a ſervant, and he roſe and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

VI. and laſtly, Wherefore he put himſelf into, and took on him, this ſtate of ſervitude.

1. Love to his Father, and the love he had to his deſigned ſpouſe the captive daughter of Zion, and to his children and ſpiritual ſeed, engaged him to undertake it; as in the caſe of the ſervant under the law, Exod. xxi. 5. 'I love my maſter, my wife and my children, I will not 'go out free.' He ſaw that his Father would entirely loſe his ſervice from all mankind, if he did not in their nature take the ſervice on himſelf. Wherefore he 'took 'on him the form of a ſervant, being made in the like'neſs of man.' The captive daughter of Zion he could not have, but as Jacob had Rachel, by ſerving for her as unlovely as ſhe was. But he loved her freely; and becauſe he ſo loved her, he took on the form of a ſervant for her. He loved his children, the ſpiritual ſeed, given him of his Father; he ſaw they would be loſt, if he ſhould go out from them free; therefore he conſented to the boring of his ears to ſerve for them while he ſtaid on earth.

2. He took it on him, for releaſing of them from that ſtate of bondage which their father Adam had brought them into. What Judah offered to do, in the caſe of Benjamin his brother, Gen. xliv. 33. Chriſt really performed in the caſe of his brethren, becoming a bond man in their ſtead, that they might go free. They were in bondage under the curſe of the broken law; and could never, by their own doings or ſufferings, have worked themſelves out of their bondage; but had periſhed in it, had not he put himſelf in their room and ſtead.

3. He did it for paying of their debt. The law, in ſome caſes, allowed parents to ſell their children for paying of their debt. Hence our Lord ſaith unto Iſrael, 'Which of my creditors is it to whom I have ſold you?' Iſa. l. i. Thereby ſhewing, that it was not to him, but to themſelves their ruin was owing. We have a ſtory to this purpoſe of one of the ſons of the prophets, who was a holy man, but had died in debt: it is thus related by his poor widow, 2 Kings iv. 1. 'Thy ſervant my huſ'band is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear 'the Lord: and the creditor is come to take unto him 'my two ſons to be bond-men.' Thus ſtood the caſe with the elect. Their father Adam had left them under a double debt, a debt of obedience, and a debt of puniſhment, which they were utterly unable to pay. And juſtice, as the creditor, was come to take them away for bond men, and force them to ſerve for payment of the debt, never to be releaſed till the laſt farthing of it was fully ſerved for: but Chriſt ſaith, O juſtice, take me for a bond man in their ſtead; if the ſervice for payment of the debt lie on them, it will never be paid out; but I will ſerve for them. It was accepted: and the Lord Jeſus took their room, and went away with the creditors for a bond man in their ſtead.

Laſtly, He took on him the form of a ſervant, to bring them into a ſtate of adoption in the family of God. He became a bond ſervant, that they might become ſons and daughters. Gal. iv. 1. 'The heir as long as he is a 'child, differeth nothing from a ſervant.' verſe 3. 'Even 'ſo we were in bondage.' verſe 4. 'But God ſent forth 'his Son made of a woman, made under the law.' verſe 5. 'To redeem them that were under the law, that we 'might receive the adoption of Sons.'

USE I. What is ſaid may ſerve for alarming of ſinners who are ſtrangers to Jeſus Chriſt. Being in your natural ſtate, not united to Chriſt, there is a heavy yoke wreathed about your necks, from which ye are not able to deliver yourſelves. Ye are bond men under the law; and ſo,

1. It lies on you, to fulfil the ſervice man was bound to by the covenant of works, under the pain of the curſe, Rom. iii. 19. 'Curſed is every one that continueth not 'in all things written in the book of the law to do them.' Now ye can as ſoon remove mountains as perform this:

therefore ye can never be ſaved, while ye are out of Chriſt. Behold, on Chriſt's taking on him the form of a ſervant, how that ſervice behoved of neceſſity to be performed, ere one ſinner could be ſaved. And if God did ſo ſtand upon the honour of his law with his own Son, that he behoved completely to fulfil that ſervice for thoſe whom he ſhould ſave; it is vain for you to think that God will grant an abatement of that ſervice to you. Nay, if you obey not perfectly, you do nothing to purpoſe: no leſs can be accepted off your hand, ſince ye are not in Chriſt.

2. It lies upon you to bear the puniſhment due to you for your breaking away from your Lord and Maſter; Gen. ii. 17. ‘In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.’ All that ye can ſuffer in this world, will not compenſate the wrong thereby done to the honour of God; nay, ye ſhall never be able through the ages of eternity, to get from under that puniſhment. None leſs than God's equal was able to go through it: therefore the Son of God took on him the form of a ſervant, that therein he might bear it away from all that believe. A certain proof that none out of Chriſt ſhall eſcape it.

Conſider then how preciſely God ſtands to his having the ſervice owing him in virtue of the firſt covenant fully made out; that rather than any ſhould be ſaved without its being fulfilled, he would have his own Son to take on him the form of a ſervant, and fulfil it for them.

Use II. Let all be exhorted to flee to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as their hope for ſalvation. Here is a myſtery of faith; Chriſt taking upon him the form of a ſervant, propoſed to be believed and applied by each one in particular to himſelf, for ſalvation. It will be good tidings,

1. To the poor broken hearted ſinner, who ſees he cannot ſerve the Lord according to the demand of the law, who is out of conceit with his own beſt doings, becauſe they are ſo ill done. There is a ſervice performed by the Mediator for ſinners, that is perfect even in the eye of the law. And life and ſalvation is thereby gained for all that ſhall believe.

2. To ſuch as are under terror for their running away from God's ſervice, and the diſhonour they have done him. Here is the way by which ye may return to him as a Father; even through his own Son, who, took upon him the form of a ſervant, and finiſhed his work.

Jeſus Chriſt, with his ſervice, and all the benefits thereof, is offered unto you this day: refuſe him not, but take him for your righteouſneſs in which you will ſtand before the Lord; take him for your treaſure, out of which all your debt will be paid; take him for your Huſband, Head, and Lord: take him for your all in all. Take himſelf, and his ſervice ſhall be imputed to you; in him thou ſhalt be received for ever, not now as ſervant, but above a ſervant; Philem. 15, 16. So you ſhall get both heart and hand for working works truly good; as children working to their Father, having the inheritance ſecured to them before, by the works of their elder brother.

Object. 1. “But will ever Chriſt make me partaker of the benefits of this ſervice, who have ſerved my luſts, inſtead of ſerving him?” Anſw. Chriſt became not a bond ſervant, but for thoſe who were in bondage to ſin and Satan: and it was the very end for which he took on him the form of a ſervant, that, by communicating to them the benefits of his ſervice, he might deliver them from the ſervice of ſin, and cauſe them to ſerve him, Luke i. 74. ‘that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him.’ Doubt not then, but that, coming to him, ye ſhall be partakers of the benefit of his ſervice; and particularly, that ye may be no more bond ſervants under ſin, but honorary ſervants to himſelf. ‘And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God’.

Object. 2 “I fear I am none of theſe in whoſe room and ſtead Chriſt took on him the form of a ſervant; how then can I embrace him, and apply his ſervice to me by believing?” Anſw. Your right to take him, and apply his ſervice to you by believing, doth not at all depend on that matter, which is a ſecret not to be known by you till you believe; but it depends on the offer of Chriſt, his ſervice which he ſerved, made to you in the goſpel of God, Rev. xxii. 17. ‘Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.’ Howbeit Chriſt took on him the form of a ſervant, only in the name and ſtead of the elect; yet a crucified Jeſus, having fulfilled the bond ſervice, is the ordinance of God for life and ſalvation unto all; that whoſoever ‘believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ John iii. 16. And his righteouſneſs is made over in the goſpel to all the hearers of it; ſo as it is lawful for them to take poſſeſſion of it by believing. Hence to believe, is to ‘receive the abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs.’ Rom. v. 17. And this is ſo certain, that ye muſt either receive it and be ſaved: or be held refuſers of heaven's gift of righteouſneſs made to you, and ſo periſh for ever, Mark xvi. 16. ‘He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.’

Use laſt, O Chriſtians, communicants, come to the Lord's table with the faith and admiration of this ſtupendous myſtery, Chriſt in the form of a bond ſervant for you. See it in the exact juſtice of God, the invaluable price of your ſalvation from ſin and wrath, and the ſtrongeſt motive to the obedience of ſons. And let the faith of it fill your hearts with love to him, who ſo loved us; with repentance, and kindly ſorrow for your ſin, which brought God's equal ſo very low; with thankfulneſs for this unſpeakable benefit; and with holy purpoſes of new obedience.

The continuation of the improvement.

This doctrine of Chriſt's ſtate of ſervitude is too fruitful, in faith and practice, to be diſmiſſed without further improvement: therefore I ſhall endeavour to improve it for your further inſtruction, and for exciting to the practice of holineſs.

First, This doctrine diſcovers the ground and reaſon of ſeveral other goſpel truths, which ſpring from it as a root principle. And, among theſe, I ſhall take notice of the following particulars.

1. Here is a clear ground, upon which the dead elect, incapable by any work or doing of their own, to make themſelves to differ from others, are, in a conſiſtency with God's impartial juſtice, quickened, and endowed with ſaving faith; while others remain dead about them; quickening grace coming on them ‘as a dew from the Lord, as ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men.’ Micah v. 7. Our Lord Jeſus having, in their name, taken on him the form of a bond ſervant, performed the ſervice required of them by the covenant of works; but he did not perform that ſervice in the room of others. Hence to them is given life, as the reward of the ſervice performed for them by the ſecond Adam; even as their life was loſt through the marring of that ſervice in the hands of the firſt Adam. ‘For as in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive.’ 1 Cor. xv. 22. And now that the Lord Jeſus is riſen again to be Lord of the dead and living; how can they miſs of being quickened, each one in his time, ſince he lives, to ſee that the life, for which he ſerved a hard ſervice, be made forthcoming to them, according to the contract of ſervice he entered into with his Father? ‘Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo.’

2. Here is a clear ground upon which the obedience of the man Chriſt may be imputed to believers for righteouſneſs, as well as his ſatisfaction by ſuffering: notwithſtanding obedience was due from the human nature of Chriſt as a creature. For it is evident, that Chriſt's obeying his Father in the character of a bond ſervant could no more be due, antecedently to his contract of ſervice, than his ſatisfaction by ſuffering.

3. Here is the ground upon which believers in Chriſt come to be juſtified before God; not upon the account of any thing wrought in them, or done by them, whether faith itſelf, or any obedience of theirs whatſoever, but upon the account of Chriſt's ſervice, imputed to them for righteouſneſs in the ſight of God, as the apoſtle deſired, that he might ‘be found in him, not having his own righteouſneſs but that which is through the faith of Chriſt,’ Philip. iii. 9. For in the ſecond covenant there was a transferring on him their ſtate of ſervitude, under which they ſtood bound to make out the ſervice, which was the condition of life: accordingly he wrought the work, and fulfilled the ſervice for life, in their name and ſtead, both in the doing and ſuffering part of it. Now, they being united to him by faith, his righteouſneſs becomes theirs, and is imputed to them. And ſince a holy juſt God inſiſted to have his ſervice fulfilled for life and ſalvation to poor ſinners, and Jeſus Chriſt did that work, not they; it cannot be, that any thing elſe ſhould be imputed to them for righteouſneſs but Chriſt's ſervice, for the performing of which he became a ſervant, Rom. iii. 22. ‘Even the righteouſneſs of God, which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all them that believe.’ 2 Cor. v. 21. ‘For he made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him.’ It is to his bearing the puniſhment, we owe the pardon of all our ſins; and to the obedience given by him only, we owe our acceptance, as poſitively righteous in the ſight of God.

4. Here is a clear ground upon which believers are delivered from the law as a covenant of works. For that broken covenant being ſo far ingroſſed in the covenant with the ſecond Adam, as that from it the ſervice he was to perform in their ſtead, was ſtated in all the parts thereof, it plainly follows, that the ſervice being fully performed by him for them, and being really become theirs by faith, they are wholly delivered from that covenant; ſo that it can demand no more ſervice of them, than a maſter can demand of a ſervant, who, in the perſon of another by him accepted, hath ſerved out his time, and ſo hath a right to the full hire, Rom. vii. 4. ‘Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt.’ John viii. 36. ‘If the Son therefore ſhall make you free, ye ſhall be free indeed.’

5. Here is the ground upon which believers are no more bond-ſervants, to work for life and ſalvation; but advanced to the dignity of ſons, to whom the inheritance belongs by their relation to their Father. For ſince Jeſus Chriſt took on him the form of a bond-ſervant for them; and, having finiſhed that ſervice, became free again; they, being united to Chriſt, can no longer remain bond-ſervants; it being the very end of Chriſt's becoming a bond ſervant, to ſet them free. This is their privilege before the Lord; howbeit, through the weakneſs of their faith, they often ſerve the Lord as bond-men. And ſince it was the Father's equal, who ſerved in the character of a bond-ſervant for them, they are, by the merit of that, advanced to be ſons of the houſe of heaven, Gal. iv. 7. ‘Wherefore thou art no more a ſervant, but a ſon.’

6. Here is the ground upon which believers are freed from the guilt of eternal wrath, and can never fall under condemnation; howbeit their ſins make them liable to the effects of God's fatherly anger. For Chriſt taking on him the form of a bond-ſervant for them, bore all the curſe, due to them for their ſins, whether before or after their union with him: the which ſervice is imputed to them, upon believing in him; and from that moment is ever upon them. The truth is, the curſe would reduce them into the ſtate of bond-ſervants again, as the guilt of eternal wrath, ſpeaks the ſinner on whom it falls to be a bond-ſervant, and not a ſon, Gal. iii. 13. ‘Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us.’ iv. 7. ‘Wherefore thou art no more a ſervant, but a ſon.’ Rom. viii. 1. ‘There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus.’ Iſa. liv. 9. ‘For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have ſworn that the waters of Noah ſhould no more go over the earth; ſo have I ſworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.’

7. Here is the fountain-head of ſanctification through faith in Chriſt; which is the only true ſanctification competent to fallen Adam's children, the ſpring of all holy obedience and good works to be found amongſt them. A ſinful creature, in a ſtate of bondage, under the covenant of works, is a bond ſervant to ſin; for ‘the ſtrength of ſin is the law,’ binding over the ſinner to death, yea, binding him down under death. And, being a bond-ſervant to ſin, he is in bondage to Satan too; ſince the power of ſin is his ſceptre, whereby he rules over the children of fallen Adam. Hence, while the ſinful man continues in bondage under that covenant, ſin retains its full ſway over him; even as the vermine doth over the dead corpſe in the grave: ſo that he can neither be truly good, nor do any thing truly good. But the holy Jeſus becoming a bond-ſervant under the law, anſwered all the demands thereof: and having finiſhed the ſervice, was, of courſe, freed from its yoke. Now, the ſinner uniting with him by faith, Chriſt's ſervice is imputed to him. Hence his bondage under the law is done away; and he partakes more abundantly of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus: ſo the reigning power of ſin and Satan over him is broken, and he dies unto ſin and lives unto righteouſneſs, in holy obedience to the law of the ten commandments, as a rule of life to him in the hand of the Prince of life. And this the apoſtle teacheth, Rom. vii. 5, 6. ‘For when we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſin, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter.’

8. Here is the ground in law, for the perſeverance of the ſaints; that they ſhall never fall away totally nor finally, but the life given them muſt needs be eternal. For the ſervice upon which their life depends, is completely performed by Jeſus Chriſt; and the life, which was the reward of that ſervice, is beſtowed on them in ſome meaſure; which life, can never totally nor finally fail, without the failure of the promiſe, the condition of which is already fulfilled. Wherefore, the time of trial for life and ſalvation to believers, being now over, in the ſecond Adam their head engaging in the ſervice; their perſeverance is as ſure as the faithfulneſs of God can make it. For, as the law ſaith, ‘He that doth theſe things ſhall live:’ ſo the goſpel ſaith, ‘The juſt by faith ſhall live:’ as ſome valuable interpreters read this text, and I think, rightly.

Laſtly, Here is the only ground of their right to complete life and ſalvation in heaven, namely, Chriſt's works and ſervice performed for them, and pleaded by them in the way of believing. For what plea can one have for the hire or reward, but the performance of the ſervice upon the account of which it was promiſed? Now, Chriſt alone performed that ſervice: therefore we cannot found our plea before the Lord for heaven's happineſs, on any other ground but Chriſt's works and ſervice. Paul renounceth all other grounds, while he deſires to ‘be found in Chriſt, not having his own righteouſneſs,——but that which is through the faith of Chriſt,’ Phil. iii. 9. ‘For they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt,’ Rom. v. 17. And the great deſign of the contrivance of ſalvation was, ‘That grace might reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord,’ ver. 21. There is a glorious recompence of reward, that follows the ſaints work and labour of love: but the truth is, it is the reward of the ſervice of their head, not of the ſervice of their hands.

SECONDLY, This doctrine of Chriſt's ſtate of ſervitude, is a moſt powerful incentive to goſpel-obedience; and, being applied to one's ſelf by faith, will be found to be a ſpring of holineſs. And thus it may be improven, (1.) More generally. (2.) More particularly.

Firſt, More generally, in two branches.

I. If ye have any part or lot in this matter of Chriſt's ſervice, let it be the buſineſs of your life to ſerve the Lord Chriſt. And devote yourſelves to the ſervice of God in Chriſt, which is your reaſonable ſervice. Serve him in the duties of worſhip, external and internal: in ſecret, in your families, in the congregations of his people; ſerve him in firſt and ſecond table duties: ſerve him in your civil and natural actions; ‘Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.’ Serve him in doing for him, and ſuffering for him, as he calls you. Set his holy law before you, and know that it is the rule and meaſure of the ſervice ye owe to him. Look upon the ſervice Chriſt performed for you, and let it excite and animate you to ſerve him.

Here is a powerful motive, to engage you to ſerve him. And that it may have due influence upon you, conſider,

1. He was in the form of God, who ſerved for you; ye were bond ſervants to ſin and Satan, the worſt of maſters. If you ‘ look to the rock whence ye were hewn, and to ‘ the hole of the pit whence ye were digged;’ and withal look unto the Son of God, leaving the Father's boſom, deſcending from his throne of majeſty, and taking on the form of a ſervant, therein to ſerve for you; ye muſt needs be haled to his ſervice by the overcoming force of his humiliation. For the love of Chriſt conſtraineth us.

2. He has no need of your ſervice to him, but ye were in abſolute need of his ſervice for you. Though ye had remained bond ſlaves to Satan for ever, all the diſſervice ye could have done to the Lord of glory, could not have hurt him; nor can your ſervice add any thing to his happineſs, Job xxxv. 7, 8. But, without his ſervice for you, ye had periſhed for ever, for your breaking of the firſt covenant of ſervice. Are not ye and your ſervice then wholly his? And, if ye believe ye had periſhed unleſs he had ſerved for you, can ye refuſe him your ſervice?

3. The ſervice he performed for you was hard ſervice; the yoke he puts upon you is eaſy, Matth. xi. 30. He ſerved as a bond ſervant for you; he requires you to ſerve him as a ſon ſerveth his father, Mal. iii. 17. If his people make their own ſervice harder, they owe it not to his Spirit, but to their own ſpirit, Rom. viii. 15. ‘ For ‘ ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear.’ No leſs than obedience, every way perfect, could be accepted at his hand: but he will graciouſly accept ſincere obedience attended with imperfections, at your hand. He had a hot ſervice, a hot fighting ſervice, for you, in the fire of the wrath of God, ſtanding in your room. Behold him in the garden, in a cold night, ſweating great drops of blood at his ſervice! behold him on the croſs, at once grappling with the Father's wrath, the rage and power of devils and men! and hear him calling for your ſervice on that very ſcore, Cant. v. 2. ‘ Open to me—for ‘ my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops ‘ of the night.’

4. His ſervice being finiſhed, he is now exalted to be Lord of all, Philip. ii. 9. ‘ Wherefore God alſo hath ‘ highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jeſus every knee ‘ ſhould bow.’ He is now crowned king in Zion: and all are commanded to kiſs the Son, Pſal. ii. 12. Our Joſeph, who was ſold for a ſervant, is now made ruler over the land; he rides in the ſecond chariot, and it is cried before him, Bow the knee. His ſheaf ſtands upright; let all his brethren bow down before him. Behold him, O believer, who ſerved for thee in the character of a bond ſervant, now highly exalted; behold him ſitting on the right hand of the throne of majeſty, commanding thee to the broad law of the ten commands, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs: and ſtrictly binding thee to obedience thereto, by the authority of God thy Creator and Preſerver; and with the additional tie of his mediatory authority, his right of redemption over thee, and his dying love to thee, which may well ſupply the place of the bond of the covenant of works, and the curſe, the only tie unto obedience which he hath taken from off thee by his ſervice.

5. Chriſt ſerved his hard ſervice for you, to this end, that ye being delivered from your bondage under ſin, might ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs, Luke i. 74. It was for this end the Lord Jeſus undertook his ſervice for you: why would ye then go about to fruſtrate the end of your Redeemer's undertaking for you? It is unthankfulneſs with a witneſs, to refuſe him your ſervice, to which ye are bound by the ſtrongeſt ties of gratitude for the greateſt favour from your beſt friend.

6. Your ſervice is dear bought. It is the price of the blood of the Son of God, ‘ Who gave himſelf for us, ‘ that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify ‘ unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works,’ Tit. ii. 14. Serving of the Lord is a precious privilege, as well as a duty, Rev. xxii. 3. ‘ His ſervants ſhall ſerve ‘ him.’ Ye were in bondage to ſin and Satan, which would not permit you to ſerve the Lord; untill Chriſt by his ſervice took their yoke from off your necks. Ye were bound hand and foot, yea, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, that ye could not ſerve the Lord: untill his precious blood ſet you free, and his death gave you life and ſtrength. And ſhall your ſervice be with-held from the glorious Purchaſer? So far as it is ſo, it is doubtleſs owing to unbelief. O believer, look to the croſs of Chriſt, and behold how he paid for every good work, yea every good word of thine. There is not one of theſe found, or that ſhall be found with thee, but it ſprings from the merit and never failing efficacy of Chriſt's ſervice. And had not the Lord Jeſus taken on him the form of a ſervant for us, there had never been one piece of acceptable ſervice to God, found among the children of men, after the breach of the firſt covenant.

7. There is a glorious reward, gained by Chriſt's ſervice, awaiting all his ſervants at the end of their courſe; even the full enjoyment of God in the other world; in which ye ſhall be completely happy for all eternity, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. ‘ So ſhall we ever be with the Lord.’ Our Lord Jeſus having run in name and on the head of the deſigned heirs of glory, and having won the prize for them all; now ſits on the throne at the end of the race, with the prize in his hand, calling you to make haſte and follow him, and to run ſo, that ye may obtain, 1 Cor. ix. 24. Have reſpect to the recompence of reward, Heb. xi. 26. ſet and keep your eye upon it, as a prize won for you by the great ſervant: and let the hope of it animate you to the hardeſt pieces of ſervice in your way towards it. The time is but ſhort: wherefore, though your ſervice be difficult, it will not be longſome: and the glorious reward will more than counterbalance all your toil. And remember, that, according to your works in his ſervice, ſo will your ſhare of the reward be, greater or ſmaller, 2 Cor. ix. 6. ‘ He which ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ‘ ſparingly; and he which ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap ‘ alſo bountifully.’ The reaſon is, both our ſervice to God, and our reward are purely the fruits of Chriſt's ſervice for us; and ſo they are propportioned to the efficacy of it in us: wherefore, according to the efficacy of Chriſt's ſervice to us; ſo will our ſervice be, and ſuch our reward; and ſo, the greater ſervice, the greater reward.

8. If ye do indeed belong to Chriſt, as theſe for whom he ſerved, ye ſhall certainly ſerve him. For if he was crucified for you, your old man was nailed to the ſame croſs with him, that ſin might be deſtroyed in you, and you might ſerve him: Rom. vi. 6. ‘ Knowing this, that ‘ our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin ‘ might be deſtroyed that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ‘ ſin.’ And your ſervice is a part of the reward of his ſervice, which he cannot loſe; for he has his Father's faithfulneſs engaged for it, in the promiſe of the covenant made to him, Pſal. xxii. 30. ‘ A ſeed ſhall ſerve him.’ they ſhall ſerve him ſincerely here, and perfectly hereafter. So that heaven and earth ſhall be overturned, and the whole courſe of nature reverſed, rather than one ſoul, for which Chriſt ſerved, be left in bondage to his luſts.

Take heed then to yourſelves: for your deliverance from the bondage of your luſts, and your ſerving the Lord, is the neceſſary deciſive evidence of your part in Chriſt, and his ſervice. If ye ſerve him in truth, his ſervice is yours, imputed to you for all the purpoſes of life and ſalvation. If ye ſerve him not, ye have neither part nor lot in that matter, but muſt periſh for ever, Luke xiii. 3. ‘ Except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.’ Rom. viii. 13. ‘ If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die: but if ‘ ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ‘ ye ſhall live.’ If ye be not his ſervants, to ſerve him, ye are ſervants to the devil and your luſts; and ye ſhall die the death of ſlaves for your tranſgreſſions: ye ſhall die under the curſe of the law, ſtaking you down under eternal wrath, from which you ſhall never be able to lift your head: ye ſhall die a ſhameful death, the whole world beholding your ſhame; ye ſhall die a death painful beyond expreſſion, through revenging wrath, like nails and ſpears piercing into your very ſouls; and ye ſhall die a lingering death, ſpun out through all the ages of eternity.

Laſtly, By Chriſt's ſervice there is a ſtrength purchaſed, wherewith ye may ſerve him; and it lies open to you, to be improved in the way of believing, for enabling you to your work, Iſa. xlv. 14. 'Surely ſhall one ſay, In the 'Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.' The ſervice which the Lord Jeſus took off our hand unto himſelf, was what we neither had nor could have ſtrength for. Strength for the ſuffering part of it man never had; ſtrength for the working of it man once indeed had, but now it is loſt. Hence theſe who continue in the bond ſervice ſtill, under the law or covenant of works, can work none at all; they can work no work truly good and acceptable in the ſight of God. And it is vain, upon that view, to bid them work, without directing them, in the firſt place, to get in to Jeſus Chriſt, from under that covenant. But now the Mediator has purchaſed a new ſtock of ſtrength, for the new ſervice which he puts in our hand: and it is treaſured up in him as the head of influences: and in the faith of it we are to ſet about our work, 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is 'in Chriſt Jeſus.' So ſhall we be enabled for the hardeſt ſervice required of us, Philip. iv. 13. 'I can do all things 'through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.' Come then, and reſolutely ply the ſervice he calls you to.

II. If ye have any part or lot in Chriſt's ſervice, ſerve him as ſons and daughters; ſerve him as a ſon ſerveth his father, not as a bond ſervant ſerveth his maſter. If thou art in Chriſt, 'thou art no more a ſervant, but a ſon.' Gal. iv. 7. Serve him then agreeable to the character ye bear before him. And as it is your duty, ſo it is your privilege, that ye have acceſs to ſerve him in that manner. It is the price of Chriſt's blood: ſlight it not. He ſerved as a bond man, that ye might ſerve as ſons. Ye had been bond ſervants for ever, had not the Son of God become a bond-ſervant for you, being 'made under the 'law, that ye might receive the adoption of ſons,' Gal. iv. 4, 5. And indeed he only was fit to ſerve God in that character: none elſe was able to have managed it acceptably. Wherefore,

1. Serve him out of love to him: let your work and labour be a work and labour of love. Behold God's Son ſerving a hard ſervice in your ſtead, from love to his Father, and love to you who were altogether unlovely; and let the love of Chriſt conſtrain you to obedience. Believing views of Chriſt in the form of a ſervant will produce this conſtraining love, 2 Cor. v. 14. 'For the love of Chriſt 'conſtraineth us.' They will alſo prevent your acting from a ſlaviſh fear of puniſhment, ſo unbecoming your ſtate, 2 Tim. i. 7. 'For God hath not given us the ſpi'rit of fear; but of love, and of a ſound mind.'

2. Serve him univerſally, ſo as ye may ſtand perfect and complete in all the will of God. The Spirit of adoption brings men unto this evangelical perfection: but a ſinner in the ſtate of bondage will ſtill have exceptions againſt ſome commanded duty or other, Pſal. cxix. 6. 'Then 'ſhall I not be aſhamed when I have reſpect unto all thy 'commandments.' Serve ye the Lord then as ſons, ſticking at no piece of ſervice commanded, however dangerous; for ſo Chriſt ſerved you, ſticking at no danger.

Laſtly, Serve him conſtantly, to the end, Pſal. cxix. 112. 'I have inclined my heart to perform thy ſtatutes alway, 'even unto the end.' It argues the ſpirit of a ſinner in the ſtate of bondage, to ply the work no longer than the whip is held over one's head, or than one has ſomething to gain to himſelf by his work. Shew yourſelves Sons of God, by ſerving him continually, and never going back to your old maſters again. Remember him who was obedient even unto death.

Secondly, more particularly, If ye have any part in this matter, let the ſame mind be in you which was in Chriſt Jeſus, who for you took on him the form of a ſervant.

1. Be of a loving and charitable diſpoſition towards your brethren. Lay aſide all malice and revenge, envy and grudge at the good of others, and ſhow yourſelves partakers of the Spirit of Chriſt. Love your neighbour as yourſelves. Let the love that Chriſt ſhewed in taking on the form of a ſervant for you, inſpire you with this love.

2. 'As ye have opportunity, do good unto all men, 'eſpecially to the houſhold of faith.' Whatever they be, withhold not ye the good that is in the power of your hand to do them. The Father ſet his love on a ſelect company of mankind, but they behoved to be bought with a price: and the Son conſented to pay this price for them, and to take on him the form of a ſervant for that effect. If the ſame mind be in you that was in Chriſt, it will not divert you from doing good to men, though they are unworthy of kindneſs, have done wrong to you, and ye cannot expect compenſation from them. Could any of theſe arguments have prevailed with the Son of God to withhold his helping hand from us, we had been as yet without all hope. And let it move you to do good to the ſaints eſpecially, that they are the perſons in particular for whom Chriſt took on him the form of a ſervant.

3. Put on bowels of mercy towards thoſe in diſtreſs. A ſelfiſh diſpoſition, void of ſympathy, is moſt unlike that mind which was in Chriſt Jeſus, who took on him the form of a ſervant, to relieve miſerable ſinners. But 'he 'ſhall have judgment without mercy that hath ſhewed 'no mercy,' James ii. 13.

4. Shew a regard to juſtice in your dealings. It was from a regard to juſtice, and that the ſervice due unto God from the elect, might be performed, that Chriſt took on him the form of a ſervant, and made out the ſervice.

5. Be humble, and condeſcend to low things neceſſary for the good of others. For this we have the example of Jeſus Chriſt recorded in John xiii. 14, 15. 'If I then 'your Lord and maſter have waſhed your feet, ye alſo 'ought to waſh one another's feet. For I have given you 'an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you.'

Laſtly, Be mortified to the pomp and ſplendor of the world. Be ready to forego the comforts of a preſent life, 'looking unto Jeſus, who, for the joy that was ſet before 'him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame,' and ſit down contented, though the world ſhould neither give you its good word, nor kind look. All the time our bleſſed Lord was in the world, he was in the character of a bond ſervant; and accordingly had but coarſe entertainment, hard lodging, being held in no reputation, and at length buffeted, ſcourged, and crucified.

The peculiar MERCY and BUSINESS of LIFE opened up, and applied.

Several SERMONS, preached at Etterick, in the Year 1727.

ISAIAH xxxviii. 19.

The living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, as I do this day: the father to the children ſhall make known thy truth.

IT is much to be deſired, that men would conſider the great buſineſs of their life; but few do it, till it is juſt going or gone out of their hands. Hezekiah had been at the brink of the grave, and learned thoſe juſt thoughts of life, which he gives us with much concern in the text. Wherein we have,

1. The mercy of life: The living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, &c. Verſe 18. he had been ſpeaking of the dead, the inhabitants of the gloomy manſions of the grave; and in oppoſition to theſe he here ſpeaks of the living, and in a triumphant manner propoſeth to ſpeak of them, as ſeeing the mercy of life.

2. Wherein the mercy of life conſiſts. And the deciſion of this is in a vein of thought peculiar to ſpiritual men.

1*ſt*, Aſk the carnal man where lies the mercy of life? And,

(1.) If he is in proſperity, he reckons the mercy of life lies, in that the living man may enjoy the pleaſures of ſenſe, and may lay up wealth for him and his; all which ſtern death robs a man of. But there is not one word of this here.

(2.) If he is in adverſity, he either cannot ſee the mercy of life at all, but thinks they are beſt off that are lying at eaſe in the duſt. So croſſes make him wiſh to be away. At beſt, he reckons it the mercy of life, that he is not where he would be worſe, viz. in hell. But there is not a word of all this neither in the text.

2*dly*, Aſk the renewed man in an ill frame of ſpirit, where lies the mercy of life? If he is in outward proſperity, he will be ready to reckon it lies in the comforts of this life. If he is in adverſity, the troubles of life are ſo great, that the mercy of it is ſmall in his view; only heaven bulks in his eyes, as a place of reſt from trouble. But there is nothing of this neither in the text.

The deciſion is, The mercy of life lies in the buſineſs of life, to wit, being ſerviceable for God in the world: The living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, &c. Hezekiah counts that the great mercy of life, to have acceſs to be uſeful for God in the world. Which ſpeaks (1.) A high eſteem of God and his ſervice, as men count it a favour to be allowed to ſerve their prince. (2.) An ardent love to him, as men delight to ſerve the intereſts of thoſe they dearly love. This will be to a ſpiritual man the moſt deſirable thing in life: Phil. i. 20, 21. 'According to my 'earneſt expectation and my hope, that in nothing I ſhall 'be aſhamed, but that with all boldneſs, as always, ſo 'now alſo Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my body, whether 'it be by life or by death. For to me to live is Chriſt, 'and to die is gain.' This is a juſt endearment of life. Now, the buſineſs of life, is twofold.

1. To praiſe or glorify God in the world; to ſpeak of the perfections of his nature, and ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath called us, among men, to the advancement of his kingdom here under the ſun: to ſtrike up beams of his glory in a dark world, and to commend him and his way before and to others. Now, here conſider,

1*ſt*, Whoſe is this privilege: The living, i. e. the living all along in a ſucceſſion of generations to the end of the world. That is the import of the doubling of this word. This acceſs to the praiſing of God in the world, is peculiar to the living. And,

(1.) It is not thoſe that are now dead, but thoſe that are now living, that have acceſs to ſhew forth his praiſe, in a world where he is ſo much diſhonoured; to ſide with him, and take his part againſt his enemies. It is true, the ſouls of dead ſaints are praiſing God in heaven in the loftieſt ſtrains: but what better is the world of theſe praiſes? No more than they that are ſitting in a dark room down ſtairs, are the better of a glorious lamp ſhining in the upper room. Is there ever a poor ſinner brought acquainted and to fall in love with Chriſt by their means? No; their praiſes of God are to ſinners here as if they were not; they hear them not. Is the kingdom of Chriſt in the world advanced by theſe praiſes? No. It is the living, the living only, that have acceſs to thoſe pieces of ſervice to God. The living man that ſits in a cote-houſe, has the acceſs to glorify God in the world that no ſaint in heaven has.

(2.) If thoſe that are now living were once dead, they will have no more acceſs to praiſe him in the world; but thoſe that will be then living: and ſo on to the end. Men will go off the ſtage one after another, but they will not carry that work with them; but it will ſtill be left in the hands of the living, and no other, whatever they make of it. There are heads, tongues, and hands of miniſters and Chriſtians lying in the grave, that have contrived, ſpoken, and acted well for God in the world; but now, if the cauſe of God and religion, which is very low, were at the laſt gaſp, there is no more help to be had from thoſe heads, tongues, and hands. The living only muſt ſpeak and act for it, or it muſt lie.

2*dly*, An inſtance of it: As I do this day. Hezekiah was recovered from ſickneſs, and he gives God the praiſe of it. He looked on it as his bounden duty to fall cloſely again to that buſineſs of life, which was likely to have been taken out of his hands by death. What time of life the Lord lengthens out to us, after threatening a removal, we ſhould be careful to uſe for the honour of God.

2. To propagate his name and praiſe: The father to the children ſhall make known thy truth. It is the ſpecial buſineſs of life, to endeavour that the name of God may be glorified in the world, when we are dead. It is a black mark for perſons not to care what come of the world if they were out of it. A child of God will be concerned, that religion may be kept up in it: and while he is living, he has acceſs to contribute to it. And conſider,

1*ſt*, What he has acceſs to do for that end; namely, to praiſe God to the younger ſort, that are likely to live after he is gone; eſpecially to his own children. They may ſhew to them how lovely God is, and how deſirable his way; and when they have children, they may do the ſame to them; and ſo on, God's praiſe will be kept up in the world.

Now obſerve, he is ſtill ſpeaking of the living, for theſe are the ſubject expreſsly to be ſpoken of. Q. d. As for the living, the living father may praiſe thee to the living ſon. It imports,

(1.) If the father die, though the children live, he can do God no more honour, and them no more ſervice that way. If he has neglected his duty to his family in his life, he cannot come back again to mend the matter. If he left them ignorant of God, though one word from him could ſave them from the pit, he cannot give it.

(2.) If the children die, though the father live, he can do God no more honour, and them no more ſervice that way. He may take care of their duſt, but he can do no more for their ſouls; but when one of them falls, that work is at an end.

2*dly*, How he may do it, how he may commend him to them; namely, by making him known to them, as an object worthy of their confidence: Shall make known thy truth. The expreſſion in the Hebrew is conciſe, He may make known, unto thy truth. The word rendered to hope, verſe 18. properly ſignifying, intenſely to look, Neh. ii. 13. 15. is underſtood. So two things are to be conſidered.

(1.) The proper method of praiſing or commending God to the riſing generation; and that is, by making him known. The more he is known, the more lovely will he appear. 'God is light.' The beſt way to commend the ſun to one ſitting in a dark room, is to open the windows, and let him look to it with his eyes; the beſt way to commend God and religion to the generation riſing, is to labour that they may know them by teaching.

(2.) The great thing we are to have in view in that work. It is, that they may look intenſely unto his truth; that they may look away from the vanities the world is holding out to them, to be embraced as their portion; and that they may look to the truth of God in Chriſt, in the promiſe of the goſpel, by an eye of faith, fixed on it, and hold by that as their ſure portion.

This is what men may do for the riſing generation, and the view they ſhould do it on; but God only can give it efficacy. No doubt Hezekiah did as he ſaid, commended God, and made him known to Manaſſeh his ſon: but how unſucceſsful all he did that way was, is notour from the wicked life his ſon led. Yet Hezekiah's work was accepted, and his prayers heard in the end; and perhaps his words were minded too, in Manaſſeh's converſion at long run.

Three doctrines are deducible from the words.

DOCT. I. It is the peculiar mercy of life, that the living only are, and all along will be, thoſe that have acceſs to praiſe and glorify God in the world.

DOCT. II. It is the ſpecial buſineſs and privilege of life, to propagate religion, God's name and praiſe, the ſtanding generation to the riſing generation, the fathers to the children, all along.

DOCT. III. The true way of propogating religion, the ſtanding to the riſing generation, is, That the former make God known to the latter, ſo as they may betake themſelves unto him, his truth and faithfulneſs, by faith and truſt.

We ſhall handle each of theſe doctrines in order.

DOCT. I. It is the peculiar mercy of life, that the living only are, and all along will be, thoſe that have acceſs to praiſe and glorify God in the world.

In proſecuting this doctrine, we ſhall,

I. Conſider the praiſing or glorifying God in the world.

II. Shew how it is a valuable mercy and privilege of the living, that they have acceſs to praiſe God in the world.

III. How this acceſs to praiſe God in the world, is and will be the peculiar mercy of the living.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the praiſing or glorifying God in the world. And here we ſhall ſhew,

1. What praiſing of God is.

2. What are the peculiarities of the praiſes of the living.

Firſt, What praiſing of God is. It is the acknowledging and declaring of the glorious excellencies of God as he has manifeſted himſelf in his word and works; and imports,

1. The belief of the being of God: Heb. xi. 6. ‘He ‘that cometh to God muſt believe that he is.’ Atheiſm wholly cuts off the praiſes of God; for who can praiſe that which he does not believe to be? The works of creation and providence proclaim his being: but ſuch is the natural enmity of man againſt God, that he ſecretly wiſheth there were not a God, and ſo is diſpoſed to believe ſo, if he could get any footing for it, Pſal. xiv. 1. ‘The fool ‘hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God:’ and that is at the root of mens living to a contrary end to his praiſe. Tit. i. ult. ‘They profeſs that they know God; but in ‘works they deny him, being abominable and diſobedi‘ent, and unto every good work reprobate.’

2. The knowledge of God. To whom he is an unknown God, he will be an unpraiſed God. Hence ignorance is ruining, Iſ. xxvii. 11. ‘It is a people of no un‘derſtanding; therefore he that made them, will not have ‘mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them ‘no favour.’ To live to the praiſing of God requires,

1*ſt*, The knowledge of who he is. We are baptized in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, One God. If we know him not ſo, we know not the God to whom we are engaged in baptiſm; and ſo cannot praiſe him.

2*dly*, The knowledge of what he is: the diſcerning of his glorious perfections, which are the matter of his praiſe. We muſt know him as he is God infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in his being, wiſdom, power, holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, and truth; more excellent than any creature, being the fountain of all excellency in them.

3*dly*, The knowledge of what he has done. His works are glorious, creation, providence, and redemption. By them he ſhews what he is, Pſal. xix. 1. ‘The heavens ‘declare the glory of God: and the firmament ſheweth ‘his handy work,’ and we are to think on them for that end, that we may from thence praiſe him, Pſal. cxi. 2. ‘The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all them ‘that have pleaſure therein.’ And it is highly offenſive not to regard them: Pſal. xxviii. 5. ‘Becauſe they regard ‘not the work of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands, ‘he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up.’

3. The love of God. Love is the mother of praiſe, and natively brings it forth. They that love not God, can never acceptably praiſe him. ‘God is love,’ not only ſubjectively, but objectively, wholly lovely. And ſo he is in the eyes of all who live to his praiſe. To them every attribute of God is lovely. The holineſs and purity of his nature is moſt lovely to them, Exod. xv. 11. ‘Who ‘is like unto thee, O Lord, glorious in holineſs, fearful ‘in praiſes, doing wonders?’ Pſal. xxx. 4. ‘Sing unto ‘the Lord, O ye ſaints of his, and give thanks at the re‘membrance of his holineſs.’ His works are lovely. The works of creation and providence are lovely works; but the moſt lovely is the redemption of the world by Chriſt.

4. The admiration of God; which is love raiſed to a high pitch. This is the neareſt cauſe of praiſe; for it is the heart ſwelling with admiration of the object, that burſts forth in praiſes. They that live to God's praiſe, are admirers of him: they ſee all excellencies in him to be tranſcendent, and believe there are infinite treaſures of excellency in him which they cannot comprehend. So their heart ſaith, ‘Whom have I in heaven but thee? and ‘there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee.’ Pſ. lxxiii. 25. Launching into the ocean of the glories of his nature and works, they ſee it is ſhoreleſs: Pſal. cvi. 2. ‘Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord?

5. laſtly, The expreſſing that love to him: Micah vii. 18. ‘Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth ini‘quity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant ‘of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, ‘becauſe he delighteth in mercy.’ The eſſence of praiſing God lies here, and is the great end for which man was made: and it is the native becoming return the creature is to make to its Creator, from whom it has received all, and to whom it can give nothing, but only commend him, and ſet forth his glory. And this not being confined to words, is twofold.

1*ſt*, Vocal, by words. It is called the calves of our lips, Hoſ. xiv. 2. Man's tongue is called his glory, as being a prime inſtrument wherewith he is furniſhed for praiſing and glorifying God. And thus we are to praiſe him, in the duties of worſhip, ſinging his praiſes; and in ſpeaking to his praiſe, as occaſion offers.

2*dly*, Real, by deeds or actions, though it be not accompanied with words; for as there is a practical atheiſm, ſo there is a practical praiſing or glorifying God. And this is the main thing in that praiſe which is the end of life, without which vocal praiſe avails not. It is twofold.

(1.) In heart, 1 Cor. vi. 20. ‘Ye are bought with a ‘price: therefore glorify God in your ſpirit, which is ‘God's.’ Men's praiſe of men from the teeth outward may paſs, but God knows the heart; and if the heart harmonize not with the tongue, it cannot be accepted of him, Iſ. xxix. 13. He muſt be praiſed in our underſtanding, eſteeming him above all; in our will, chuſing him above all; and in our affections, loving him above all.

(2.) In life and converſation: Matth. v. 16. ‘Let your ‘light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good ‘works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.’ A holy life is a ſhining light, to let a blind world ſee the glory of God; for as God has expreſſed his nature in his word, ſo his word is expreſſed again in a holy life. The ſtudy of holineſs ſays God is holy; mourning for every ſin proclaims him ſpotleſs; and horror of ſecret, as well as of open ſins, is a teſtimony to his omnipreſence and omniſcience.

Secondly, What are the peculiarities of the praiſes of the living? The praiſes of living ſaints have theſe peculiarities, which the dead have no acceſs to.

1. They are the praiſes of the whole man, in ſoul and body too: 1 Cor. vi. 20. ‘Ye are bought with a price: ‘therefore glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, ‘which are God's.’ Thoſe of the dead are of their ſouls only; but the living have acceſs to praiſe God, ſoul and body. Even the body hath, for the time of life, acceſs to join in this honourable work: but death breaks it in pieces, that it can no more bear a part in God's praiſe.

2. They are praiſes which may ſpread among the living: Col. iii. 16. ‘Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you ‘richly in all wiſdom; teaching and admoniſhing one ‘another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, ſing‘ing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.’ The voice of the praiſes of living ſaints, may be heard under this vault of the heavens; but the praiſes above, as high a ſtrain as they are in, reach not hither, to this our earth.

3. They are praiſes raiſed by the way to the heavenly kingdom, which the dead have no more acceſs to join in. The living are upon the road, the dead are at their journey's end. There is a ſong of praiſe raiſed in the houſe of our pilgrimage, but there is a deep ſilence in the grave. The wilderneſs-ſong is peculiar to the living.

4. They are praiſes of faith, not of ſight: 2 Cor. v. 7.

‘ For we walk by faith, not by ſight.’ The ſaints in glory raiſe a ſong of praiſe to God, upon their ſeeing and enjoying; the living ſaints, upon their believing what their eye hath not ſeen. Praiſing of God on what one ſees of him, is more comfortable to the party himſelf: but praiſing him, upon what one believes of him, is more to the honour of God: John xx. 29. ‘ Jeſus ſaith unto him, ‘ Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed: ‘ bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have be‘ lieved.’ Rom. iv. 20, 21. ‘ Abraham ſtaggered not at ‘ the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong ‘ in faith, giving glory to God: and being fully perſuad‘ ed, that what he had promiſed, he was able to perform.’

5. laſtly, They are praiſes to God amidſt a deal of diſhonours done him. David takes notice of God's covering a table to him in the midſt of his enemies: and God will take notice of praiſes given him in the midſt of thoſe that diſhonour him: Rev. ii. 13. ‘ I know thy works, ‘ and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satan's ſeat is: ‘ and thou holdeſt faſt my name, and haſt not denied ‘ my faith, even in thoſe days wherein Antipas was my ‘ faithful martyr, who was ſlain among you, where Sa‘ tan dwelleth.’ The ſaints in glory praiſe him, there being none to open a mouth to his diſhonour: but living ſaints praiſe him, in the face of contradiction by a wicked world: Prov. xxviii. 4. ‘——Such as keep the law, ‘ contend with the wicked.’

II. The ſecond general head is, to ſhew, How it is a valuable mercy and privilege of the living, that they have acceſs to praiſe God in the world. The living ſhould value this as their privilege.

1. In regard they might juſtly ere now have been put beyond all poſſibility of praiſing God at all; but might have been blaſpheming in hell: Lam. iii. 22. ‘ It is of ‘ the Lord's mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe ‘ his compaſſions fail not.’ The rich man in hell, had no no acceſs to praiſe God: the burden of wrath lying on the damned there, will hold down their praiſes, and change them to howlings.

2. In regard of the honour thereby to be brought to God in the world; which in itſelf is moſt valuable, and therefore is man's chief end: 1 Cor. x. 31. ‘ Whether ‘ therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to ‘ the glory of God.’ He lives to good purpoſe, that lives to the honour of God; and he that doth not ſo live, doth at beſt but trifle away a life, never reaching the main end. Nothing ſhould be ſo dear to us as God's honour; and therefore our all muſt be laid out on it as he calls for it. And it is the mercy of life, that we have acceſs to honour him in the world.

3. In regard of the good to be thereby done to others. The view of this made Paul content to abide out of heaven for ſome time; Phil. i. 23, 24. ‘ I am in a ſtrait be‘ twixt two, having a deſire to depart, and to be with ‘ Chriſt; which is far better: nevertheleſs, to abide in ‘ the fleſh, is more needful for you.’ O what a ſatisfying thought muſt it be, to be inſtrumental towards the ſaving of a ſoul from hell, and bringing it to acquaintance with Chriſt! No body knows what a good word at any time may do: and to this the living have acceſs only; but once dead, men can be no more ſerviceable to the world of mankind, Eccleſ. ix. 10.——‘ For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt.

4. It is an honour to ſerve and honour God in the world. This makes a man truly worthy and honourable. The dignity of the maſter, and the work, reflects an honour on the ſervant that does it, Pſal. lxxxiv. 10. ‘ A day in ‘ thy courts is better than a thouſand: I had rather be a ‘ door-keeper in the houſe of my God, than to dwell in ‘ the tents of wickedneſs.’ And ſince no maſter is ſo honourable as God is, it muſt be a peculiar honour to be ſerviceable to him, Heb. xi.

5. This is the only true balance of that meanneſs, and trouble, that attends this life. Conſidering the ſpiritual original, make, and vaſt capacity of the ſoul of man; it will appear but a very mean thing to be taken up in eating, drinking, building, or planting, on this curſed earth. From the ſeat of the bleſſed could we take our proſpect, men ſo employed here, would appear as a company of emmets buſy in a hillock. The troubles that attend this life are innumerable, and they fly about us, as the midges do in a hot ſummer-day. All which viewed by the ſoul, are apt to make a noble mind ſick of this life, as a bird would be of a cage. The only balance for all this is, that in it there is acceſs to praiſe God in the world. Hereby the meaneſt things are ennobled, and the hardeſt things ſoftened, that God is to be honoured in thoſe.

6. As men have acceſs to praiſe God in this world, they have acceſs to raiſe their reward in another world. Men think it a great matter to have acceſs to raiſe an eſtate for themſelves: but we have acceſs, by our honouring of God in this world, to raiſe our reward in the other. For though the Lord doth not give eternal glory for our works, he gives it according to them: 1 Cor. ix. 6. ‘ He which ‘ ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ſparingly: and he ‘ which ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully.’ And they that have ſhined here in uſefulneſs moſt, will ſhine there in glory moſt, Dan. xii. 3. ‘ They that be ‘ wiſe ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament; and ‘ they that turn many to righteouſneſs, as the ſtars for e‘ ver and ever.’

7. laſtly, The praiſing of God carries a reward in its boſom: Pſal. xix. 11. ‘ In keeping of thy judgments, ‘ there is a great reward.’ There is a ſecret ſatisfaction in one's having done his duty, endeavouring to live to the honour of God. And particularly it makes a pleaſant reflection, when one is come to the end of his courſe: as in the caſe of Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 7. ‘ I have fought a good ‘ fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith.’ Compared with what our Lord ſays, John xvii. 4. ‘ I ‘ have glorified thee on earth; I have finiſhed the work ‘ which thou gaveſt me to do.’ And he that praiſeth God to others, is himſelf partaker of the fruits.

III. The third general head is, to ſhew, How this acceſs to praiſe God in the world, is, and will be the peculiar mercy of the living.

1. It is the peculiar mercy of us who are now living on the face of the earth: it is peculiar, I ſay, to us at this time. They who are yet unborn, can do nothing; they who are now dead, have no more acceſs to praiſe God in this world. There have been many generations before us; and millions of men and women are gone from hence to another world, who ſometime had their turn of acceſs to this praiſe; but now, though they are, yet none of them all have acceſs to join us in praiſing God.

2. In all time to come, to the end of the world, this privilege will be confined to thoſe who for the time ſhall be on the ſtage. There will be generations after us, as there have been before us; and the work will be devolved on the next generation, for their time. And then they will go, and another riſe up in their ſtead, and get the work put into their hands, and ſo on to the end. The reaſons are,

1ſt, There is no returning to this world, when once gone. Death is a flitting for good and all, never to come back. Job was ſenſible of this, when he ſaid, ‘ I go whence ‘ I ſhall not return, even to the land of darkneſs, and the ‘ ſhadow of death.’ We muſt praiſe him before we lie down in the grave, or never, for there is no riſing out of it to that work, Pſal. lxxxviii. 10. We cannot come back, and God will not bring us back.

2dly, The ſtate and buſineſs of the two worlds are, by an unalterable purpoſe, made different. Here men are in a ſtate of trial; there in a ſettled ſtate for ever, according to their management in the trial. Here is the place of working at the command and for the honour of the maſter: there is the place of the reward of their works. If the ſun ſhould come back over from weſt to eaſt, and ſo make night day too, the ordinance of heaven would be quite altered; ſo no body expects it. As little is the acceſs of any but the living, to praiſe God in the world, to be expected or looked for.

3dly, This world is under a peculiar mark of divine indignation, as defiled by ſin, and ſhould have been deſtroyed, when it was defiled, had not the mediator interpoſed to keep up the tottering fabric for ſome time for the elects ſake. So men are haſted through it, as through a defiled place, and have an opportunity of praiſing God by the way. And therefore it cannot be expected, that ever that opportunity ſhall be repeated.

Laſtly, When the dead ſhall live again, this world ſhall be deſtroyed. As long as we ſhall lie in our graves, this world will laſte, but when we ſhall live again at the reſurrection, it ſhall be conſumed by the general conflagration. So there is no acceſs to praiſe God in the world, but for thoſe that now live, and that ſhall live to the end, Rev. xx. 22. ‘ The dead were judged out of thoſe things ‘ which were written in the books, according to their ‘ works.’ Chap. xxi. 1. ‘ And I ſaw a new heaven, and ‘ a new earth: for the firſt heavens and the firſt earth ‘ were paſſed away; and there was no more ſea.’ In the new heavens and earth God will be praiſed, but he will have no more praiſes here off the hand of any, when once they are gone off the ſtage, which will fall down under the laſt generation to be on it.

USE 1. of Information. Hence learn,

1. That the buſineſs of life is to honour God in the world. And if that be ſo, many have been many years on it, that have never yet fallen to their buſineſs, nay nor once ſeriouſly laid to heart what their buſineſs is. Hear the great Maſter ſaying to you, Matth. xx. 6. ‘ Why ſtand ‘ ye here all the day idle?’ and ſee how ye will anſwer that queſtion. Ye are buſy doing nothing, worſe than nothing: but what are you doing for God? Ye are living, but what honour comes to God by your living? I beſeech you conſider this, as ye will anſwer it to God, who hath ſaid, Mal. i. 6. ‘ A ſon honoureth his father, ‘ and a ſervant his maſter: if then I be a father, where ‘ is mine honour? and if a maſter, where is my fear?’

Object. 1. Some I fear will think, though not ſay, that they have other buſineſs to fill their hands with, how to get a throughbearing in the world for them and theirs. Anſw. Ah, is another world not worth your conſideration? Or can ye think that ever ye ſhall enjoy God in that world, who are not careful to honour him here? 1 Sam. ii. 30. ‘ Them that honour me, I will honour; and they that ‘ deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed.’ To ſpend all the time you live in wreſtling with this world for a throughbearing, and after ye are dead to wreſtle with the wrath of God for ever, is a ſad tryſt; better ye had never been born. Be concerned to honour God while ye live; and God will ſee to your proviſion while ye live, and make you happy after.

Object. But I have no acceſs to do any thing for the honour of God, in reſpect of my circumſtances in the world: worldly buſineſs is by providence laid to my hand for the buſineſs of my life.

Anſw. 1*ſt*, It is a common miſtake in point of practice, that there are any who have no acceſs to honour God in the world. Though ſome are placed in higher and more extenſive ſpheres of activity for God, yet there is no ſtation ſo low in the world, but it is a ſphere wherein people may honour God, if they have a heart for it. This you may ſee verified in the parable of the talents, Matth. xxv. 14, 15. ‘ The kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling ‘ into a far country, who called his own ſervants, and de‘ livered unto them his goods: and unto one he gave ‘ five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every ‘ man according to his ſeveral ability, and ſtraightway ‘ took his journey.’ If one is in life, though never ſo low, according to the text, he may honour God. If one is a magiſtrate, or a church officer, he has acceſs to honour God among thoſe over whom he is ſet. Though he be neither, if he is a perſon of weight and conſideration in the place where he lives; as far as that weight goes, ſo far goes the ſphere of his activity for God, which he is to fill up by honouring of God. If he is a maſter of a family, there is a ſphere of activity for God he is put in. If he is a ſingle member of a family, he has a ſphere of activity among other ſingle members of it. To this purpoſe ſpeaks the apoſtle, 1 Cor. vii. 24. ‘ Brethren, let e‘ very man wherein he is called, therein abide with God.’

2*dly*, It is the honouring of God in our ſeveral ſtations that is the true honouring of him. That we cannot do for the honouring of God what does not belong to our ſtation, is ſo far from being our ſin, that it would be a diſhonouring of him to attempt it. The moon is uſeful to the world, though it ſhines not by day; the ſtars too, though they ſhine not ſo bright as the moon. The hands are uſeful to the body, though one does not walk on them; the feet, though one does not ſee with them, &c. Are you a child of a family? your buſineſs of life as ſuch is to be an obedient child: are you a ſervant? yours is to be a faithful ſervant. Whatever relation you ſtand in, ye are to honour God by a conſcientious practice of the duties of your relation.

3*dly*, Whatever buſineſs God has laid to your hand, follow it as a duty from God laid upon you: Col. iii. 17. ‘ Whatſoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name ‘ of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God and the Fa‘ ther by him.’ And ver. 23. ‘ Whatſoever ye do, do it ‘ heartily, as to the Lord.’ Set about your buſineſs as commanded you of God, acting in it as under the eye of God, and looking to his word as your rule, and to the merit of Chriſt for God's acceptance of it. Whatever trials and ſufferings the Lord lays on you, bear them patiently; and bear them for Chriſt's ſake that bare greater for us; and look for the acceptance of your bearing them through Chriſt. So ſhall the honouring of God be the buſineſs of your life, whatever your circumſtances are.

2. The buſineſs of honouring God in the world, formerly in the hands of the former generation, is now devolved on you. See what ye will do with it, Pſal. cxlv. 4. ‘ One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another, ‘ and ſhall declare thy mighty acts.’ The former generation of the righteous, by keeping the law, contended with the wicked, and maintained the honour of God in the world; they rowed againſt the ſtream of an ungodly crew, in the face of perſecution, till they fell by death holding up the ſtandard for the honour of God: and then they gave it you, ſaying, ‘ The living, the living, he ſhall ‘ praiſe thee, as I do this day; the father to the children ‘ ſhall make known thy truth.’ On this I would ſay,

1*ſt*, Ye muſt anſwer for the ſtandard now. If it go now while ye live, your life ſhall go for ever for it, tho' ye were left alone to hold it up: Pſal. lx. 4. ‘ Thou haſt ‘ given a banner to them that fear thee: that it may be ‘ diſplayed becauſe of the truth.’ Mark viii. ult. ‘ Who‘ ſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my ‘ words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him ‘ alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he cometh ‘ in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.’ Take heed then, there is a ſacred truſt committed into your hands; the generation of martyrs all along have conveyed it to you at the expence of their blood, it having been ſet up firſt at the expence of the blood of Chriſt.

2*dly*, Ye muſt either hold it up, or treacherouſly deſert into the enemies camp, Matth. xii. 30. He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad. Many ſet up for neutraliſts; they go not into all exceſs with the openly profane, but they are as far from making it the buſineſs of their life to honour God. God will rank ſuch with his enemies: Pſal. cxxv. ult. ‘ As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ‘ ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the work‘ ers of iniquity.’

3*dly*, The ſaints of former generations will condemn you, as a ſpurious brood of treacherous men, and made ſo little account of what they wared their all on to tranſmit to you: 1 Cor. vi. 2. ‘ Do ye not know that the ſaints ‘ ſhall judge the world?’ Ye do by your ungodly lives, diſhonouring God, declare them fools: the day will come, that they will declare you fools, though ye have come out of their loins: Rev. xix. 3. ‘ And again they ſaid, ‘ Alleluia. And her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever.’

3. The buſineſs of honouring God in the world ye are to tranſmit to the ſucceeding generation, ſince it is the living, all along in a ſucceſſion of generations that have acceſs to the praiſing of God, Pſal. lxxviii. 2, 3, 4. ‘ I ‘ will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark ‘ ſayings of old: which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, ſhewing to the generations to come, the praiſes of the Lord; and his ſtrength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.' As ye have received the ſtandard from the former, ye are to hand it down to the ſucceeding generation; that when ye are gone, inſtead of the fathers, there may be the children. See then what ye do, that God may be honoured when ye are in the duſt.

1ſt, It lies on every one of you to do for it ſomething: Rom. xiv. 7. 'For none of us liveth to himſelf, and no man dieth to himſelf.' Love to God and your neighbour binds it on you; and none of you can want occaſion for it, while ye live among perſons, ſome of whom may live after you; and have a tongue to ſpeak, and hands to act.

2dly, If ye do it not, the honour of God is far from your heart. They that have nothing of God to communicate to others, have nothing of God within themſelves. Grace is a fire, and fire will go about to ſet on fire whatever is next it; ſo that if it do not burn, it is becauſe it is not combuſtible. In the creation of plants, every tree was made with its ſeed in itſelf; ſo it is in the new creation of the trees of righteouſneſs.

3dly, If ye do it not, ye lay a ſtumbling block before the ſucceeding generation, which they may be ruined by. The generation of Jews in Chriſt's time rejected the goſpel, as they murdered Chriſt, they have murdered ſixteen generations of their offſpring ſince. What will come of the ſucceeding generation that looks to you, that live not to the honour of God? When God calls for the ſtandard of his honour at their hand, they will ſay, they never ſaw it; though that will not excuſe them, it will aggravate your condemnation.

4. Know, that ye muſt honour God in the world now or never: Eccl. ix. 10. 'Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt.' Now is the accepted time, wherein ye may act for your own ſalvation; miſs the time, and the door will be ſhut on you never to be opened again, Prov. i. 24. &c. Now is the working time for the honour of God; miſs it, and this occaſion you will never more have. I would aſk you, 1ſt, Does it concern you to honour God? or is it none of your buſineſs? If the Father created you, certainly ye are bound to live for his honour. If the Son redeemed you, there is a double tie on you to live for him who died for you. If the Holy Ghoſt has ſanctified you, he has fitted and diſpoſed you for it.

2dly, When will ye lay out yourſelf for it then? It is not a work to be done at any time, but confined to one time, the time of life, John ix. 14. 'I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.' Now the glaſs is ſet up to you: there is much of it run, as ye may ſee by looking to the lower end, the time ye have lived: the upper end ye cannot ſee, what time ye have yet to live; how ſoon it may run out, ye know not. But it will never be turned for you. When the laſt ſand runs out, the word is given, The Maſter allows no more time for his work to you, Give account of your ſtewardſhip.

5. laſtly, Life is valuable, as giving acceſs to honour God in the world. Hence ſays Hezekiah in the text and context, Iſa. xxxviii. 18, 19. 'The grave cannot praiſe thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, as I do this day; the father to the children ſhall make known thy truth.' There are many impreſſions of vanity in life. In itſelf it is become a vapour ſuddenly vaniſhing; it is like a poſt for ſwift paſſage, a dream for vanity. It is the place of rendeavous for innumerable troubles and afflictions; and is a low ſtation for an immortal ſoul, with much meanneſs about it. There are two things which it is valuable for, viz. that there is acceſs in it, 1ſt, To act for eternal ſalvation to ourſelves, which the dead can no more do: 2 Cor. vi. 2.——'Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of ſalvation.' And in this reſpect an hour's life may be worth a thouſand worlds, becauſe eternity may depend on it, and heaven be ſecured.

2dly, To act for the honour of God in the world, which the dead have no more acceſs to. To a good man an opportunity of doing good is valuable, as to an ill man to do miſchief. What folk love, they will value acceſs to ſerve: ſo the ſinner values acceſs to ſerve his luſts, and the ſaint to ſerve his Lord. So, on this conſideration,

(1.) Life is carefully and honourably to be preſerved, as a valuable thing; and not to be thrown away, by neglect of the means of its preſervation, or expoſing it wilfully to means of deſtruction: Exod. xx. 13. 'Thou ſhalt not kill.'

(2.) The acceſs to honour God in life, is to be laid in balance with the troubles of life, that the former may downweigh the latter, by that overweight that God's honour bears to our caſe: Phil. i. 20. 'According to my earneſt expectation, and my hope, that in nothing I ſhall be aſhamed, but that with all boldneſs, as always, ſo now alſo Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.'

(3.) It is nicely to be improven to its proper ends, as a precious opportunity; every filing of it is to be gathered up as a gold ſparkling. Hence Paul exhorts to 'redeem the time, becauſe the days are evil,' Eph. v. 16.

USE 2. of Reproof to ſeveral ſorts of perſons.

1. To thoſe who look on the buſineſs of praiſing and honouring God in the world as a burden. In itſelf it is the mercy of life; but they treat it as the plague of life. They are, as Doeg, detained before the Lord; and any holy exerciſe is a wearineſs to them; Amos viii. 5. 'When will the new moon be gone, that we may ſell corn? and the ſabbath, that we may ſet forth wheat?' The Lord takes notice of this temper of ſpirit, Mal. i. 13. 'Ye ſaid alſo, Behold, what a wearineſs is it, and ye have ſnuffed at it, ſaith the Lord of hoſts.' O how would would ye take with heaven? but be ſure ye will never get there in that caſe, as not being made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light, Col. i. 12. Ye will be eaſed of that burden, but for a heavier one.

2. To thoſe who look on it as none of their buſineſs, whoever elſe be concerned in it. They make no profeſſion of living to the honour of God, and their practice is conform. This ſpeaks you neither to look on God as your Maſter, nor your Father, Mal. i. 6. And if ſo, doubtleſs ye cannot look for his reward; nor for the eternal inheritance of his children: where then will lie the gain of this liberty which you take to yourſelves?

To thoſe who ſpend their life without conſideration of the chief buſineſs of life. They ſpend their years as a tale that is told, Pſal. xc. 9. O how many are dreaming away a lifetime, out of which they are not like to awake till death. They can conſider any thing but their ſoul's ſtate: but the thought of that they cannot dwell on. They that cannot conſider the great buſineſs of life, will certainly loſe the opportunity of that buſineſs, and it will ſit to them in the end, Prov. xx. 4. 'The ſluggard will not plow by reaſon of the cold; therefore ſhall he beg in harveſt, and have nothing.'

4. To thoſe who delay the buſineſs of honouring God, till they ſhall be near death. Many ſuch are there, who can never find the time to begin their work, though they do not want thoughts of it; as was the caſe with Felix, who ſaid to Paul, 'Go thy way for this time: when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee.' When they are young, they put off till they be old; then, till they be going to die; when ſickneſs comes, they put off ſtill, in hopes of recovery; when they are paſt hopes, they are not capable for it; and ſo the ſoul is loſt. Mean while, all they are concerned for, is their own ſafety, not God's honour: and being regardleſs of this latter, no wonder they fall ſhort of the former.

5. laſtly, To thoſe whoſe life is a life of diſhonouring God, by ſecret and open wickedneſs. And this ſeems to be the caſe of this generation, by which we appear to be a generation of God's wrath, Mic. vii. 2-4. The good man is periſhed out of the earth: and there is none upright a- mong men: they all lie in wait for blood: they hunt every one his brother with a net. The beſt of them is a brier: the moſt upright is ſharper than a thorn hedge: the day of thy watchmen, and thy viſitation cometh; now ſhall be their perplexity. Corruption of life and manners is become univerſal, ſo that people are become proof againſt conviction from the word, being ſo hardened under the means of grace, that their caſe is grown hopeleſs; all which cannot miſs, ſoon or late, to bring down ſome rouſing ſtroke, Jer. vi. 15. ‘Were they aſhamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all aſhamed, neither could they bluſh; therefore they ſhall fall among them that fall: at the time that I viſit them, they ſhall be caſt down, ſaith the Lord.’

Use 3. of Exhortation. Make it the buſineſs of your life to live to the honour of God.

Queſt. How ſhall we do that?

Anſw. 1. Honour him by faith: Rom. iv. 20. ‘Abraham ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God.’ Faith gives God the honour of all his glorious perfections as manifeſted in the word; and without faith there is no acceptable honouring of him. Therefore the Chriſtian life is a life of faith. And honour him,

1ſt, By receiving and reſting on Jeſus Chriſt as your Saviour from ſin and wrath; 1 John iii. 23. ‘This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt.’ If ye honour not God this way, ye honour him not at all. God has ſent his Son in the character of Saviour of the world: put your caſe in his hand, that ye may be ſanctified, and ſaved from wrath through him. If ye do not believe him able and willing to ſave you, ye diſhonour God egregiouſly, 1 John v. 10, 11. ‘He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.’

2dly, By truſting God in all times and caſes, Iſa. xxvi. 4. ‘Truſt ye in the Lord for ever.’ The eſtabliſhed way of communication with heaven, is by truſt in God: and faith is productive of hope, which is the anchor of the ſoul, keeping it ſafe and ſpiritually at reſt, in all ſtorms public or private. Truſting in the creature is a putting it in God's place; and under ſuch a weight it muſt fall. But God is honoured by truſting him.

3dly, By believing his word in all the parts of it, 2 Chron. xx. 20. ‘Believe in the Lord your God, ſo ſhall you be eſtabliſhed; believe his prophets, ſo ſhall ye proſper.’ God is to be honoured by faith's acting on every part of the word; on the commands, believing the divine authority of them; on the promiſes, believing the accompliſhment of them; and on the threatenings, believing the juſtice and truth of them.

2. Honour him by the practice of holineſs; 1 Pet. ii. 9. ‘Ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light.’ To lead a holy tender life, is the way to honour God, and labouring to be like him in all converſation. If ye be not univerſal in your obedience, that part ye are deficient in may bring a blot on all the reſt, as Judas's treachery wiped out all his good deeds. And if ye would live to the honour of God, I would recommend to you particularly,

1ſt, Diligent and reverent worſhipping of God, Matt. iv. 10. ‘Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.’ Worſhip him in your families, in ſecret, and in the publick aſſemblies; ſet up for his honour in the world; make conſcience of joining therein for the honour of God. And be reverent in the frame of your heart, and in your outward geſture, as knowing that he is a great God with whom ye have to do: and there can be no reverence in their hearts, who behave irreverently.

2dly, Be exact in point of juſtice in your dealings; ſhaking your hands of all gain of unrighteouſneſs. Iſa. xxxiii. 15, 16. ‘He that walketh righteouſly, and ſpeaketh uprightly, he that deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſions, that ſhaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that ſtoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and ſhutteth his eyes from ſeeing of evil: he ſhall dwell on high,’ &c. That baſeneſs of ſpirit, diſpoſing to ſteal, cheat, and catch any little advantage they can get of their neighbour, that one can truſt them no farther than they ſee, is moſt diſhonouring to God, as if either he did not ſee, or elſe did approve of their wicked practices.

3dly, Be readily diſpoſed to the duties of humanity, being compaſſionate to them that are in diſtreſs, Col. iii. 12. ‘Put on therefore (as the elect of God, holy and beloved) bowels of mercies, kindneſs, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, long ſuffering.’ This honours God in a very particular manner: Luke vi. 35, 36. ‘But love you your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again: and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the children of the Higheſt: for he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father alſo is merciful.’ And it has much encouragement by promiſe: Prov. iii. 9, 10. ‘Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt fruits of thy increaſe. So ſhall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy preſſes ſhall burſt out with new wine.’ A ſelfiſh, unkind, unſympathiſing, narrow ſpirit, is a great ſtain on an otherwiſe fair character.

4thly, Be the ſame in ſecret where no eye ſees you, that you would be in public. This will much honour God, when the conſcience of his eye being on you, is as forcible to reſtrain you from evil, as the eyes of the world would be, as was Joſeph's caſe, ‘How can I do this great wickedneſs, and ſin againſt God.’ O what do the practiſers of ſecret miſchief think of God? They can do a miſchief unſeen, and then cover it with a lye. But alas! is there not a God in heaven, that ſees himſelf diſhonoured by ſuch practices? Open ſhame, or elſe a ſecret ſtroke will be the conſequence.

5thly, Shew yourſelves on God's ſide, amidſt the diſhonours done him in the world. For ye muſt either join with the diſhonourers of his name, or elſe teſtify againſt them: hence ſays our Saviour, Matth. xii. 30. ‘He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad.’ If you have no heart nor brow to appear for God, while ye ſee him diſhonoured, remember what God accounts of that, and how he will treat it, Mark viii. ult. ‘Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.’ Beware of being partakers with other mens ſins; but ſet yourſelves to be a check upon it, and witneſs againſt them, elſe ye honour not God.

6thly, Commend the way of God and religion to others, and encourage good motions where ye can perceive them. Grace is communicative for the honour of God; and every gracious perſon is diſpoſed to propagate religion. Hence ſaid the Lord of Abraham, Gen. xviii. 19 ‘I know him, that he will command his children, and his houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord, to do juſtice and judgment,’ &c. The wearing out of that ſo much now, from what it was in former years, is one of the ſymptoms of the decay of religion.

7thly, Learn to bear troubles in the world with a Chriſtian patience, and holy chearfulneſs. This doth exceedingly tend to the honour of God; as you ſee in the worthies mentioned Heb. xi. There is a deſpiſing of the chaſtening of the Lord, wherein the proud and fooliſh ſcorn to be lowered by the rebukes of providence, wherein the Atheiſm of the heart, and contempt of God appears. There is a fainting under the rebukes of providence, wherein unbelief appears. Both are diſhonourable and to be guarded againſt, Heb. xii. 5. The middle courſe is to God's honour.

Laſtly, Walk with God in a conſcientious performance of the duties of your ſtation. Hence is that exhortation of the apoſtle's, 1 Cor. vii. 24. ‘Brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with God.’ That is the ſphere wherein ye are ſet to honour God: and God is much honoured that way. No man can live to the honour of God, who does not carefully notice, and diligently purſue the duties of his ſtation to the honour of God.

I ſhall give you a few motives to live to the honour of God.

Mot. 1. God is the author of thy life. The life and being thou haſt, thou haſt from God: Rom. xi. 11. 'For 'of him, and through him, and to him are all things: Therefore remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. And ſince he is your firſt cauſe, is it not reaſonable he ſhould be your chief end? The life which you had from him, will ye not improve for him?

Mot. 2. God is the preſerver of thy life, Pſal. xxxvi. 6. 'Lord, thou preſerveſt man and beaſt.' For every moment's life thou haſt had, thou art his debtor. Thy life is continually in his hand, to prolong it, or take it away, as ſeems good in his ſight. If he ſhould but withdraw his upholding hand, thy life would preſently go. Every moment there muſt be a new outletting of influence from him for preſervation of thy life. How unaccountable muſt it then be not to live to his honour? This was a grievous charge againſt Belſhazzar, Dan. v. 23. 'The God in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all 'thy ways, haſt thou not glorified.'

Mot. 3. God is the giver of all thou haſt, whereby thou mayſt honour him. Haſt thou a tongue to ſpeak, and hands to act for God? he gave them to thee. Haſt thou any health, ſtrength, wealth, and reputation, whereby thou art in capacity to honour him? all is from him; and ſhall not his own be uſed for him? Hence ſaith David, 2 Chron. xxix. 14. 'All things come of thee, and 'of thine own have we given thee.' Is it not ſacrilegious to do otherwiſe?

Mot. 4. God puts opportunities in thine hand for honouring of him. As he has given thee means whereby thou mayſt honour him, ſo his providence lays to thy hand opportunities to uſe them. Every opportunity is a providential call, to lay out what the Lord has put in thy hand for his ſervice. And it is dangerous to hide one's talents in the earth, and not to lay them out for God.

Mot. 5. There are ſome who are deprived of abilities ye have to honour God. So the Pagan world is deprived of goſpel light which we all have; the ſick of thoſe which the healthy have. The not improving of them then will aggravate your condemnation. It is ſad to be cumberers of the ground in God's vineyard, taking up room in it uſeleſsly, which others might improve to good advantage.

Mot. 6. You have forfeited by ſin your abilities, and your very life. God might juſtly have taken them all from us, and made us as incapable to ſpeak or act for his honour, as we have been unwilling for it. But his patience has ſuffered us long, and he has done us good, tho' unthankful and evil, if peradventure theſe might lead us to repentance. Shall not this engage us to honour him?

Mot. 7. This was the deſign of the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, Tit. ii. 14. 'Who gave himſelf for us, 'that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify 'unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.' Man was made at firſt for the honour of God, ſin entering rendered him unfit for that work. Therefore Chriſt died, that they might be again brought to live to God's honour. If then ye are not ſo living, it is an evidence Chriſt's redemption is not applied to you as yet; and if ye continue ſo, it will evidence that you are none of his.

Mot. 8. It is the deſign of the ſanctification of the Spirit, 1 Pet. ii. 9. 'Ye are a choſen generation, a royal 'prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye 'ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath called you 'out of darkneſs into his marvellous light.' When God puts his Spirit into a man, it is that he may walk in his way. So that, if ye live not to the honour of God, it is an evidence that ye have not the Spirit.

Mot. 9. laſtly, It is a loſt life that is not lived to the honour of God, Matth. xvi. 25, 26. 'Whoſoever will 'ſave his life, ſhall loſe it; and whoſoever will loſe his 'life for my ſake, ſhall find it. For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own 'ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his 'ſoul?' If ye live not to the honour of God here, never expect to live with him hereafter in heaven. Remember the end of the ſlothful ſervant, Matth. xxv. 30. 'Caſt 'ye the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs, there 'ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.' For your help to live to the honour of God, take theſe directions.

1. Allow yourſelves ſeriouſly to conſider, now, that ye are living, and muſt die, what will be the beſt way for you to ſpend that bit of life. It is pity people ſhould not propoſe to themſelves a deſign of living, and conſider what is that deſign of life that will come to the beſt account at length. Sure if ye do, ye will find no deſign ſo reaſonable and advantageous as this.

2. Then take him for your God in Chriſt, that ye may live to his honour; and do not think that it is by your living to his honour, that he muſt become your God. Faith muſt go before obedience, if ever the obedience be kindly. Faith firſt embracing ſalvation in the free offer of the goſpel, natively engages the heart to honour God, as a ſon doth his father.

3. Labour to keep up the love of God in the heart, by believing his love; and that will be a ſtrong band, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15. 'The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, becauſe 'we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all 'dead: and that he died for all, that they which live, 'ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him 'which died for them, and roſe again.'

4. laſtly, Firmly believe that there is a reward for the righteous; and that not a good word or good work, ſpoke or done for God, ſhall want a reward, 1 Cor. xv. ult. 'Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye ſtedfaſt, unmo'veable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for'aſmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in 'the Lord.'

DOCT. II. It is the ſpecial buſineſs and privilege of life, to propagate religion, God's name and praiſe, the ſtanding generation to the riſing generation, the fathers to the children, all along.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. What it is to propagate religion, God's name and praiſe to the riſing generation.

II. Who are the ſtanding and riſing generation, the fathers and the children, among whom this propagation of religion is to paſs.

III. In what reſpects it is the ſpecial buſineſs of life.

IV. In what reſpects it is the ſpecial privilege of life.

V. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall ſhew what it is to propagate religion, God's name and praiſe, to the riſing generation. It implies theſe four things.

1. The having of religion ourſelves. None can propagate what they have not. If men have not the knowledge of God themſelves, how can they praiſe him to others? Men are ſenſible, that if they gain not a competent portion of the world to themſelves, they can leave none to their children: ſo if they be idle or waſters, they are unjuſt to their families. Even ſo if ye are not religious, ye not only diſhonour God, and deſtroy your own ſouls, but ye are unjuſt to the riſing generation, and deſtructive to your ſouls too.

2. The profeſſion of religion, Rom. x. 10. With the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation. Men may have a profeſſion without the practice of religion; but the practice requires the profeſſion of it. And no man will ever propagate religion that is not himſelf a profeſſor of it. And the profeſſion muſt be ſuch as is not viſibly contradicted by the practice: for if example deſtroy what precept builds up, there is no propagating religion to others by that means. So a credible profeſſion of religion is a debt owing to the riſing generation.

3. A deſire to continue and ſpread religion in the world. Without this none will propagate it: for what men have no deſire of the ſpreading of, they will be loth to propagate. And it is the want of concern for the ſpreading of religion, that makes men ſo careleſs abou the propagating thereof. They have no due concern fo their own ſouls; therefore they have none either for thoſe that come after them.

4. laſtly, Contributing our endeavours to bring others, and particularly the riſing generation, to the knowledge of religion. Pſal. lxxviii. 2, 3, 4. ‘ I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark ſayings of old: which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, ſhewing them to the generation to come, the praiſes of the Lord, and his ſtrength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.’ Man is born like a wild aſs's colt, wanting both knowledge and experience. We ſee ſuch as come into our world, come in naked among us; and we judge ourſelves obliged to clothe them, feed them, and teach them how to do for themſelves. But withal they can do as little for their ſouls, as for their bodies; and ſhall we leave them deſtitute in that point? How will we anſwer that to God? Now, to contribute endeavours to bring them to religion, lies in endeavouring,

1*ſt*, To bring them to faith in Jeſus Chriſt, which is the foundation of all religion: Pſal. lxxviii. 7. ‘ That they might ſet their hope in God, and not forget the works of God; but keep his commandments.’ They come into the world under God's wrath and curſe. There is a Saviour provided; but they know it not, till the ſtanding generation tell them of it. They are averſe naturally to come to that Saviour, and are not aware of the danger of ſlighting him; it is juſtice and charity then to deal with them, in order to convince and bring them in.

2*dly*, To bring them to holineſs of life; as did Abraham, Gen. xviii. 19. ‘ I know him, (ſays the Lord,) that he will command his children, and his houſehold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord, to do juſtice and judgment.’ When they come into our world, they bring a corrupt nature with them, which begins early to ſprout. Satan will begin his temptations with them as ſoon as they are capable, loſing no time. The longer ſin continues in them uncurbed, the ſtronger does it grow. It nearly concerns the ſtanding generation then to contribute their endeavours to quench the helliſh flame, and to turn the ſtream and courſe of their life from ſin to holineſs. And this,

(1.) By precept and counſel. Thus we are to praiſe God to them, by word of mouth. We ſhould ſhew them what we have to ſay in God's behalf, commend religion, diſparage the way of ſin and of the world to them; bind duty on their conſcience, and oblige them thereto by any authority we have over them.

(2.) By example. Let us write our religion in our own walk before them, that they may be brought to copy after us. Thoſe precepts that are illuminated with example, are moſt ready to take. Beware of caſting an ill example before their eyes; for the corruption of nature lies that way, and he that ſins before a child, ſins twice; for his ſin lies fair to be repeated by the young ſpectator.

(3.) By dependence on the Lord for a bleſſing on the means uſed for their good, 2 Cor. x. 4. ‘ The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds.’ Whoever he be that plants, if God give not the increaſe, there will be none. That is a great truth in all caſes, in ſpiritual as well as worldly things, 1 Sam. iii. 9.——‘ By ſtrength ſhall no man prevail.’ If a man ſhould uſe the beſt arguments, the ſtrongeſt motives, for bringing others into the way of religion; and upon the ſuitableneſs of the means promiſe himſelf ſucceſs, he takes the way moſt likely to render them ineffectual. The word ſpoken needs to be mixed with faith in the ſpeaker. And he is moſt likely to ſucceed that uſes the means of God's appointment for doing good, with entire dependence on the Lord for ſucceſs.

(4.) laſtly, By prayer for them. Thus it is promiſed concerning Chriſt, that prayer ſhall be made for him continually, viz. that his kingdom may come, by the daily coming in of new ſubjects to him. Since the ſucceſs of all that we can do for the riſing generation depends on the Lord's bleſſing, it is neceſſary that we plead for them at the throne of grace, quickening ourſelves thereto, by conſideration of the honour of God, and their eternal welfare, that depend on it.

II. The ſecond general head was to ſhew, Who are the ſtanding and riſing generation, the fathers and the children, among whom this propagation of religion is to paſs. And this muſt be ſtated according to the language of the Holy Ghoſt, and the analogy of other parts of ſcripture, if we would rightly ſee whoſe is this duty. In general I ſhall premiſe,

1. All ſuperiors and inferiors are in ſcripture-ſtile comprehended under fathers and children. This is plain from the fifth commandment, which under the name of father and mother, whoſe relatives children are, preſcribes the mutual duties of ſuperiors and inferiors. Therefore every one is to propagate religion to his inferiors.

2. Foraſmuch as there is no perfect and abſolute equality among men, but ſome who are inferior in one reſpect to others, may be ſuperior to them in another reſpect; it is the duty of equals and inferiors to propagate religion among themſelves, and to their ſuperiors, mutually communicating their light and warmth.

3. Some may belong to the ſtanding generation in one reſpect, who belong to the riſing one in another; as a perſon who is inferior to ſome, and ſuperior to others. So they are to have it propagated to them, and they are to propagate it to others again.

4. laſtly, The ſame command of God that binds the ſtanding generation and fathers to propagate religion, binds the riſing generation and children to receive it. God by binding parents to inſtruct, binds the children to receive inſtruction, they that are the riſing generation now, will be the ſtanding ſoon. But more particularly.

1. Fathers of the ſtate, magiſtrates, ſupreme, or ſubordinate, are to propagate religion to their ſubjects. They are God's vicegerents on earth, to be employed for God, in whoſe name they act. Iſa. xlix. 23. ‘ Kings ſhall be thy nurſing fathers, and their queens thy nurſing mothers.’ And it is one of the blackeſt ſymptoms of the corruption of the world, that oft times they are found ſet to extirpate religion.

2. Fathers in the church, miniſters, and church officers, to their eccleſiaſtical children. It is for this very end they are put in office. Heb. xii. 17. ‘ Obey them that have the rule over you, and ſubmit yourſelves: for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give account; that they may do it with joy, and not with grief, for that is unprofitable for you.’ Jeſus Chriſt brought this religion from heaven, employed his apoſtles to propagate it, to them they ſucceed in the office of propagating religion, and muſt ſee to make it their buſineſs, as they will be anſwerable.

3. Fathers of families to their children. For every family ought to be a church, wherein holy worſhip, doctrine, diſcipline, and government ought to be maintained, by the heads thereof. And particularly,

1*ſt*, Fathers and mothers to the children procreated of their bodies. This is the chief thing in the text, ‘ The father to the children ſhall make known thy truth.’ It is but an inferior part of your charge, to provide meat and cloaths for your children, and to put them in a way of living: the chief part is to ſee to their ſouls, that they may be recovered out of the loſt ſtate they are in by nature. It will be but a ſorry kindneſs, to be concerned for their proviſion in time, if ye neglect them as to their eternal concerns. It is by them your name is to be propagated, and you are to propagate God's name to them, in point of gratitude to God, and natural affection to them.

2*dly*, They are to do it alſo to all others in their family, whether they be ſervants, or whatever they be. Being in your family, ye are inſtead of fathers and mothers to them, and owe them that benefit. Hence maſters are called fathers, 2 Kings v. 13. and the duty of propagating religion is expreſsly extended to one's houſehold. And whoſoever have the chief authority in a family, though ſervants themſelves, are the fathers of it in this ſenſe.

4. Fathers in gifts or grace, to thoſe who are children in theſe reſpects, in compariſon of them. So Joſeph was a father to Pharaoh, Gen. xlv. 8. If God has beſtowed on you more gifts or grace than on others; mind ye are thereby made fathers to thoſe that are weaker than you, and are obliged to communicate your light to them. So teachers are called fathers, Gen. iv. 20. and the Spirit of God the common Father. It will then make a dreadful reckoning, for men to have gifts, and not lay them out for the benefit of others; to uſe their gifts juſt for oſtentation, and inſtead of helping, to brangle and confound, and perplex the weaker with them.

5. Fathers in years, to thoſe who are children in reſpect of age to them. It is Elihu's obſerve, that 'days 'ſhould ſpeak, and the multitude of years ſhould teach 'wiſdom.' The more days the more experience, the more acceſs to improve in knowledge; and ſo to be more uſeful to the younger. Mind then, that your ſuperiority in years conſtitutes you fathers to thoſe younger than you. Ye will not forget it in point of the regard ye expect from them, and God allows you it; but then you ſhould make conſcience of the duty too, propagating religion to them.

Thus ye ſee the ſtanding and riſing generation. And if theſe fathers would ſet themſelves to the propagating of religion to their reſpective children, the work would go on.

III. The third general head was to ſhew, In what reſpects it is the ſpecial buſineſs of life. The buſineſs of life appointed by the great Maſter is manifold; but the ſum of it is to honour God: and the chief branch thereof, the ſpecial buſineſs of life, is to propagate religion, the ſtanding to the riſing generation. This will appear in the following particulars.

1. It is the buſineſs of life, that would have been the buſineſs of it though ſin had never entered into the world. The buſineſs of the lawyer, and phyſician, and many handy crafts now in the world, owe their original and neceſſity to ſin's entrance. Nay, the very buſineſs of our ſalvation does ſo too; for if Adam had ſtood the time of trial, all his poſterity's eternal happineſs would have been thereby ſecured to their hand. But God having ſettled the manner of the propagation of mankind, Gen. i. 28. it was an evidence that the ſucceeding generations were not to be created in their prime as Adam was; but to be born infants, and grow up by degrees in knowledge of religion, and other things, as appears from Luke ii. ult. And this would have afforded this buſineſs.

2. It is the buſineſs of life that moſt ſingly looks to the honour of God. God is honoured by our working out our own ſalvation: but then our own advantage bears great ſtroke in it allowably, as well as his honour; but this is a buſineſs carried on not for ourſelves, but for God allenarly; and in that reſpect is the more noble. Hence we find the apoſtle willing, for the great end of the propagation of religion, either to live or die. And he prefers one's edifying the church to his own comfort. He edifies the church, that edifies his houſe, Neh. iii. 28. 30.

3. It is the buſineſs of life, that is the end of life and ſalvation given to the elect, and all their comforts and enjoyments. Hence ſaid our Lord to Peter, 'I have pray'ed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art 'converted, ſtrengthen the brethren.' We get life and ſalvation by believing in Chriſt; and are as really poſſeſſed of eternal life that we can never loſe, upon our firſt believing, as the ſaints in heaven are, though not in that meaſure. When the Lord had a mind to honour Paul to propagate religion, he reached his own heart firſt by his grace; and then he ſet him to work. Is not that the ſpecial buſineſs of life, for which God brings people into a ſtate of ſalvation?

4. It is the buſineſs of life, that the new creature as natively falls to, as the new born infant falls a breathing. Pſal. xxii. 30, 31. 'A ſeed ſhall ſerve him, it ſhall be ac'counted to the Lord for a generation. They ſhall 'come, and ſhall declare his righteouſneſs unto a people 'that ſhall be born, that he hath done this.' So the woman of Samaria, John iv. 29. 'Come, ſee a man that told 'me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt?' Paul, as ſoon as he was converted fell a propagating the religion that before he perſecuted. Grace makes people communicative; and there is never a ſoul in which the leaven of grace is infuſed, but would, if it could, leaven the whole world with the ſame.

5. It is the buſineſs of life, that is moſt uſeful to mankind. Both conſcience and intereſt require us to live ſo, as to be uſeful to our fellow creatures, Rom. xiv. 7. 'For 'none of us liveth to himſelf, and no man dieth to him'ſelf.' Some have been great bleſſings to mankind by their uſefulneſs, in propagating arts and ſciences, and in relieving the poor and needy: but none ſo uſeful as thoſe who have propagated religion among them. And a diſpoſition to be uſeful to mankind would prompt men to this.

6. It is the buſineſs of life of the moſt diffuſive uſefulneſs. It brings honour to God, comfort to ones ſelf, and advantage to others. It reaches not only to the preſent generation, but to the generations yet unborn; in ſo far as you, propagating religion to your children, they will propagate it again to theirs, and ſo on. It is to be lamented, that ſome children follow not the ſteps of their religious parents. But every body may obſerve, that there are ſome families wherein one generation after another appears for God; others wherein, generation after generation, religion can never get place among them. Trace theſe back, and ye may come to one that was careful to propagate religion to his children, and his children propagated it again to theirs, and ſo on; and to another that had no care that way about his children, and his children had as little about theirs, and ſo on.

7. laſtly, It is the buſineſs of life that is moſt worthy of the dignity of an immortal ſoul, and likeſt the life that Chriſt led in the world. The buſineſs of moſt men is nothing but laborious trifling; their thoughts are wholly ſpent on things pertaining to this life; as if they had ſouls of no other conſtitution than their bodies. It is nothing like the life of Chriſt, who went about doing good, 1 Pet. ii. 21. 'Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an exam'ple, that we ſhould follow his ſteps,' 1 John ii. 6. He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked.

IV. The fourth thing propoſed was, to ſhew, In what reſpect it is the ſpecial privilege of life.

1. It is that whereby we may honour God moſt, and ſo anſwer the end of our creation. In our embracing of religion we receive the light, in propagating of it we diffuſe the light received to the glory of God: 1 Pet. ii. 9. 'Ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy 'nation, a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth the 'praiſes of him, who hath called you out of darkneſs in'to his marvellous light.' Hence among thoſe who turn from ſin unto righteouſneſs, thoſe who turn moſt of others to it, will have the greateſt glory; Dan. xii. 3. 'They 'that be wiſe, ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firma'ment; and they that turn many to righteouſneſs, as the 'ſtars for ever and ever.'

2. It is that whereby we may be moſt uſeful to others. No benefit done to our fellow-creatures is comparable to it. We have indeed acceſs to do for their temporal advantage, but this is for their eternal. And when the opportunity of life is over, there is no more doing that way.

Uſe. 1. of Reproof to ſeveral ſorts of perſons. And,

1. To thoſe who make no conſcience of propagating religion to their families. Every man is by divine appointment the prophet of his own family to teach them, the prieſt to worſhip God with them, and the king to rule them. Each will maintain his own authority to his power; but family worſhip with many is not ſo cloſely ſtuck to, but family teaching the leaſt of all, which is yet commanded of God: Deut. vi. 6, 7. 'Theſe words which I 'command thee this day, ſhall be in thine heart. And 'thou ſhalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and 'ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and 'when thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt 'down, and when thou riſeſt up.' The want of this makes miniſterial teaching in preaching and examination ſo unſucceſsful. How will men anſwer this neglect of the ſpecial buſineſs of life?

2. To thoſe who are backward and averſe to receive family-inſtruction, or ſubmit to family diſcipline, checks and reproofs for their miſcarriages. They will get away from family catechiſing on Sabbath nights, ſhift family exerciſe, and cannot endure to be checked for their miſcarriages; and therefore they like beſt to be in thoſe families where leaſt of theſe is to be found. But if it is the duty of others to propagate religion to you, it is on the peril of your ſouls ye refuſe to receive it. It will aggravate your condemnation, John iii. 10.

3. To thoſe who ſet an ill example before thoſe that are younger than they. Much of the corruption of children is owing to the ill examples ſet them by parents, and others whom they are near. This lets them ſee much ill which they would otherwiſe be ignorant of; and the bias of their nature lying that way, they are by that means carried down the ſtream. So a woe is brought on themſelves, and them that ſet them the copy: Matth. xviii. 7. ‘Wo unto the world becauſe of offences: for it muſt needs be that offences come: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh.’ Oh that men would conſider, that they do in effect teach that which they do or ſay before the younger ſort; for childhood imitates age.

4. To thoſe who do not check the outbreakings of corrupt nature in thoſe of the younger ſort. O the cruelty of ſome parents, who, by their ceaſing to nip ſin in the bud in their children, betray them into ſuch habits of ſin, as afterwards is too late to correct. They will neglect prayer, ſwear, lie, and meet with no check: they will ſteal little things, and their parents will make them welcome. And thus, by their means, ſome are ſo accuſtomed to ſin, that as they grow, it grows, till it brings ſome to an ill end. Remember the children of Bethel, 1 Kings ii. 25, 24.

5. To thoſe who propagate irreligion to the riſing generation; who teach a young generation to deſpiſe godlineſs, contemn the ordinances, and to lead licentious lives, impatient of reſtraint. Do they not propagate irreligion, who keep up their minced oaths, Haith, faith, &c. which would die out of their language, were it not that they were propagated from father to ſon; who keep up the obſervation of ſuperſtitious times and cuſtoms, Yule, Faſtens-even, &c. the relics of Popery and Paganiſm, which might be razed out of memory, were it not that they are propagated from one generation to another?

6. To thoſe who go about to debauch a young generation, by inſtilling into them licentious principles, which youth is ready to fall in with; by taking a liberty in obſcence filthy ſpeaking, making youthful luſts the ſubject of their mirth; leading them into drunkenneſs, an inlet to all other vices; tempting them to the commiſſion of the ſin of uncleanneſs with them, which will be bitterneſs in the end to the ſeducer and the ſeduced; encouraging them to acts of diſhoneſty, ſtealing from their parents or maſters. Theſe are factors for hell, who do what in them lies to deſtroy ſouls Chriſt died for.

7. To thoſe that are ready to cloke the ſcandalous ſins of others, that they may not be brought to light. How many poor ſouls of the younger ſort, might have been recovered out of the ſnare of the devil, if it had not been their cruel kindneſs, who beſtirred themſelves to cover their ſin? But thereby they have been hardened, and have gone from evil to worſe, till at length they have been ruined altogether. See what an awful threatening there is pronounced againſt ſuch, Lev. v. 1. ‘If a ſoul ſin, and hear the voice of ſwearing, and is a witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his iniquity.’

8. laſtly, To thoſe who cannot ſee themſelves under any obligation to propagate religion, and concern themſelves as little about it. They think that may be the buſineſs of miniſters, and poſſibly of fathers to their own children; but not theirs. As ſoon as the Spirit of God touches your hearts in earneſt, ye will change your mind; ye will find a natural concern for the advantage of the kingdom of Chriſt: John iv. 29. ‘Come, ſee a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt?’ The love of God, and of your neighbour, planted in the heart, will create a concern this way: and not daring to be againſt him, and ſcatter, ye will be for Chriſt, and gather with him. The leaven will ſeek.

Uſe 2. of Exhortation. Make it the ſpecial buſineſs of your lives to propagate religion to the riſing generation.

Motive 1. There is the ſtrongeſt obligations on you for it. Ye are in that point under the tie of, 1ſt, Divine authority. God requires it of you. It is commanded to all to edify one another, 1 Theſſ. v. 11. yea, all things muſt be done for that end. And the reaſon is plain, that God has placed men in ſociety, for that end, Rom. xiv. 7. And the elder ſort are made tutors and teachers to the younger ſort for that end.

2dly, Gratitude to God. Is not God your Creator, Preſerver, and Suſtainer? And what can ye do for him, for all the goodneſs beſtowed on you, if ye do not ſtrive to ſtir up the love and fear of him in the riſing generation? If ye have any ſhare in the redemption of Chriſt, ye cannot but find yourſelves under the ſtrongeſt ties of gratitude, to labour that his name may be tranſmitted from generation to generation, Pſal. lxxii. 17. ‘His name ſhall endure for ever; his name ſhall be continued as long as the ſun: men ſhall be bleſſed in him; and all nations ſhall call him bleſſed.’

3dly, Juſtice to former generations, who have propagated religion to us. What caſe had we been in this day, if it had not been for the ſufferings of confeſſors, and the blood of martyrs, which they underwent, that religion might be tranſmitted to us, and by us to ſucceeding generations? Had they given up with it, it had been loſt as to us. Now, they have an intereſt in ſucceeding generations; and if we propagate it not to them, we are unjuſt to them, and denude the ſucceeding generation of the inheritance of their fathers. We ſhould, like thoſe ſpoke of Pſal lxxviii. 3, 4. ‘utter the things which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us, not hiding them from our children, ſhewing to generations to come, the praiſes of the Lord, and his ſtrength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.’

4thly, Our own intereſt. That maxim, Prov. xi. 24. there is that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty, holds in this, as much as in any thing. Religion is a fire, which being ſmothered, goes out; but getting a vent, increaſeth. It is like the widows oil, that increaſed in the pouring out; and like the bread that increaſed in the breaking. Were men more ſet on propagating religion to others, they would have more of it to themſelves, 5thly, Charity to the riſing generarion, Their eternal ſtate depends on their embracing or continuing ſtrangers to religion. They need your help: for the bias of their nature lies the wrong way; the devil and an evil world ceaſe not to ply them to walk according to that bias: and if their ſpiritual enemies gain their point they are ruined.

Mot. 2. This is the chief part of your generation work. The work of our own ſalvation muſt be ſeen to, but that is not all we have to do. We are to do that for ourſelves; but then, for the honour of God, and the good of our fellow creatures, we are to ply our generation work, and that mainly lies here, Pſal. cxlv. 4. ‘One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another, and ſhall declare thy mighty acts.’ Ye are all doing; but what are ye doing for the honour of God, for the ſervice of your generation? Ye have a room in this generation; and God who ſet you in it, will call you to account how ye fill it up.

Mot. 3. As ye carry yourſelves in this matter, your ſin or your good works will be going on, after ye are dead and gone in this world. The laſt judgment we muſt undergo, is not without reaſon delayed to the end of the world; for the ſins of wicked men, and the good works of the godly, will then be hugely increaſed, beyond what they are at their death. Good Abel is uſeful to this day: Heb. xi. 4 ‘He being dead, yet ſpeaketh.’ Haman in his life ſet a miſchief a-going, which continued after he was dead, and the ſin of Jeroboam the firſt king of Iſrael, continued till that kingdom was at an end. If ye propagate religion to the riſing generation, that good work will ſurvive you; and if ye neglect it, your omiſſion may live and deſtroy ſouls long after ye are gone, which will be laid to your charge at the great day.

Mot. 4. It is a noble and beneficial work. James v. 19, 20. ‘Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth,

‘ and one convert him; let him know, that he which ‘ converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ‘ ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ‘ ſins.’ To ſave a ſoul from periſhing, is ſuch a noble work, that it is an honourable thing to be aiming at it.

Mot. 5. laſtly, The doom of unprofitable ſervants is dreadful: Matth. xxv. 30. ‘ Caſt ye the unprofitable ſer‘ vant into outer darkneſs; there ſhall be weeping and ‘ gnaſhing of teeth.’ No man can profit God, but every man may and ought to lay out their talents for the good of others; and if they do not, they will be caſt into outer darkneſs, as thoſe who would not work when they had light.

Object. But they are froward, and will not receive inſtruction, nor take advice. Anſw. That is a part of their natural diſeaſe. Men take pains to break young beaſts, till they make them tractable: and ſhall they not be at pains with thoſe of their own kind? The waters wear the ſtones; and what has often ſlipped off, may at length come to ſtick. And a word ſpoken to them for their good, may lie long under the clod, and ſpring up at length. But our ſucceſs is not the rule: we muſt do our part.

But more particularly, let heads of families be exhorted to propagate religion to their children and families.

Mot. 1. Conſider ye have a charge of their ſouls from God who has committed them to you. Hence the fourth commandment, is directed to heads of families. And in Abraham's example their duty is laid before them: Gen. xviii. 19. ‘ I know him, that he will command his chil‘ dren, and his houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep ‘ the way of the Lord, to do juſtice and judgment.’

Mot. 1. They are born like wild aſſes colts, and have a natural bent to the way of ſin: Pſal. lviii. 3. ‘ The wic‘ ked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray as ‘ ſoon as they are born, ſpeaking lies.’ It is a blind love to your children, that makes you take no notice of the corruption of their nature. And if they are naturally corrupt, what can ye expect but that they will run to their own ruin, if ye are not at pains with them for their ſouls good? Hence ſays Solomon, Prov. xxix. 15. ‘ The rod ‘ and reproof give wiſdom: but a child left to himſelf, ‘ bringeth his mother to ſhame.’

Mot. 3. Parents propagate that corruption of nature to them, by natural generation. The ſinful nature of children is a glaſs wherein the parents may get a humbling view of their own, Gen. v. 3. ‘ Adam begat a ſon in his ‘ own likeneſs, after his image, and called his name Seth.’ Job xiv. 4. ‘ Who can bring a clean thing out of an un‘ clean? not one.’ Have ye been inſtrumental in conveying the poiſon to them, and will ye not be thereby ſtirred up to miniſter the antidote to them?

Mot. 4. They are in the midſt of many ſnares, entered into a world where offences abound. Their youth makes them raw and unexperienced, and diſpoſes them to be raſh and heedleſs. They have need of a monitor. How ſhall they learn if they are not taught?

Mot 5. Ye muſt die: and it is like will die before them. Will ye not be concerned, that it may be well with them, when ye are away? Your concern for their temporal proviſion will not make it well with them, while ye are not concerned to ſow the ſeeds of religion in their hearts. That will be but to give ſo much ſail to an empty ſhip without ballaſt, that may ſink her in the deep ſea, as is ſeen in the ſad experience of many.

Mot. 6. They muſt die: and it may be they may die before you, and then they will have no uſe for all the temporal proviſion ye have laboured for, for them. But religion propagated by you to them, will then appear a precious treaſure. But if ye have neglected that duty to them, that will then appear a criminal neglect, which ye will never more be capable to mend; and it will leave a galling ſting in your conſcience, if ye be not quite ſtupid.

Mot. 7. laſtly, What comfort can ye have in their caſe while ye can have no comfortable proſpect of their eternal happineſs? If they were to be lords and ladies in this world, but to periſh eternally in another world, what comfort can be there? The barren womb and dry breaſts are preferable to the bringing forth children to the murderers; much more to bringing them forth for hell.

Let thoſe things work upon your conſciences, to beſtir yourſelves towards the propagating of religion to the riſing generation. If ye have any conſcience of duty towards God, any humanity towards your fellow creatures, neglect it no more. For particular directions, I propoſe, DOCT. III. ult. The true way of propagating religion, the ſtanding to the riſing generation, is, That the former make God known to the latter, ſo as they may betake themſelves unto him, his truth and faithfulneſs, by faith, and truſt. This is the ſenſe of the words of the text, and agreeable to the matter, Hezekiah's life being prolonged in virtue of that promiſe, 1 Kings viii. 25. ‘ There ſhall ‘ not fail thee a man in my ſight to ſit on the throne of ‘ Iſrael; ſo that thy children take heed to their way, as ‘ thou haſt walked before me.’ So this notification is not of the matter as a ſpeculation, but as a practical thing, that the riſing generation may be brought to God.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, we ſhall conſider,

I. The end to be aimed at in our teaching the riſing generation.

II. The means to be uſed with them for that end.

III. Give the reaſons why this is the true way of propagating religion, the ſtanding to the riſing generation.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the end to be aimed at in our teaching the riſing generation. And that is, that they may be brought to betake themſelves unto the truth of God by faith and hope. This is expreſsly taught, Pſal. lxxviii. 6, 7. ‘ That the generation to come might know them, e‘ ven the children which ſhould be born; who ſhould a‘ riſe, and declare them to their children: that they might ‘ ſet their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, ‘ but keep his commandments.’ Now, here we are to conſider,

1. What is this truth of God we are to endeavour to bring the riſing generation to. 2. How one betakes himſelf unto God's truth, which is that we ſhould aim to bring the riſing generation to.

Firſt, What is this truth of God we are to endeavour to bring the riſing generation to? The truth of God may be conſidered three ways.

1. In the divine doctrine in general. And thus whatever the Lord teaches in his word, is true to a tittle. Hence ſays David, Pſal. cxix. 160. ‘ Thy word is true.’ All the diſcoveries made to us therein, are to be relied on as moſt firm truth. But that truth of doctrine is not here meant; for it belongs to the means, the object to be made known.

2. In the divine threatenings. They are not mere ſcarecrows, as the wicked world looks on them, but ſhall have a certain accompliſhment in their true meaning and intention: for which cauſe believers tremble at them, Iſa. lxvi. 2. But neither is this here meant; ſince it is not the object of hope, but of fear.

3. In the divine promiſes. Theſe are of two ſorts. (1.) Law promiſes; as, ‘ He that doth them, ſhall live in ‘ them.’ This cannot be here meant neither; for no man can be happy that way, Rom. viii. 3. (2.) The goſpel promiſes; ſuch as, Heb. viii. 10. ‘ This is the co‘ venant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after ‘ thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into ‘ their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will ‘ be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people. The belief of theſe is more difficult; but it is by them a ſoul can only be made happy. Therefore it is the truth or faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe of the goſpel that is here meant. That is it we are to endeavour to bring the riſing generation to.

Now, the promiſe of the goſpel is held forth under the notion of God's truth, on theſe accounts.

1. In reſpect of the weight of the things promiſed therein. They are ſo great and weighty, that were not the infallible truth of God impawned for them, they could not be believed by ſenſible guilty creatures: 2 Pet. i. 4. ‘ Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and preci‘ ous promiſes, that by theſe you might be partakers of ‘ the divine nature.’ Luke xxiv. 25, 26. ‘ Then Jeſus ‘ ſaid unto them, O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all ‘ that the prophets have ſpoken! Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory ?’ That the eternal Son of God ſhould take on man's nature, and ſuffer the moſt ignominious death therein, for ſinners, who could have believed on another than God's own teſtimony ? That God freely gives eternal life in him to ſinners, who otherwiſe could believe ?

2. The foundation of believing it is in God only. A true believer receives the kingdom of God as a little child, on the mere teſtimony of his Father. There is nothing in nature's light to bring us to the belief of the goſpel. So faith is called the evidence of things not ſeen. The threatening of death in the law, a natural conſcience prompts men to believe. But the promiſe of life in the goſpel, depending allenarly on revelation, the belief of it reſts on the truth of God only ; yet, nature riſes up againſt it. The corrupt mind looks on it as fooliſhneſs ; the corrupt will rejects it ; the corrupt affections muſter themſelves up againſt it ; and the natural conſcience, the more it is awakened, the more hard it makes the belief of it. So the truth of God has all theſe to drive over, and pull down. 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. ‘ The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds ; caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt.’

3. In oppoſition to the falſehood, vanity, and lies of the world, which ſinners betake themſelves to.

1ſt, The world ſwarms with lies, and has always ſince Satan hatched the firſt lie in it. The things of the world are lies, 1 John ii. 16. ; the men of the world are liars, Rom. iii. 4. ; yea, the beſt of them a lie, Pſal. lxii. 9. There is no truſting of them, Jer. xvii. 5, 6.

2dly, The world itſelf is one great lie. Its appearances are unfair and deceitful ; it appears to vain man quite another thing than it is ; its ſhadows appear ſubſtantial, and ſo catch the unwary heart. It is not what it ſeems to be. Its promiſes are falſe, it never performs ; the good things of it are greater in expectation than fruition ; they diſappoint, which is lying in ſcripture ſtyle.

Secondly, How one betakes himſelf unto God's truth, which is that we ſhould aim to bring the riſing generation to. It lies in theſe five things,

1. In a conviction of the vanity of the world, and its deceitful luſts, Pſal. cxix. 96. ‘ I have ſeen an end of all perfection ; but thy commandment is exceeding broad.’ The vain world offers itſelf as a ſatisfying portion to the riſing generation, as ſoon as reaſon begins to dawn in them. To the infant it makes its court by the luſt of the fleſh in meat and drink ; to the child by that and the pride of life in clothing ; and it is long ere they know there is any thing better than theſe. To the youth it ſpreads out its all, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life ; and whatever notions of religion they may have in their heads, till grace open their eyes, they will never truly ſee any thing to be better. Now, we ſhould labour to convince them of the vanity of the world, that it will never afford a reſt to the heart ; that its luſts are deceitful, and there is a ruining hook hid under that bait.

2. In renouncing the world for a portion, and its luſts for our way, as being a broken reed, that will not only not bear our weight, but run through the hand that leans on it, Jer. xvi. 19.——‘ The Gentiles ſhall come unto the Lord from the ends of the earth, and ſhall ſay, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.’ It is natural to man, and therefore to the riſing generation, to ſtick by it, and not to give over the purſuit ; but after a thouſand diſappointments ſtill to hope for better from it. And the little experience youth has, makes them the more ready to do ſo. But we ſhould endeavour to bring them to part with it, as a hopeleſs thing they will never mend themſelves of.

3. In believing that there is an upmaking portion held forth in the promiſe of the goſpel. This is the finding of the treaſure hid in the field, Matth. xiii. 44. The carnal mind looks on the promiſes of the goſpel but as idle tales ; it is a treaſure hid in a field, which men go over without noticing what is in it, becauſe they ſee it not. But Chriſt is there, and in him the fulneſs of the Godhead, enough to ſatiſfy the boundleſs deſires of a ſoul. And could we bring the riſing generation really to believe this, we could do a great thing.

4. In truſting to the report of the goſpel allenarly for life and happineſs, and a reſt to the heart, upon the ground of God's faithfulneſs. Here is the nature of faith, a betaking one's ſelf unto God's truth, by truſting to him in his word of promiſe for all. It implies theſe three things. The ſoul ſeeing there is in the promiſe what is not in all the creation, enough to anſwer all its needs, and to make it completely happy,

1ſt, Believes its own common intereſt in the promiſes, that itſelf, as well as others, has acceſs to claim it with all that is in it, and to rely on it as held out to him in particular, to truſt upon for his upmaking in time and eternity. For no man can embrace the promiſe of the goſpel, that does not firſt ſee himſelf warranted ſo to do. And the nature of the promiſe warrants all, John iii. 16. ‘ God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’

2dly, The man thereupon lays the weight of his happineſs wholly on it, truſting that it ſhall be made out to him. Thus he buys the field, takes poſſeſſion of it, and the treaſure hid therein. This is the embracing of the promiſe, as one takes an honeſt man's word for his ſecurity, reſts there, and looks no further. So what truſt was before placed in the world, he places in the promiſe.

3dly, The ground on which he bottoms his truſt in the promiſe, is not any thing in himſelf, but the truth and faithfulneſs of God. The man ſees the promiſe is not yea and nay, as the promiſes of fickle men are ; but that it is the word of God which is ſurer than heaven and earth. And to this truſt we ſhould labour to bring the riſing generation, which is to bring them unto a reſt for their reſtleſs hearts, by bringing them to Chriſt, and by him to God. When we ſee hungry infants moving about with their mouths for ſomething to ſuck, natural affection teaches to ſet them on the breaſt : but as they grow up, ye might obſerve their hungry ſouls moving up and down among the creatures for a fill, and ſtill reſtleſs becauſe they cannot get it. It would be as great charity in that caſe, to endeavour to bring them to the breaſts of divine conſolation in the promiſe of the goſpel.

5. laſtly, In hoping and waiting for their happineſs from the promiſe of the goſpel, Rom. viii. 24, 25. ‘ We are ſaved by hope : but hope that is ſeen, is not hope : for what a man ſeeth, why doth he yet hope for ? But if we hope for that we ſee not, then do we with patience wait for it.’ There is much got out of the promiſe, for the preſent in hand ; but ſtill there is more in hope, to be got on the other ſide death. The natural cry is, Who will ſhew us any good ? It is hard to make children wait even for temporal good things ; they would ay have all preſently, whenever they take it in their head ; but it is harder to get them to wait in the matter of a portion for their heart. So they greedily embrace the preſent world. But we ſhould labour to get them off that, and wait for happineſs in another world.

II. The means to be uſed with them for that end. That is, to make God known to them. He is to many of the aged among men an unknown God, as to any ſaving acquaintance with him : but to young ones, he is an unknown God ſo much as by report or hearſay, till the aged do tell them of him. The ſaving knowledge of himſelf God only can give : but there is a doctrinal making of him known to the riſing generation, and that is our duty, Pſal. xxii. 31. ‘ They ſhall come, and ſhall declare his righteouſneſs unto a people that ſhall be born, that he hath done this.’

Now, ye are to make him known to the riſing generation, as a God in Chriſt : for as ſuch only he is the object of a guilty creature's truſt for ſalvation. The blind world pretend to truſt in God as an abſolute God, not eyeing him as in Chriſt : but ſo he is a conſuming fire, Heb. xii. ult. And he is not honoured, but diſhonoured by ſuch a truſt. In Chriſt he appears,

1. As a God of majeſty and glory. There is no glaſs in which ye can repreſent to the riſing generation the glory and majeſty of God ſo lively as in Chriſt. The creating a world of nothing, the deluge, deſtruction of Sodom, are but dim glaſſes, in compariſon of the myſtery of Chriſt. Here the glory of his infinite holineſs, and infinite hatred of ſin, his exact juſtice, his unſearchable wiſdom, moſt fully appear.

2. As the God of grace. The former view of God is apt to fill the ſoul with awe, and reverence of him, fit ballaſt for the vain heart: this view of God is apt to fill the ſoul with faith and love, whereby the heart may be diſengaged from the vain world, and knit to him as the alone upmaking portion of the ſoul. In Chriſt ye can let them ſee majeſty vailed with mercy, righteouſneſs and peace kiſſing mutually, a cryſtal wall to go between them and the conſuming fire.

III. The third thing is, to give the reaſons why this is the true way of propagating religion, the ſtanding to the riſing generation.

1. Becauſe all true religion begins with the knowledge of God in Chriſt, John xvii. 3. 'This is life eternal, that 'they might know thee the only true God, and Jeſus 'Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent.' As long as ignorance of God continues in the ſoul, the works of darkneſs go on there, and the party is on the way to everlaſting darkneſs. Therefore cruel are they that bring up young ones, whether children or ſervants, in ignorance; eſpecially conſidering, that it is the learning age, which ſeaſon miſſed, the loſs is ſeldom retrieved.

2. Becauſe vain is that religion that brings not the ſoul to betake itſelf to God's truth for a portion, and to renounce the world and its way. Our aim in all our teaching ſhould be to affect the heart, to bring ſinners to God, to be his only, wholly and for ever. To ſatiſfy ourſelves with filling their heads with notions of religion, while we are careleſs of getting their hearts to Chriſt, is ſorry ſervice.

3. Becauſe the right diſcerning of the glory of God in Chriſt, is the true way to bring a ſinner to faith in him: Pſal. ix. 10. 'They that know thy name will put truſt 'in thee.' John iv. 10. 'Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto 'her, If thou kneweſt the gift of God, and who it is that 'ſaith unto thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldeſt have 'aſked of him, and he would have given thee living water.' All who are brought acquainted with him, cannot but take up their ſouls reſt in him: and whoever do not betake themſelves to him, it is becauſe they know him not. For his glorious excellency truly diſcerned, cannot miſs to captivate the heart.

USE. Make God known to the riſing generation, ſo as they may be ſtirred up to give up with the vain world, and to betake themſelves to the promiſe of the goſpel, therein to take God for their portion. I have given motives already, I will direct how to manage the work.

1. A general direction. Aim at that particularly, and teach them to know God in Chriſt. Never ſatiſfy yourſelves with letting them know, what God is in himſelf, out of Chriſt; for that may ſtrike them with terror, but it will never bring them to him in faith and love. But labour to diſcover to them the glory of God in the face of Jeſus. Shew them Chriſt, and ye ſhew them the Father, for in him the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells. In his perſon, you may let them ſee God's willingneſs to take mankind into union and communion with himſelf; in his offices, how willing he is to teach them, juſtify them and ſanctify them; in his holy birth, what a nature is pleaſing to him; in his righteous life, what a converſation he requires; in his ſatisfactory death, how dreadful his wrath is againſt ſin; and in a word how they may be made holy and happy for ever. Therefore inculcate on them the knowledge of Chriſt. I urge this for three reaſons, 1ſt, Do this, and ye do all to them, 1 Cor. ii. 2. 'I 'determined not to know any thing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified.' When the darkneſs of the night ſits down on the face of the earth, as many candles as are burning abroad, ſo many ſpots of the earth will be enlightened; but let the ſun ariſe, and there will be light over all; for the one ſun will do more than millions of lighted candles. So, whenever Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſeth, that groſs darkneſs which covers the mind, will ſuddenly be diſpelled. There is more of the glory of God to be ſeen in the face of Jeſus, than throughout the whole compaſs of the heavens and the earth, which yet were made to declare the glory of God. Life, eternal life, is in the knowledge of him.

2dly, Neglect this, and ye do nothing for them to purpoſe, John viii. 24. 'If ye believe not that I am he, ye 'ſhall die in your ſins.' That light that is without him is but darkneſs, and the ſparks of knowledge and religion that is without illumination in the knowledge of Chriſt, will leave thoſe that walk in the light of them, to lie down in ſorrow at length. Not one truth is rightly learned, that is not learned as it centers in Jeſus.

3dly, Becauſe the riſing generation is in extreme hazard in this point at this time, beyond what they have been for many years. A religion is like to come in among them, that has no relation to Chriſt and his Spirit, which is in effect but refined Paganiſm. With ſome Chriſt is almoſt dropt out of their practical divinity, and morality in doctrine is juſtling out the goſpel of the grace of God: and hence immorality in practice comes in like a flood. And principles are vented highly injurious to his glorious Godhead.

2. Particular directions are theſe,

1ſt, Acquaint them with God's word. Let your children be learned to read, and your ſervants that cannot read, be ſo charitable as to teach them. And ye ſuch ſervants ſecure that in your hiring of yourſelves. And preſs them, and ſtir them up to read the ſcriptures ordinarily when they can do it. It is recorded of Timothy, to his honour, that 'from a child he had known the holy ſcriptures, 'which are able to make men wiſe unto ſalvation, through 'faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus.'

2dly, Neglect not family catechiſing. Oblige them to get the Shorter Catechiſm, and labour to make them underſtand it by examining them. For which cauſe ye have many good helps laid to your hand.

3dly, Often inculcate on them their ſinful and miſerable ſtate by nature, and the ſalvation for them in Jeſus Chriſt.

4thly, Join practical exhortation with your catechiſing. It might be profitable to cloſe the catechiſing on every queſtion of the Catechiſm upon a particular head, with a ſhort admonition to them by way of uſe. Ex. gr. on the firſt, Well, mind that the great thing ye have to do in the world, is to glorify God; and that the great thing ye have to ſeek, is the enjoyment of him.

5thly, Inculcate upon them, and train them up in a reverence and eſteem of the miniſtry of the goſpel, as an ordinance of Chriſt for the ſalvation of ſinners. And oblige your family to a conſcientious attendance; none of them to ſit at home that are capable of profiting by the word, without a reaſon that will bear weight before God. I urge this the rather, that ſome are trained up in a neglect of it, to the inſnaring of their poor ſouls. Mind the children of Bethel.

6thly, Inculcate and labour to impreſs them with the belief and of the vanity of the world, and the impoſſibility of finding a reſt to their heart in any creature. Tell it them from the word, your own and their experience.

7thly, Inculcate and labour to impreſs them with the belief of the full happineſs to be found in a God in Chriſt, held forth to them in the promiſe of the goſpel. Solemnly aſſure them, that there they may find a reſt to their heart; and that God is offering himſelf to them as ſuch.

8thly, Make known to them, how good a Maſter God is; how pleaſant the way of holineſs is; what an ill maſter Satan is; how contrary and odious ſin is to God, how dear it ſtood Chriſt; how bitter it will be to the ſinner here or hereafter.

9thly, Put them on praying by any means, and teach them to pray, and inculcate on them the neceſſity of it.

10thly, Make known to them how God is a God of exact juſtice, and pureſt truth, and from thence, as ye love their ſouls, endeavour often to inculcate on them, and impreſs them with a horror of injuſtice in the leaſt things, and of lying in any caſe. The ſad way ſome are brought up in theſe points, leave them without any conſcience of common honeſty or truth.

And mind that 'precept muſt be upon precept, pre-'cept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line, here 'a little and there a little.' Iſa. xxviii. 10.

And be not diſcouraged though ye ſee not the fruit. The fruit may come when ye are in your grave. Mind Manaſſeh's converſion, after his godly father was dead.

Now, ye young folk, and young ones, for whoſe cauſe ſo much has been ſaid, I will leave this text, with three words to you, and a great offer.

1. Chriſt and the devil is ſtriving about you. Chriſt is ſtriving for you by his miniſters, your parents, and maſters, that ſhow a concern for your ſoul, and by your own conſciences. The devil is ſtriving to hold you, by his temptations, a vain world, and your own luſts. But the devil is a murderer, the world is falſe, and your luſts are deceitful, which ye will find if ye truſt them.

2. Ye are between the loſing and the winning now. If Chriſt get you when ye are young, ye will ſerve him with life and ſpirit: if the devil prevail, the older ye grow, ye will go the farther from God. For youth goes with a great ſwing right or wrong.

3. Eternity is at ſtake with you; eternal well or wo, according to the ſide ye ſhall chuſe.

I offer Chriſt to you, and declare that he is willing to be yours, and make you happy for ever, and be a reſt to your hearts, Matth. xxii. 4. 'Tell them which are bid-'den, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and 'my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come 'unto the marriage.' Prov. viii. 17. 'I love them that 'love me; and thoſe that ſeek me early, ſhall find me.' Remember this, and ſay Amen.

The Evil and Danger of SCHISM.

A SERMON preached at Ettrick in the Year 1708.

1 Cor. i. 10.

Now I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together, in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment.

THE church of Corinth was now lying bleeding of her wounds, given her not by open and avowed enemies, but by her own children, ſome ſaying they were of Paul, others, that they were of Apollos, &c. The apoſtle applies himſelf to the curing of this rent and broken church, in the words of the text, which is a pathetical exhortation to unity. In the words we have three things.

1. The compellation, Brethren: it is a kindly compellation, whereby he inſinuates himſelf into their affections, or endeavours ſo to do; for it is hard for faithful miniſters to get peoples affections kept, where once diviſions enter. In this compellation there is an argument for unity: he minds them that they are brethren: and it is a ſhameful thing for brethren to fall by the ears, Gen. xiii. 8. 'Let there be no ſtrife I pray thee,' ſays Abraham to Lot, 'betwixt me and thee, &c. for we be brethren;' and Gen. xlv. 24. Joſeph ſays to his brethren, 'See that ye 'fall not out by the way.'

2. There is a moſt pithy obſecration, I beſeech you by the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Paul turns a petitioner to them for the church's peace, and begs of them, as he did of the jailor, that they would do themſelves no harm, and that it might have the more weight with their conſciences, he interpoſeth the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, I beſeech you, ſays he, by the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that, &c. It implies two things. 1. It is as much as if he had ſaid, As ye have any regard to the authority of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath ſo often enjoined peace, unity, and brotherly love to his followers, beware of diviſions. It is not I, (as if he had ſaid,) but Chriſt, the prince of peace, that requires this of you. 2. It is as much as if he had ſaid, As ye love the Lord Jeſus, as ye tender his honour and glory, ſpeak the ſame thing, and let there be no diviſions among you; for the name of Chriſt ſadly ſuffers by your contentions, factions, and diviſions. The apoſtle's beſeeching of them notes his gentleneſs, but withal his vehemency of ſpirit, intreating with them for the peace and unity of the church; he handles their wounds tenderly, yet ſo as they might ſee he was in good earneſt to have them healed. It imports alſo how heavy their contentions were to him, how grateful it would be to him if they would unite, and how grievous, if they ſhould continue their rents ſtill; therefore he obteſts them, and after a ſort adjures them by the name of the Lord, that they ſhould all ſpeak the ſame thing, and let no diviſions be among them: If I cannot obtain this of you for my own ſake, yet let me obtain it of you for Chriſt's ſake. This is the manner of his exhortation.

3. We have the matter of his exhortation, which lies in three things.

1*ſt*, He exhorts them to unity of principles, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing; he beſeecheth them, that they would not vent principles contrary to the truth, and one another: for now, inſtead of unity ſome were crying one thing, and ſome another, like that confuſed multitude, Acts xxi. 34. there was nothing but contradiction and contention among them, till ſome of them came at length to deny the reſurrection.

2*dly*, He dehorts them from diviſions: the word in the Greek is ſchiſms, as ye may ſee in the margins of ſome of your Bibles: the word properly ſignifies a cutting or ſection in a ſolid body, as in the cleaving of wood, when the parts of it before united are rent aſunder. Thus the one church of Corimth was rent aſunder into divers parties and factions, ſome following one miniſter, ſome another; therefore ſays the apoſtle, 'Is Chriſt divided?' As if he ſhould ſay, Why, ſeeing there is but one Chriſt, are there ſo many bodies? Where will you get a Chriſt to head your different and divided party? Through theſe diviſions among them, it would ſeem they had ſeparate communions, they would not tarry for one another. The apoſtle alſo taxeth their diviſions, 1 Cor. iii. 3. 'For 'whereas there is among you envying, ſtrife, and divi-'ſions, are ye not carnal.' Where the word tranſlated diviſions properly ſignifies ſeparate ſtanding, where one party ſtands upon one ſide, and another party on another ſide. It denotes diſſention, wherein men ſeparate one from another.

3*dly*, He exhorts them to amend what was amiſs already among them in that matter, to be perfectly joined together, in oppoſition to their contentions and diviſions. The word in the original is very emphatic, and ſignifies two things, 1. To reſtore disjointed members into their proper places again, Gal. vi. 1. 'Reſtore ſuch an one.' It is a metaphor from chirurgeons ſetting members on joint again; as if he had ſaid, Set ſuch an one in joint again: ſo it aims at healing the church of her rents, reſtoring ſuch as had ſeparate and withdrawn. It ſignifies to perfect and eſtabliſh in the ſtate to which a perſon or thing is reſtored: and ſo it denotes a firm union betwixt the members of that church: he would have them connected together as a body, in which all the parts do fitly cleave together, each of them in its proper place; and withal he adds here the bonds of this union, the ſame mind, that is, the ſame heart, will and affections, as the word mind is taken, and the ſame judgment or opinion anent matters; if the laſt cannot be got, yet the firſt may. From the words we draw theſe following doctrines.

Doct. I. That ſchiſm and diviſion is an evil incident to the churches of Chriſt while in this world.

Doct. II. That profeſſors ought to beware of ſchiſm and diviſion, as they tender the authority and honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Doct. III. Where ſchiſm and diviſion enter into a church, there will be great heats, diverſity, yea, contrariety of opinions, people contradicting one another in matters of religion; That ye all ſpeak the ſame things, &c.

Doct. IV. That however hard it be, yet it is poſſible to get a rent church healed.

Doct. V. That it is the duty of all church members to endeavour the unity of the church, and the cure of rents; and particularly, it is the duty of disjointed members to take their own place in the body again.

Lastly, That ſchiſms and diviſions, as they are grievous to all the ſons of peace, ſo they are in a ſpecial manner heavy and afflicting to faithful miniſters of the goſpel of peace.

Here is work ſhapen out for many days, but I deſign not to inſiſt.

As to the firſt of theſe doctrines, to wit, That ſchiſm and diviſion is an evil incident to the churches of Chriſt in this world; I. I ſhall illuſtrate the truth of this doctrine. II. I ſhall give you ſome obſerves as to the riſe and way of carrying on this ſad plague in churches. And I challenge your attention, and beſeech you by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that, without prejudice, ye will hear and conſider what I am to ſay; and if I ſay any thing contrary to the word of God, reject it; but what I may ſay, as agreeable to God's word, I require it may have place in, and weight with your conſciences. I ſhall endeavour to hold off perſonal reflections, but muſt take liberty freely to handle the cauſe.

I. then, I ſhall illuſtrate this ſad doctrine. Alas! it is written, I may ſay, in letters of the blood of our mother, who cries out, ‘She is wounded in the houſe of her friends.’ This broken bleeding church, expoſed to the laughter of Papiſts and malignants by her diviſions, is a ſad inſtance of it. Now, ſeeing ſome are apt to ſtumble at all religion, by reaſon of our diviſions, and others are apt to pride themſelves in them, I ſhall, for the ſake of both, ſhew, that theſe things are no uncouth, ſtrange, or new things. For which conſider,

1. Theſe things are foretold in the ſcripture. Our Lord Chriſt has given us fair warning, Matth. x. 34, 35, 36. ‘Think not that I am come to ſend peace on earth: I ‘came not to ſend peace, but a ſword. For I am come ‘to ſet a man at variance againſt his Father, and the ‘daughter againſt her mother,’ &c. Not that this is the kindly and native effect of the goſpel of peace, but ſo it proves, by reaſon of the corruptions of men. The apoſtle tells the church of Epheſus, Acts xx. 30. ‘Alſo of your ‘own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to ‘draw away diſciples after them.’ I ſhall only add another ſcripture, 2 Tim. iv. 4. ‘After their own luſts ‘ſhall they heap to themſelves teachers, having itching ‘ears; and they ſhall turn away their ears from the truth,’ &c. From all which we may ſee, that church renters ſhall not be wanting, nor ſhall they want ſucceſs.

2. Conſider the ſad experience of the church in ſeveral ages; I ſhall give you two inſtances out of the Old Teſtament: the firſt you have, Numb. xvi. Even when the church had a Moſes and Aaron in it, there was a violent ſchiſm ſet a-foot in it by Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. That this buſineſs was not ſo much a ſedition in the ſtate, as a ſchiſm in the church, (though I deny not but there was ſomething of ſedition in it, for ſchiſm and ſedition go often together,) is clear from the great cauſe of the quarrel, which was about the prieſthood, as is clear from Numb. xvi. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. which ye may read at your leiſure, but conſider eſpecially the 10th and 11th verſes, where Moſes ſays, ‘And ſeek ye the prieſthood ‘alſo? For which cauſe both thou, and all thy company ‘are gathered together againſt the Lord: and what is ‘Aaron, that ye murmur againſt him?’ Compare with this Jude 11. where the ſeducers, the diſturbers of the church, are ſaid to periſh in the gainſaying of Core. Many were laid aſide into this ſchiſm, Numb. xvi. 19. ‘And Korah gathered all the congregation againſt them,’ viz. againſt Moſes and Aaron. Two of the heads of it, being called to come before Moſes, ſent him a declinature, ſtuffed with ſcandalous defamations againſt him, Numb. xvi. 12, 13, 14. ‘And Moſes ſent to call Dathan and Abiram the ſons of Eliab: which ſaid, We ‘will not come up. Is it a ſmall thing that thou haſt ‘brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and ‘honey, to kill us in the wilderneſs?’ &c. Yea, when God himſelf had inflicted the cenſure on them, the people would not quit their good opinion of them; but as it is in the 41ſt verſe, ‘They murmured againſt Moſes and ‘Aaron, ſaying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord.’ Another notable ſchiſm was that made by the ten tribes, 1 Kings xii. where two things are very remarkable, 1ſt, The riſe of it, their diſſatisfaction with the civil government, whereupon they refuſed to own Rehoboam as their king, and alſo ſeparated from the church of Jeruſalem, who owned his authority, though he was very far degenerate from the piety and wiſdom of David and Solomon. 2d thing remarkable in it, is the way how it was maintained, viz. by prieſts that were not of the ſons of Levi, that is, men who had no right to the prieſtly office. The New Teſtament is ſo full of diſmal accounts this way, that there is not almoſt an epiſtle written, wherein we have not ſomething of church rents and diviſions, exhortations to unity, or ſome one thing or another of that kind. See Rom. xvi. 17, 28. ‘Now I beſeech you, brethren, mark them which cauſe diviſions and offences, ‘contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and ‘avoid them. For they that are ſuch, ſerve not our ‘Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own belly; and by good ‘words and fair ſpeeches deceive the hearts of the ſimple.’ For the 1ſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, read our text and downwards. See the x. xi. and xii. chapters of the 2d epiſtle to the Corinthians throughout, where Paul is put to defend himſelf againſt the ſlanders caſt on him by falſe teachers, and to compare himſelf with them. As to the epiſtle to the Galatians, I need not cite chapter and verſe, the body of that epiſtle being againſt them that troubled the churches of Galatia. Eph. iv. ye have a pathetical exhortation to unity, from ver. 1. to 17. Phil. ii. 1. and downwards, ‘If there be any conſolation in Chriſt, ‘if any comfort of love, if any fellowſhip of the Spirit, ‘if any bowels and mercies; fulfil ye my joy, that ye ‘may be like minded.’ Col. ii. 18. and downwards, ‘Let no man beguile you of your reward,——Where‘fore are ye ſubject to ordinances? touch not, taſte not, ‘handle not; which things have indeed a ſhew of wiſdom,’ &c. The Theſſalonians are exhorted, 1 Theſſ. v. 14. to ‘warn them that are unruly.’ In the 2d epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, chap. ii. 2. there are ſome troubling the church, and ſhaking them in their minds by their doctrine, 1 Tim. vi. 3, 4. ‘If any man teach otherwiſe, ‘——he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about ‘queſtions and ſtrifes of words,’ &c. and chap. i. 6, 7. ‘From which ſome having ſwerved, have turned aſide ‘unto vain jangling; deſiring to be teachers of the law, ‘underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they ‘affirm,’ 2 Tim. iii. 6. the apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome that creep into houſes, and led captive ſilly women;——and that reſiſt the truth, as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ver. 8. Tit. ii. 11. he tells them, ‘he muſt ſtop the ‘mouths of ſome that ſubvert whole houſes, teaching ‘things which they ought not.’ The epiſtle to Philemon, a ſingle perſon, is to unite him and Oneſimus. In the epiſtle to the Hebrews, the apoſtle taxeth ſome that forſook the church aſſemblies, Heb. x. 25. ‘Not forſaking the aſſembling of ourſelves together, as the manner of ſome is,’ James iii. 14. and downwards, ‘But ‘ if ye have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not.—This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, and deviliſh.—But the wiſdom that is from above is firſt pure, then peaceable, &c. And the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of them that make peace. 1 Pet. iii. 8. ‘ Finally, Brethren, be ye all of one mind.’ 2 Pet. ii. read throughout the whole, which treats altogether of falſe teachers. 1 John ii. 19. ‘ They went out from us, but they were not of us.’ 2 John 10. ‘ If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houſe, neither bid him God ſpeed.’ In 3 John 9, 10. we find a Diotrephes prating againſt the apoſtle with malicious words. Read the whole epiſtle of Jude, for I need not cite a verſe or two of it to our purpoſe. See alſo Rev. ii. iii. The church of Epheſus had tried theſe that ſaid they were apoſtles, and were not, chap. ii. 2. Smyrna was troubled with theſe that ſaid they were Jews, and were not, but were the ſynagogue of Satan, verſe 9. ſo was Philadelphia, chap. iii. 9. The church of Pergamos had them that held the doctrine of Balaam, Rev. ii. 14. In Thyatira was Jezebel teaching and ſeducing, verſe 20.

Here is a cloud of witneſſes from whom we may clearly learn two leſſons.

1ſt, That though the apoſtles themſelves were alive to guide and govern the churches, yet they would not be able to prevent ſchiſms, diviſions, and renting of churches.

A ſecond leſſon we may learn from them is, That thoſe who had moſt of the Spirit of God, were of the moſt peaceable temper, moſt tender of the peace of the church, moſt careful to preſerve it where it was entire, and moſt careful to reſtore it where it was loſt.

If we take a view of after times, we ſhall find ſchiſm and diviſion infecting the church. When the Pagan perſecution was over, the fire of contention burnt up the church. Then was that accompliſhed, Rev. viii. 5. ‘ Fire from the altar was caſt into the earth.’ When Conſtantine the great had reſtored peace unto the church, ſhe was miſerably defaced by the Schiſms of the Donatiſts, who ſeparated from the church at firſt, to eſchew the impurity of promiſcuous communion. This ſchiſm laſted more than two hundred years. They held, that men were defiled with the corruptions of theſe with whom they kept church communion, and that there was no true church but their own. That which led them to theſe extravagancies, was, that the church kept in miniſterial communion with her one Cecilian, whom the Donatiſts would have had depoſed; becauſe, as they alledged, that when he was a deacon, he had hindered ſome people to aſſiſt ſome that were in priſon for the cauſe of Chriſt, and that he had been ordained by theſe that were traditors, that is, who had delivered up the Bible to the perſecutors; ſo thinking the whole church polluted with the fellowſhip of this man, and his fellows, they ſeparated.

When the Lord raiſed up Luther to reform the church from Popery, then came in the Anabaptiſts, who rebelled againſt the magiſtrate, and taught ſedition; and withal pretended, that Luther had made but a half reformation, that he had only cut off the branches of Popery, but they would ſtrike at the root. Hence complained that holy man thus, “ It coſts us ten years pains to erect a little church, and then comes one that knows nothing, but to rail on faithful miniſters, and he in one moment overturns all.” And elſewhere he ſays, “ They that received the doctrine of the goſpel from us, even they perſecute us moſt bitterly.” How our own church was thus troubled in the time of former preſbytery, is evident from the writings of worthy men of that time, againſt ſeparation; So we find an act of the aſſembly 1643. appointing to ſearch for books tending to ſeparation. I cannot but particularly remark an act of the aſſembly 1641. ſeſſ. 10. againſt impiety and ſchiſm, wherein they charge all miniſters and members of this kirk, to endeavour to ſuppreſs all impiety, and mocking of religious exerciſes. And upon the other part, That, in the fear of God, they be aware, that under the pretext of religious exerciſes, otherwiſe lawful and neceſſary, they fall not into error, hereſy, ſchiſm, ſcandal, ſelf conceit, and deſpiſing of others, preſſing above the common calling of Chriſtians, and uſurping that which is proper to the paſtoral vocation, contempt or diſregard of the public means, &c. This I take plainly to be meant of what we call fellowſhip meetings, which have been ſo much mocked by wicked men on the one hand, and abuſed on the other hand to ſchiſm, &c. But the aſſembly 1647. ſeſſ. 19. in their directions for ſecret and private worſhip, and mutual edification, for cheriſhing piety, for maintaining unity, avoiding ſchiſm and diviſion, which are ordinarily bound in with the Confeſſion of Faith, towards the latter end of the book, they diſcharge theſe meetings altogether, as you may ſee, in the ſeventh direction, where they ſay, “ Whatever hath been the fruits and effects of meetings of perſons of divers families, in the times of corruption and trouble, yet ſuch meetings of perſons of divers families, (except in the caſes mentioned in the directions,) are to be diſapproved, as tending to the prejudice of the public miniſtry, to the renting of the families of particular congregations, and (in progreſs of time) of the whole kirk.” I bring not in this to ſhew my own judgment anent theſe meetings, but to let you ſee there was a ſpirit of ſeparation going on in theſe days as well as now; and how the fire of diviſion left not this church till ſhe was caſt into the fire of perſecution, is too well known; O that it had from that time left us!

II. I come now to the ſecond thing propoſed, to give you a few obſerves, as to the riſe and way of carrying on this ſad plague in churches. And,

1. I ſay God has his own holy ends in theſe things. By theſe he tries his people, and thereby puniſheth men for the contempt of the goſpel, and not receiving the truth in love.

2. We find ſchiſms and diviſions raiſed in the church, under the plauſible pretext of ſtrictneſs. This was the way how the churches of Galatia were rent in pieces. The corrupt teachers would needs add the obſervation of Moſes's law to the goſpel, as if that were a more perfect and ſtrict way. Thus the corrupt teachers among the Coloſſians pretending great ſtrictneſs, cry, ‘ Touch not, taſte not, handle not,’ Col. ii. 21. This, in part, ſeems to have been the riſe of the ſchiſm in Corinth, which the apoſtle points at in the matter of the Lord's Supper, while he ſays, ‘ Let a man examine himſelf,’ 1 Cor. xi. 28. This was the ſchiſm of the Novatians and Donatiſts brought in of old, in that diſcipline was not exerciſed as they would have had againſt theſe that fell in time of perſecution.

3. There are ordinarily ſome, (I hope I am not ſpeaking to theſe with whom the very ſcripture text will be accounted treaſon:) there are ſome, I ſay, who are at great pains going hither and thither to ſpread the flame, that compaſs ſea and land to make proſelytes. Thus we find ſome travelling from Jeruſalem to Antioch through Syria and Cilicia, to make diſciples, and diſturb the churches, Acts xv. 23, 24. Unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia: Foraſmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, ſubverting you.’

4. We may always obſerve, that one main thing church-renters aim at is to do diſcredit to the miniſters of the goſpel, as if the word were, Fight neither with ſmall nor great but the miniſters; for Satan knows, if once the miniſtry be made contemptible, and their credit ſunk, then they will be uſeleſs; and if once they were laid by as uſeleſs, his kingdom were in a fair way of thriving. Theſe are the wolves, who, though they be in ſheeps clothing, yet diſcover themſelves by barking at the ſhepherds. Look to the epiſtles to the Corinthians and Galatians, and ſee how the renters of theſe churches railed upon the apoſtle Paul; they ſaid he was no lawful apoſtle, hence he is ſo oft put to clear his call, 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2. Gal. i. ii. they ſought a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in him, 2 Cor. xiii. 3. they charged him with levity and inconſtancy, as if his words were not to be regarded, 2 Cor. i. 17. they charged him with walking after the fleſh, 2 Cor. xi. 2. they held him out to be a vain glorious perſon, and a very contemptible man, 2 Cor. xi. 9, 10.

5. We often find they have great pretences to holineſs and attainments above ordinary; ſo they are ſaid to go in ſheeps clothing, and to transform themſelves into apoſtles of Chriſt: and no marvel, for Satan himſelf is transformed into an angel of light, 2 Cor. xi. 13, 14. And it doth not a little favour their deſign, that men who have ſuffered for the cauſe of Chriſt, are ſometimes engaged in it, Rev. ii. 19. where we find Jezebel ſeducing Chriſt's ſervants; for ſometimes even good men may run the devil's errands, and yet be ſaved at laſt.

Laſtly, We may obſerve what characters the ſcripture gives ſuch, 2 Pet. ii. 10. 'Preſumptuous are they, ſelf-willed: they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities.' 1 Tim. vi. 4. 'Proud, knowing nothing, but doting about queſtions,' &c. Rom. xvi. 17, 18. they are ſaid to be 'ſuch as ſerve not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own belly.' They are entertained by theſe 'that have itching ears,' 2 Tim. iv. 3. See how the apoſtle ſtrikes at the root of diviſion, Philip. ii. 3. 'Let nothing be done through ſtrife or vain glory, but in lowlineſs of mind, let each eſteem other better than themſelves.' Men that are irritated by a church, vain glorious or conceity, eſteeming themſelves better than others, are dangerous men, and fit wedges to cleave the church of Chriſt.

Now I ſhall name the ſecond doctrine, and then apply.

DOCT. II. That profeſſors ought to beware of ſchiſm and diviſion, as they tender the authority and honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Let me apply it in the words of our text, Now I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment. Dearly beloved, as ye tender the authority and honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, beware of this ſchiſm and diviſion that is now troubling this church. I foreſee it will be needleſs for me to offer to preſs this exhortation with motives, till I have removed three prejudices out of the way. The firſt is, that they are the ſtricteſt party: the ſecond is, that the church has given them juſt ground to ſeparate: the third is, that their principles are the principles of our covenanted reformation. Some, may be, will be amazed to hear us offer to queſtion theſe things; but I beſeech you conſider what I ſay.

The firſt prejudice then is, That theſe who diſſent and ſeparate from us are the ſtricteſt party. In anſwer to this, conſider there is a twofold ſtrictneſs; a ſtrictneſs in practice, and a ſtrictneſs in opinion. As for ſtrictneſs in the point of a holy practice, life and converſation; though they ſeem in a late printed paper to appropriate the name of the godly to their own party, yet God forbid I ſhould appropriate it to ours. Only I ſhall ſay, that among theſe that conſcientiouſly attend the ordinances this day in our church, there are people as eminent for holineſs of life, that have as much of the exerciſe of godlineſs upon their ſpirits, as any in the nation; ſo far as I can diſcern. I could ſay more to this purpoſe, but that I deſire not to give offence. As for the miniſtry, whatever defects be among them; and though there are many of them with whom I have no acquaintance; yet there are among them, of whom I could ſay, (if it were lawful to ſay it of any man.) O that my ſoul were in their ſouls ſtead! and at whoſe feet I would willingly ſit down and learn the knowledge of Chriſt and practical godlineſs: this I declare to be my opinion of them, however low thoughts many have of them. As for ſtrictneſs of opinious, as to government and church communion, if we meaſure ſtrictneſs according to the dictates of mens own ſpirits, we will yield to them for ſtrictneſs; and ſo would our Lord to the Phariſees, and the apoſtles to the falſe teachers. But if we meaſure ſtrictneſs according to the word of God, we deny they are ſtricteſt, but they are indeed wideſt from the rule. I will follow Chriſt to the ſynagogue of the Jews, and in ſo doing I will be more ſtrict than theſe that ſcruple to follow Chriſt's example, for fear they be involved in the guilt of the corruptions among them; for the nearer I follow Chriſt, the more ſtrict I am, if ſtrictneſs be meaſured according to the word of God. However this is but an aſſertion; but it brings me to the ſecond thing, where I ſhall prove it.

The ſecond prejudice is, That the church has given them juſt ground to ſeparate; and therefore they cry out on the commiſſion of the general aſſembly, for repreſenting them to the world as ſchiſmaticks. To this I anſwer, That it is plain they have made a total ſeparation from us, and refuſe communion with us in ordinances, unleſs it be at ſome times to ſerve a turn. If this their ſeparation from us be a ſin, then their ſeparation is a ſchiſm: but ſo it is, that their ſeparation from us is ſinful, which I ſhall prove by one argument, not to multiply words. The argument is this, Theſe who reject communion in the ordinances of Chriſt with a true church, and ſeparate from her, becauſe of corruptions in her, while, in the mean time, they might keep communion with her without ſin, are guilty of ſchiſm and ſinful ſeparation; this I think will not be denied, for if our thus keeping communion be not our ſin, it muſt be our duty; ſurely it is not indifferent: But ſo it is, that our diſſenters do thus reject communion with us, and ſeparate from us, while in the mean time, they might keep communion with this church without ſin: therefore their ſeparation is ſchiſm, and they are ſchiſmatics. That they might keep communion with us without ſin, that is, without involving themſelves in the guilt of the corruptions of the church, will appear, if ye conſider, that there are no corruptions amongſt us, whether real or pretended, which the church obligeth them to approve or join in the practice of, as terms of communion with her: nor is there any real or pretended truth which they own, that the church obligeth them to renounce as a term of communion with her. This holdeth abſolutely as to the people for laick-communion, as they call it; and I am ſure it has been offered to ſome of them, that they ſhould be allowed to exoner their own conſciences, by proteſting againſt theſe things which they look upon as corruptions amongſt us, if they would but come and join with us. As for miniſterial communion, it muſt be remembered, that the miniſters of this church are obliged to own the Confeſſion of Faith, as the confeſſion of their faith, which is very juſt: and if we will believe the leaders of that party, they own it as well as we; ſo that herein they will move no debate. It remains then that they may keep communion with us without ſin, unleſs mere joining in communion with a church, wherein there are many corruptions, be a ſin, and defile a man. To this narrow point, I think the controverſy betwixt them and us is brought: this I take to be the very foundation of the ſeparation, which if it fall, all falls together with it; and that this is a groſs untruth, I ſhall evince by two arguments. The firſt argument is from Rev. ii. 24, 25. 'But unto you I ſay, and unto the reſt in Thyatira, As many as have not this doctrine,—I will put upon you none other burden; but that which ye have already, hold faſt till I come.' In the church of Thyatira, Jezebel was ſuffered to teach and ſeduce Chriſt's ſervants; for ſuffering of her the angel is reproved, and called to amend this fault. The party that kept themſelves pure are not required to ſeparate; nay, in effect are commanded to continue in the communion of that church; while the Lord expreſsly tells them, He will lay no other burden upon them, but commands them to hold faſt, and yet there is not one word anent their ſeparating to keep themſelves pure. This could not have been, if their keeping communion with the church of Thyatira, in which there were ſuch groſs corruptions, and corrupt members, had been a ſin.

The ſecond argument is from our Lord's example, Luke iv. 16. 'And he came to Nazareth where he had been brought up, and as his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the Sabbath-day, and ſtood up for to read.' What corruptions were in the Jewiſh church in Chriſt's day, ye may find by reading of the goſpels, as great, I dare ſay, as can in any meaſure of modeſty be pretended to be in the church of Scotland; and ye would remember they were a covenanted land as well as we; yet our Lord keeps church communion with them in the ordinances of God; though he joined not with them in their corruptions, he joined with them in the ordinances, and conſequently it was no ſin; and people may keep themſelves from the guilt of corruptions in a church, and yet keep communion with a church wherein theſe corruptions are. Mark, that it was his cuſtom to go to the ſynagogue in the place where he was brought up, for it plainly relates to his cuſtom which he had while he lived a private man in Nazareth, ſeeing it appears from the context, that this was the firſt time he was in Nazareth, after he had entered upon the public exerciſe of his miniſtry; which cuts off that exception, that Chriſt went thither only to preach to them. Nay, afterwards he did not go to their ſolemn feaſts? and we have plain ſcripture for his hearing their teachers, Luke ii. 42. 'And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jeruſalem, after the cuſtom of the feaſt;' and in the verſe immediately preceding, it is ſaid of holy Joſeph and Mary, 'they went to Jeruſalem every year, at the feaſt of the paſſover,' ſo far were they from ſeparating. And in the 46th verſe, 'They found him in the temple, in the midſt of the doctors, both hearing them, and aſking them queſtions.' They that would find this point more largely proved, let them conſult Rutherford's Peaceable plea for Preſbytery, and Durham on ſcandal, and on the Revelation, both proving this point againſt the ſeparatiſts of their time.

I come now to the third prejudice; and I beſeech you bear with me, for if I were to handle this point in an ordinary way, ye ſhould not hear ſo much at once. Our great buſineſs is to preach Chriſt, if we could get leave to do it for our diviſions. The third prejudice, I ſay, is, That their principles wherein they differ from us, are the principles of our covenanted reformation, and that their practices in the points of difference, are agreeable thereto; and ſo they give it out, that they adhere to our National, and Solemn League and Covenants, Confeſſion of Faith, Directory, &c. But we will examine their pretenſions in theſe matters.

Firſt then, As to the National covenant, I ſhall take notice of two things. 1. I find theſe words in the National Covenant, "This true reformed kirk, to the which we join ourſelves willingly, in doctrine, faith, religion, diſcipline, and uſe of the holy ſacraments, as lively members of the ſame, in Chriſt our Head, promiſing and ſwearing by the great name of the Lord our God, that we ſhall continue in the obedience of the doctrine and diſcipline of this kirk." Let any compare with this the aſſembly 1638, their explanation of the National Covenant, as ye have it ſeſſ. 16. of that aſſembly, where repeating theſe foreſaid words of the National Covenant, they ſubſume, "But ſo it is, that Epiſcopal government is abhorred and deteſted, and the government by miniſters and elders, in aſſemblies general and provincial, and preſbyteries, was ſworn to, and ſubſcribed, in ſubſcribing that Confeſſion, and ought to be holden by us, if we adhere to the meaning of the kirk, when that Confeſſion was framed, ſworn to, and ſubſcribed, unto which we are obliged by the national oath, and ſubſcription of this kirk, as is evident by," &c. Now, I would appeal to the conſcience of any ſeparatiſt, who hath knowledge to diſcern things that differ, whether or not we have the ſame doctrine and diſcipline that they had, when that covenant was firſt taken; and the ſame doctrine and diſcipline which the aſſembly 1636, declares to be the doctrine and diſcipline meant in that covenant, unto which we are obliged by the national oath. Seeing then, we have the ſame doctrine and diſcipline, they are by the National Covenant, obliged to join themſelves to this kirk, and to continue in the obedience of the doctrine and diſcipline thereof; and, by their ſeparating, they make themſelves plainly guilty of the breach of this ſubſtantial part of the covenant. And hence, by the bye, appears the unreaſonableneſs of ſpeaking ſo ſlightly of theſe days, the doctrine and diſcipline of that time being that which the National Covenant ſtill binds to. 2. I find, that at the firſt taking of the covenant, they ſwear to maintain the king's authority: as alſo when, with additions, it was renewed in the year 1638, they ſwear to ſtand to the defence of his majeſty's perſon and authority. How agree our diſſenters principles, rejecting the authority of the queen, with this part of the covenant? O, ſay they, "ſhe is not a covenanted queen, and therefore cannot be queen of a covenanted land." Strange prejudice! Was not Scotland a covenanted land long ere the Solemn League and Covenant was heard tell of? Was not King Charles I. king of a covenanted land at that time when the covenant was renewed, and his authority ſworn to be defended? But was he a covenanted king? Did he own their covenant? No, no, upon the contrary, he obliged ſome of their public at London to abjure it, declared the covenanters rebels, and brought down an army againſt them to force them from it.

Apol. Rel. p. 53.

As for the Solemn League and covenant, we find them guilty the ſame way. It binds us expreſly againſt ſchiſm, as well as Prelacy, ſuperſtition, and hereſy. And that they are ſchiſmaticks has been proven before. It alſo bound us unto the maintaining of the king's authority, it being far from the mind of the covenanters to caſt off the authority of the magiſtrate, though it was entered into without the king's conſent. Was it ever the mind of the covenanters that they would own no king, but one that had taken this covenant? I am ſure the Parliament of Scotland thought not ſo, when in the year 1649, they proclaimed and declared to all the world, That Charles II. was king of Britain, &c. their ſovereign lord and king, and this was a full year before he took the covenant: for which ſee the Apologetical relation, p. 64, 65. Nor did the general aſſembly 1649, think ſo, when in their letter to the king's majeſty, (to be found amongſt the printed acts of the aſſembly, in their laſt ſeſſion,) before he was come home, or had taken the covenant, they call him moſt gracious ſovereign; and ſubſcribe their letter thus, Your majeſty's moſt loyal ſubjects, and humble ſervants, the miniſters and elders convened in this national aſſembly of the kirk of Scotland: while in the mean time, they tell him in the ſame letter, That he had ſettled a peace with the Iriſh Papiſts, the murderers of ſo many thouſands of his Proteſtant ſubjects, and granted to them (contrary to the ſtanding laws of his royal progenitors) a full liberty of their abominable idolatry: which, ſay they, cannot be otherwiſe judged, but a giving of your royal power to the beaſt; and they exhort him to lay aſide the ſervice book. And ſeveral other things may be there found, that may make men bluſh of their agreeing with the church of Scotland in her principles in theſe times, and yet rejecting the authority of the preſent queen. And which is moſt lamentable, even theſe worthies which laid down their lives for the covenants, whoſe teſtimonies are recorded in Naphtali, having owned the king's authority, and prayed for him on the ſcaffolds, muſt by this new doctrine be reputed to die as fools, who underſtood not the covenants they were laying down their precious lives for. As to the Confeſſion of Faith.

1. How does their refuſing to pray for the queen, to pay her ceſs, and to own her authority, becauſe ſhe is not a covenanted queen, agree with the Confeſſion of Faith, Chap. 23. § 4. "It is the duty of people to pray for magiſtrates, to pay them tribute and other dues, and to be ſubject to their authority for conſcience ſake; infidelity, or difference in religion, doth not make void the magiſtrate's juſt and legal authority?" I know they will ſay, that article is meant of lands not covenanted: there had been ſome ſhadow of force in this perhaps, if this Confeſſion of Faith had been framed before the Covenant; but upon the contrary, it was long after, and was the product of the Solemn League and Covenant, as appears from the firſt article of the covenant, in theſe words, "And ſhall endeavour to bring the churches of God in the three kingdoms to the neareſt conjunction and uniformity in religion, confeſſion of faith," &c. The Solemn League and Covenant was ſworn in the year 1643, the Confeſſion of Faith was ſent hither and approven by the aſſembly not till the year 1647, for which ſee the act of aſſembly printed before the Confeſſion. And can we think, that theſe who, in purſuance of the covenant, framed this Confeſſion of Faith, to declare to the world the faith of Covenanters, would ſo juggle, as to put in articles of faith which would bind others, but not themſelves?

2. How does their reckoning the taking the oath of allegiance to the queen, one of the ſteps of the church's defection, conſiſt with confeſſion, chap. 22. § 2. A lawful oath, being impoſed by lawful authority, in ſuch matters ought to be taken; and § 3. of the ſame chapter. Yea it is a ſin to refuſe an oath, touching any thing that is good and juſt, being impoſed by lawful authority? It is true, they reckon her no lawful queen; but one error will not atone for another. The famous author of the Apologetical relation was not of our diſſenters mind, (nay, he thought there had been no Chriſtian of their mind, and for ought I know there were none in theſe days,) for, ſpeaking of the reaſons why the oath of ſupremacy, called then, though falſely, the oath of allegiance, ſhould be refuſed, and anſwering this objection, viz. Such as refuſe this oath of allegiance, declare that they are not dutiful and loyal ſubjects, he ſaith, It hath been ſhown what difference there is betwixt this oath and the oath of allegiance; and there is no miniſter or Chriſtian ſhould ſcruple at the taking the pure oath of allegiance, Apol. Rel. p. 259. If it was this author's mind, that no miniſter or Chriſtian ſhould have ſcrupled the oath of allegiance to the king Charles II. when he had taken the covenant, broken it, and overturned the work of reformation; ſure, he would far leſs have thought it a ſin to take the oath of allegiance to the preſent queen.

3. How doth their ſeparating from this church, leſt they be involved in the guilt of the corruptions amongſt us, by keeping communion with us, agree with Conf. chap. 26. § 2. "Saints, by profeſſion, are bound to maintain an holy fellowſhip and communion in the worſhip of God;—which communion, as God offereth opportunity, is to be extended to all theſe, who in every place, call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus?"

4. How doth that principle of theirs, ſometime at leaſt owned by them, though left out in their laſt paper, againſt the power of the magiſtrate to call aſſemblies, agree with Conf. chap. 31. § 2. "As magiſtrates may lawfully call a ſynod of miniſters, and other fit perſons, to conſult and adviſe with about matters of religion?" and with act of aſſembly 1638, ſeſſ. 26. concerning yearly general aſſemblies, where they ſay, "If, in the mean time, it ſhall pleaſe the king's majeſty to indite a general aſſembly, ordaineth all preſbyteries, univerſities, and burghs, to ſend their commiſſioners, for keeping the time and place which ſhall be appointed by his majeſty's proclamation?" They cry out on the incroachment of the magiſtrates in diſſolving of aſſemblies; but as our aſſemblies are conſtituted in the name of Chriſt, ſo are they diſſolved in his name. What diſſolution the magiſtrate makes, is looked upon as the diſmiſſing of the members. There have indeed been incroachments made by the magiſtrate in diſſolving aſſemblies before they had done their buſineſs, and there have been proteſtations made againſt this. And though, in the late paper, they charge the church for not proteſting againſt the incroachments, and recording the ſame; yet that proteſtations have not been made againſt them, is an untruth: but where the magiſtrate's deed is not recorded, neither are the proteſtations recorded. I was eye and ear-witneſs to the magiſtrate's raiſing the aſſembly in the midſt of buſineſs; and proteſtations were made againſt it, and for the church's intrinſic power; and, from every corner of the houſe, members adhering thereto. And this proteſting is recorded in the acts of aſſembly; ſo that, from my certain knowledge, I can ſay, they ſpeak an untruth in that charge in the declinature; yea, I have the acts of the aſſembly by me, where they, or any that queſtion the truth of what I ſay, may read it with their own eyes.

5. How doth their rejecting and deſpiſing the teſtimony of the commiſſion of the general aſſembly againſt the union, and reproaching them for it, becauſe it was given into the parliment by way of humble addreſs, and not by way of proteſtation, agree with Conf. chap. 31. § 5. "Synods and councils are to handle and conclude nothing but that which is eccleſiaſtical, and are not to intermeddle with civil affairs, which concern the commonwealth, unleſs, by way of humble petition, in caſes extraordinary, or by way of advice, for ſatisfaction of conſcience, if thereunto required by the civil magiſtrate?"

Laſtly, How does their crying out on the magiſtrates occaſional appointing of faſts and thankſgivings, agree with the Confeſſion of Faith, allowing the magiſtrate to call aſſemblies? This I ſpoke to formerly in another ſermon. And further, how agrees it with the laſt paragraph of the Directory concerning public ſolemn faſting, where we have theſe words, "Beſides ſolemn and general faſts enjoined by authority, we judge," &c. It may be obſerved how frequently the apoſtles enjoin obedience to magiſtrates, and honouring of them, 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. 'I exhort therefore, that prayers be made for kings, and for all that are in authority.' Rom. xiii. 1. 'Let every ſoul be ſubject unto the higher powers,' &c. Tit. iii. 1. 'Put them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, to obey magiſtrates,' 1 Pet. ii. 13. and downwards. All which may ſhew us, that we have no more right to take away the fifth command out of the decalogue that requires obedience to magiſtrates, than the Papiſts have to take away the ſecond, which condemns their idolatry. I think there is a ſtrange inclination amongſt ſome that profeſs religion, not only amongſt Diſſenters, but others, to ſpeak evil of dignities, and to embrace every thing that may make againſt the magiſtrate; ſo that the murdering of king Charles I. wherewith Preſbyterians are ſlandered by Papiſts and malignants, is owned and adopted by ſome, as if it had been a laudable action. Wo's me, that ignorance, and an inclination to vilify magiſtrates, ſhould give ſuch a handle to the enemy againſt us. If it was ſuch a glorious action, the ſectaries muſt have the glory of it; for it was they, and not Preſbyterians, that did the deed, and it was proteſted againſt, by the commiſſioner both from the church and ſtate of Scotland, for which they were hardly uſed at London; for which ſee Apol. Rel. p. 64. Yea, the general aſſembly of the church of Scotland 1649, gave their teſtimony againſt it in their ſeaſonable warning, ſeſſ. 27. they ſay, "That prevailing party of ſectaries in England, who have broken the covenant, and taken away the king's life, look upon us with an evil eye." And in their exhortation to their brethren in England, "We have obtained this mercy, to be ſtedfaſt to our old principles, in bearing free and faithful teſtimony againſt their proceedings, both in reference to the toleration and government, and the taking away the king's life." And in their letter to the king, "We do from our hearts abominate and deteſt that horrid fact of the ſectaries, againſt the life of your royal father our ſovereign." Both which are to be found in the laſt ſeſſion of that aſſembly.

Let me now renew my exhortation and preſs it. I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among you. Beware of diviſion yourſelves, and give your help to recover, in all tenderneſs, theſe that have withdrawn, and encourage them not in their way. I am perſuaded, that if they were not ſo much countenanced and encouraged by theſe that are the hearers, the number of ſuch would not be ſo great as it is. Let not that itching ear get place with you, ſo as to run away to their meetings, whenever ye have opportunity, and ſo to caſt yourſelves into a ſnare, and to do what in you lies to ſtrengthen the diviſion, and trample on the grave authority of the church, whereby one of their preachers is depoſed from the miniſtry, and the other, who never was a miniſter, his licenſe to preach is declared null and void: and both are certified, that if they repent not, and amend their ways, they ſhall be excommunicated. I know it is ſaid, that it is thought ſtrange, the commiſſion threateneth to cenſure theſe men with the higheſt cenſures of the church, while yet they declare them to be none of their communion. But I think it more ſtrange to find men amuſed with this, who though ſome curates, and others who have been cenſured by this church, who were as little of our communion as theſe men, yet are diſſatisfied that the church does not cenſure more of them, and that more ſeverely. Beware then of this diviſion, I beſeech you.

1. For their ſakes that have withdrawn, that ye may not confirm them in their courſe, tending ſo much to the diſadvantage of their ſouls, in withdrawing from the means of grace and knowledge, which they ſtand in need of, as well as others. O Sirs, be concerned this way; the Lord's people are of an uniting and gathering ſpirit, Iſa. lxvi. 20. 'And they ſhall bring all your brethren for an 'offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horſes, 'and in chariots, and in litters, to my holy mountain.' They ſhall bring them not by force, but by goſpel motives. But ſome of them are far off; what then? yet they ſhall bring them; may be they cannot walk, then ſhall they bring them on horſes; may be they are ſo weak they cannot ride on horſes, then they ſhall get chariots; ſome may be ſo ſickly they cannot come in chariots, then they ſhall come in litters that are for carrying of ſick folk: But by all means they will endeavour to bring them to the mountain of the Lord. Some will not concern themſelves this way, but let every one do as they pleaſe in theſe matters. But O for this gathering ſpirit!

2. I beſeech you for the ſake of thoſe, both amongſt them and us, that have no religion. O Sirs, what ſhould come of the many periſhing ſouls up and down Scotland, that are ſtrangers to Chriſt and their own ſoul's ſtate, if, as theſe men would have it, all ſhould leave us, and we be left to preach to toom walls, or hold our tongues? Will they be able for the whole kingdom?

3. I beſeech you, for your own ſakes, have pity on your ſouls, caſt not away your ſpiritual food; yield not ſo to Satan, who, if he could, would ſet you at variance with the ordinances, becauſe he well knows that men in that caſe may get greater eaſe in their luſts, for it will be long ere a reproof get reached from the pulpit to the fields, or their fire ſides. I am very apprehenſive, that the preaching of the word, as being levelled at peoples ſtate, and caſe of their ſouls before the Lord, has been over hot for ſome, that has made them withdraw from miniſters, as men that tormented them that dwell upon the earth.

4. I beſeech you for the church's ſake, whoſe beauty is marred with diviſion, Cant. i. 6. 'Look not upon me, 'becauſe I am black; my mother's children were angry 'with me.' There is no danger from enemies without like that from diviſions within. The unity of the church would be the ſtability of it, Iſa. xxxiii. 20. 'Thine eyes 'ſhall ſee Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that 'ſhall not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof 'ſhall ever be removed, neither ſhall any of the cords 'thereof be broken.' Though the kingdoms of the world be built on mountains, yet they ſhall fall; but the church when ſhe is a quiet habitation, though ſhe be but a tent, ſhe ſhall ſtand; and though that tent be but fixed with ſtakes, yet they ſhall not be removed; though it be fixed but with cords, not with great ropes, yet none of them ſhall be broken. Diviſion mars reformation in a church. It is very remarkable how diſcipline was weakened in the church of Corinth; diviſions were ſo hot there, the inceſtuous man was tolerated amongſt them, they could not get that work minded or plied for the contentions among them, Zeph. iii. 9. 'For then will I turn to the people a 'pure language, that they may all call upon the name of 'the Lord to ſerve him with one conſent.' There is a reforming time, and then they will ſerve the Lord with one conſent, ſo we read it; but in the firſt language, it is one ſhoulder; they ſhall, as it were, all ſet one ſhoulder to the Lord's work, and then the work will proſper.

5. I beſeech you for miniſters their ſakes. Miniſters are made very odious this day by the dividers of the church; but we hope they have not made ſuch impreſſions on you, but that you, at leaſt ſome of you, will do ſomething for our ſake. Our requeſt is, that ye would not burden our ſpirits with diviſion, that ye would not mar the Lord's work in our hands, and make our work a burden to us; ye ſee that in other things we are not mere ignorants more than yourſelves; that in other things we are not men of proſtitute conſciences more than yourſelves; muſt a man then be accounted quite ignorant of his duty, or one that will go over the belly of his own light, in things properly belonging to his office, juſt becauſe he is a miniſter of this church this day? I am ſure it is a changed world with ſome, to whom it may be ſaid in the words of the apoſtle, Gal. iv. 14.—16. 'And my temptation which was in 'my fleſh, ye deſpiſed not; but received me as an angel 'of God. Where is then the bleſſedneſs you ſpoke of? 'For I bear you record, that if it had been poſſible, ye 'would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given 'them to me. Am I therefore become your enemy, be'cauſe I tell you the truth?'

Laſtly, I beſeech you, for Chriſt's ſake, that ye beware of diviſion. I beſeech you for the ſake of the Prince of peace, who in his ſolemn prayer prayed for the uniting of his people, John xvii. 21. 'That they all may be one,— 'that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me:' for his ſake who, in the night wherein he was betrayed, inſtituted the ſacrament of his ſupper, to ſeal our union and communion with God, and with one another; for his ſake who laid down his life to procure our peace with God, and ſhed his precious blood to unite his elect, Eph. ii. 14. 'For he is our peace, who hath made both one, 'and hath broken down the middle wall of partition be'tween us.' As ye tender the authority, and honour of Jeſus Chriſt, beware of diviſion. As ye would have his bleſſing upon the church and the pariſh, beware of diviſion, Pſal. cxxxiii. 1. 3. 'Behold, how good and how 'pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. 'For there the Lord commandeth the bleſſing, even life 'for evermore.' And ſo I cloſe with that of the apoſtle, 2 Cor. xiii. 11. 'Finally, brethren, farewel: be perfect, 'be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and 'the God of love and peace ſhall be with you.' Now to the God of peace, even to the Father the fountain of peace, to the Son the purchaſer of peace, to the Holy Ghoſt the worker of peace, be glory for ever, Amen.

The Neceſſity and Foundations of a Throne of Grace for the behoof of poor Sinners pointed out and illuſtrated.

The Subſtance of three SERMONS, preached on Sacramental Occaſions. The firſt at Maxton, Saturday, July 4. 1719.

PSAL. lxxxix. 14.

Juſtice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face.

A Moſt ſolemn and awful approach is before us. We have on our hands buſineſs of the greateſt import, buſineſs with a king, ~~a king on his throne,~~ not a mortal king, but the King immortal, ~~the King of the world, the King of the church~~, God himſelf. And whether we conſider our buſineſs or our party, we have no need to trifle. Our buſineſs is for eternity, if we come ~~ſpeed~~ at the throne, we are made for ever; if not, we are undone. Our party is God on his throne, a throne where we ſee a glorious mixture of majeſty and grace, which requires management with utmoſt ſerіouſneſs. In the words we have a glorious view the Pſalmiſt takes of Zion's God and King, in two things.

1. The throne he ſits in, and appears on, which is moſt glorious. Juſtice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. Where let us conſider,

(1.) The perſon ſitting on the throne, it is he to whom the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, even God himſelf, verſe 8. and particularly the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, verſe 19. 'Then thou ſpakeſt in viſion to thy holy One, and ſaidſt 'I have laid help upon one that is mighty.' And he is here repreſented as actually upon the throne; for ſo mercy and truth going before his face, does require it to be underſtood.

(2.) The throne itſelf. ~~I think this~~ by which we text wronged, by expounding the throne of the throne of providence, and God's government of the world in general; the uſhers that go before this enthroned ~~King oblige us to~~ underſtand ~~it of~~ the throne of grace, ſince truth joined with mercy, ~~as here~~, is always underſtood of faithfulneſs in fulfilling promiſes; and ~~the uſhers in the kingdom of providence,~~ are juſtice as well as mercy.

(3.) The habitation of this throne, are juſtice and judgment ~~marg. the~~ eſtabliſhment or place. So that the habitation is not to be taken natively, for that which inhabits the throne; but paſſively, for that in which the throne abides or inhabits. The word is of ſuch a frame as denotes an inſtrument of ſomething, and it properly ſignifies a baſe, ſupporter or ſtay, or foundation, on which a thing ſtands firm, Ezra ii. 68. and iii. 3. Pſal. cxiv. 5. Now juſtice and judgment are the baſe or foundation of his throne, i. e. ſay ſome, juſt judgment is the ſtability of God's throne, namely, in his government of the world. I am not clear of that ſenſe its being ſafe, far leſs genuine: for though juſt judgment is the ſtability of a creature's throne, who is capable to do unjuſtly; I ſee not how it can be thought to be the ſtability of his throne of providence, who can do no wrong, whoſe dominion is founded on his having created all things, and is abſolutely, and in itſelf unalterable.

By juſtice ~~then~~ I underſtand God's juſtice proceeding on righteouſneſs; by judgment, the execution of juſtice againſt ſin; which done, juſtice gives what is due. Theſe are baſes, ~~ſupporters, or ſtays,~~ which the or foundations ~~the~~ throne of grace ſtands on; and ~~you~~ we may eaſily perceive they relate to Chriſt, the Mediator, who became juſtice's party, and on whom judgment was execute for the ſatisfaction of juſtice. The throne of grace could not have been ſet up but on theſe baſes; and were it poſſible they could fail, that moment they failed, the throne would tumble down.

2. The harbingers which go before him, Mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face. Here is,

(1.) Something expreſſed, viz. that mercy and truth go before this enthroned King, as kings have their uſhers who go before them. The one is mercy, i. e. loving kindneſs, bounty, clemency, good-will towards poor ſinners. The other is truth, viz. faithfulneſs in performing all the promiſes made to the Mediator in favours of thoſe that are his. A glorious reviving ſight to a loſt world!

(2.) Something ſuppoſed, namely, that the throne is a portable throne. For theſe go before his face ſitting on his throne. God has a throne of glory in heaven, of juſtice in hell, of providence through the whole world, of grace in the church, Jer. iii. 17. And wherever the goſpel comes, there God comes ſitting on this throne of grace, with mercy and truth going before his face, managing the treaty of peace with poor rebel ſinners, and allowing all his people acceſs to him, 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. '—God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto him-'ſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them,' &c.

DOCT. The throne of grace, which God ſits upon for the behoof of poor ſinners, is founded and ſtands upon juſtice, and on judgment execute againſt ſin, in the perſon of Chriſt the Mediator.

In diſcourſing this doctrine,

I. I ſhall ſhew the neceſſity there was of a throne of grace, for the behoof of poor ſinners.

II. I will ſhew the neceſſity of theſe foundations and ſtays of juſtice and judgment againſt ſin, for the throne of grace to ſtand on.

III. We ſhall conſider the laying of theſe foundations, and the erecting of the throne of grace upon them.

IV. Apply.

I. I ſhall ſhew the neceſſity there was of a throne of grace, for the behoof of poor ſinners. There was an abſolute neceſſity of it for the ſalvation of any of the poſterity of fallen Adam. For,

1. Sin having entered, they could have no more benefit by the throne of law-goodneſs, which runs in that channel, Do this and live, Gen. iii. 22. 24. 'And the 'Lord God ſaid,—And now leſt he put forth his hand, 'and take alſo of the tree of life, and eat, and live for e-'ver.—So he drove out the man,' &c. The whole tribe of Adam turning rebels againſt the throne of heaven, the promiſed life and favour was forfeited, their claim was cut off by that one blow of the firſt ſin, at the rate that they, with the help of angels, could never have been able to recover it, Rom. viii. 3.

2. They were bound over to anſwer at the throne of ſtrict juſtice; for ſo was the law treaty related and determined, Gen. ii. 17. 'But of the tree of the knowledge 'of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it; for in the 'day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.' This made them liable to eternal death for the leaſt tranſgreſſion, Gal. iii. 10. Taſte but of the forbidden fruit, and lo! they muſt die. This made our guilty father, when he heard the voice of God, run and hide himſelf, when he looked to have the ſummons to that awful tribunal put in his hand.

In this caſe there was the utmoſt neceſſity for a throne of grace. A throne of grace, might the criminals cry, elſe we die, we all die, we periſh, we periſh. For, 1ſt, They could have no claim to law goodneſs and bounty, but upon perfect obedience, Gal. iii. 12. And that was put beyond their reach by their ſin, which both broke the law, and waſted entirely their ſtrength for ſuch obedience in time to come. So the Mediator found them without ſtrength, fallen down in their race, and not able to go a ſtep farther, Rom. v. 6. nay, dead in their ſins.

2dly, They were utterly unable to ſtand before the tribunal of juſtice, Pſal. cxxx. 5. and cxliii. 2. If their proceſs be led there, the ſinner falls, he is a condemned man without remedy. No plea can do there, but Not guilty; and that the ſinner cannot plead. The judge is omniſcient, and the criminal can never outwit him, nor deceive him, and keep up the truth from him. And in that court, there is no advocate, interceſſor, mercy; but the ſentence paſſed muſt needs be execute, and the criminal fall a ſacrifice to juſtice: for he is juſt and omnipotent, there is no moving him with cries and tears in prejudice of juſtice, no out braving of him, or making head againſt the judge or the law.

3dly, The criminal once falling under the weight of the ſentence a ſacrifice to juſtice, there is no riſing again, he is cut off for ever, Pſal. xciv. 23. Were it thouſands of rams, or the fruit of one's body, would ſatisfy for the ſin of the ſoul, the ſinner poſſibly might make ſhift; yea, were finite ſufferings ſo, though for millions of years, they would have an end: but the offence againſt an infinite God cannot be expiate but by infinite ſufferings, which lay the criminal's head ſo on the block, that he can never raiſe it up again.

4thly, Juſtice had determined the execution day to be the ſame with the ſinning day, Gen. ii. 17. And had it not been that the throne of grace was erected the ſame day, to which the proceſs was by appeal carried from the throne of ſtrict juſtice, the ſentence had been fully executed that day. When man was fallen, juſtice lays hand on the criminal, and binds him for execution. Everlaſting love minds a throne of grace, to reſcue a ruined world: but where ſhall a foundation be had to ſet up the white throne for the pale criminal? angels nor men could furniſh nothing would bear the weight of it. Then ſaid the Son of God, Pſal. xl. 7. 'Lo I come, in the volume of 'the book it is written of me.' Let my blood, the blood of God, be the baſe of the throne; that will bear it; ſo it was done. Hence ye read, Gen. iii. 6. ‘They heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themſelves from the preſence of the Lord God among the trees of the garden.’ Ver. 15. ‘And the Lord God ſaid unto the ſerpent, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed and her ſeed; it ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel.’ And verſ. 21. ‘Unto Adam alſo and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of ſkins, and clothed them.’

Laſtly, Ye may ſee the neceſſity of a throne of grace for the behoof of poor ſinners, in the hopeleſs caſe of the fallen angels. They were the firſt that ventured to break over the hedge of the law, and no throne of grace being provided for their behoof, they were ruined beyond all remedy, 2 Pet. ii. 4. For at the throne of ſtrict juſtice they muſt anſwer, and they have no acceſs to the throne of grace, Heb. ii. 16. ‘For verily he took on him the nature of angels.’ The ſame had been our caſe, if a throne of grace had not been provided for us.

II. I will ſhew the neceſſity of theſe foundations and ſtays of juſtice and judgment againſt ſin, for the throne of grace to ſtand on. Blind ſinners, who never ſaw ſo much of the ill of ſin, as to make them queſtion, whether the ſaving of ſuch wretches was conſiſtent with God's honour or not, are apt to think the throne of grace might have been ſet up on mere mercy. Nay, but it would ſtand on no other but juſtice and judgment againſt ſin.

1. The juſtice of God would not ſuffer it to be erected but on theſe baſes, Gen. xviii. 25. ‘Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?’ 1 Theſſ. i. 9. ‘It is a righteous thing with God to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you.’ Sinners, by the dictates of their own conſciences, know themſelves to be worthy of death, and that God has a right to puniſh them, Rom. i. 32. And ſhall not a juſt God give ſin its due? Who can expect mercy over the belly of juſtice, or that a throne of grace ſhould have been ſet up on the ruins of the juſtice of God?

2. The holineſs of God and his hatred of ſin would not ſuffer it. Hence ſays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. v. 5. ‘The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight: thou hateſt all workers of iniquity.’ And ſays the prophet, Hab. i. 13. ‘Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity.’ When God does but ſpare ſinners a while, they are apt to think he is like themſelves, in which he ſhews he will vindicate his own honour, Pſal. l. 21. ‘I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes.’ How then could the honour of his holineſs been ſupported, in letting out the fountain of his mercy and grace upon the ſinner, without taking due vengeance upon the ſin?

3. The truth of God was a bar in the way of emanations of mercy and grace without ſatisfaction to juſtice. He ſaid, Gen. ii. 17. ‘In the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.’ What ſhould have come of the truth of God, had not death followed ſin, according to the threatening. True, if one will die for the criminal, he may have life with the good leave of juſtice and truth, the ſurety's death ſatisfying juſtice. But no mercy without ſatisfaction, either by the party or the cautioner.

4. The honour of the holy law, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs, ſtood in the way of erecting a throne of grace but on theſe foundations; it behoved to be magnified, and made honourable, Iſ. xlii. 21. The law's hedge was broken down by the ſinner, it was the fair tranſcript of God's holy nature; and therefore it was impoſſible this gap ſhould always ſtand open, never be made up, and they that made it not only eſcape free, but be received into favour.

Laſtly, If there had not been an abſolute neceſſity of theſe foundations for a throne of grace to ſtand on, they had never been laid at the coſt of the blood of the Son of God, Rom. iii. 25. How can we believe that an infinitely good and wiſe God would have given his own Son, the Son of his love, to a moſt cruel and curſed death, to found his throne of grace to ſinners on, if there had been no neceſſity of ſuch foundations, John iii. 16. ‘God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh but have everlaſting life.’ If there had not been a neceſſity for it, this love does not appear.

Uſe of exhortation. And hence I would direct an exhortation to two ſorts of perſons.

Firſt, Secure ſinners, going on in your ſins, fall in with the fair occaſion of grace and mercy, now put in your hands, while the Lord is come among you appearing on a throne of grace, and offering you his grace and favour through Jeſus Chriſt. Give up with your ſins, ſubmit yourſelves to this glorious king, and ſlight not goſpel grace any more.

Mot. 1. Look to him that ſits on this throne of grace, that is the great King, and you will ſee two things may move you.

1. He is one whoſe favour ye muſt have, elſe ye are ruined; for in his favour only is life, Pſal. xxx. 5. He is the beſt of friends, and of all enemies the moſt dreadful. How can ye live without his favour, ſince ye live on his ground, and live at his coſt? Acts xvii. 25. How can ye die without it; will ye be able to face the king of terrors without peace with the King of heaven? The throne is among you, then make your addreſs.

2. His favour ye may have, for he is on a throne of grace; come and fall down before him on that throne, and make peace, Iſa. xxvii. 5. The golden ſceptre is ſtretched out, come forward and let not the occaſion ſlip, 2 Cor. vi. 2. ‘Behold now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of ſalvation.’ The proclamation of grace is iſſued out for peace and pardon to rebels, ſtand not off, leſt the day of grace go over with you, and that be pronounced, Luke xiv. 26. ‘I ſay unto you, that none of theſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.’

Mot. 2. Look to theſe that go before this enthroned King, and you will ſee two things may overcome your hearts to comply.

1. Mercy goes before it to embrace you, and give you a complete remedy for your miſery; ſlip not the golden ſeaſon, Iſa. lv. 6, 7. ‘Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.’ And it is ſure mercy ye may well truſt to; precious mercy, it is moſt dangerous to ſlight, ſince it iſſues out on a throne ſtabliſhed on juſtice ſatisfied by the obedience and death of Chriſt.

Mot. ult. Look to the foundations this throne ſtands on, and you will ſee two things may determine you.

1. That it is coſtly grace and mercy that is offered you. This white throne had never appeared amongſt us, if Chriſt had not, by his obedience and death, made a foundation for it to ſtand on. Has he been at the expence of his precious blood to rear it up, and will ye ſlight the grace purchaſed at ſuch a rate. Ye cannot do it but ye trample under foot the blood of the Son of God.

2. What ye muſt lay your account with, if ye continue in your ſins, and ſlight the offers of grace from the throne, even juſtice and judgment on your own ſouls for evermore, Heb. ii. 3. Will ye look for mercy, yet not take God's way of mercy in Chriſt. Juſtice will ſtep in betwixt you and mercy, and part you for ever. If this was done in the green tree, much more will it in the dry. If God ſpared not his own Son, how ſhall the ſlighters of him expect ſparing? Nay, another throne ſhall be ſet up againſt you, where the flaming ſword to devour the adverſaries ſhall go for ever before the face of the dreadful Judge, 2 Theſſ. i. 9.

Secondly, Poor trembling ſinners, preſſed with the ſenſe of ſin and unworthineſs, come forward with humble boldneſs to the throne of grace, that ye may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need, Heb. iv. 16.

Look to him that ſits on the throne: it is not an abſolute God but a God in Chriſt, 2 Cor. v. 19. whoſe rays of majeſty ſhoot not forth immediately to you, unvailed; theſe indeed would confound the poor guilty creature; but they ſhoot through the vail of the fleſh of Chriſt; ſo thou may look on them, and be refreſhed with them.

Look to the uſhers which go before him: theſe are not juſtice and judgment with the flaming ſword; theſe would deſtroy the guilty ſinner at the firſt approach; they are mercy and truth, mercy to ſpare and pardon, truth to enrich thee with the King's favours.

Look to the ſtays that ſupport the throne, juſtice fully ſatisfied, judgment execute againſt ſin, in the perſon of Chriſt; hence the waters of mercy flow out, ſay then, 'Spring up, O well; ſing ye to it.' Look to theſe, and ye will ſee an anſwer to all the queſtions that perplex your ſouls.

1. Will ever the Lord look favourably on the like of me? Anſw. Yes, he is on a throne of grace, erected on purpoſe for his looking favourably on the guilty.

2. But I am laden with chains of guilt, can ever I have acceſs to the throne? Anſw. Mercy and truth go before his face, to cauſe all theſe fall off, and bring thee in before him.

3. But is it conſiſtent with the honour of God to pardon ſuch ſins as mine are, againſt ſo much light, love, &c. to put me among his children, who am the worſt of ſinners? Anſw. Yes, very conſiſtent, his juſtice, holineſs, truth, law, his honour ſhall ſuffer nothing by it; Chriſt has laid a foundation, that equally bears up God's honour, and thy ſalvation, even thine.

Psal. lxxxix. 14.

Juſtice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face.

The ſecond Sermon on this Text.

III. WE ſhall conſider the laying of theſe foundations, and the erecting of the throne of grace upon them. Here conſider,

1. The general ends of this new erection.
2. The neceſſary foundations of this throne.
3. How theſe foundations were laid.

FIRST, The general ends of this new erection. For what ends was it to be made and ſet up? The particular ends are as many as the needs of loſt ſinners were, but they may be and are by the apoſtle reduced unto two heads, Heb. iv. ult.

1. The ſaving of ſinners from the wrath of God due to them for their ſins; Let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy. Sin entering into the world made a gap, at which the flood of wrath following might enter, and would certainly enter and ſweep away all before it into the pit, if the gap was not made up. This throne then was to be erected, that mercy might fill up the gap, rejoice over judgment, and ſave the ſinner from periſhing; that the ſinner might be pardoned, his guilt of eternal wrath be taken away, and he taken out of the jaws of devouring death.

2. The making of ſinners poſitively happy in the favour of God for evermore; And find grace to help. By ſin's entering into the world, their right to heaven was forfeited and razed, they could not come thither. They could have no communion with God here or hereafter. Juſtice had drawn a bar betwixt them and it, and ſhut the door never to be opened, but on anſwering ſuch demands of its own, which the ſinner never could do. The throne of grace then was to be erected, that grace might open that door, and let in the ſinner to the forfeited inheritance again; not only that the rebel might get his pardon, but might be reſtored to the Prince's favour, and loaded with benefits to his everlaſting and complete happineſs.

SECONDLY, The neceſſary foundations of this throne. The text ſays, theſe are juſtice and judgment.

1. Juſtice, as diſtinguiſhed from judgment, whereby God gives good unto any, agreeable to the laws of righteouſneſs, which the juſtice of his nature requires to be obſerved in his government of the world, Gen. xviii. 25. 'Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?' This juſtice annexeth his favour and good-will to the obedience, the perfect obedience of his law; ſecures the delivery of a purchaſe upon the payment of a valuable price for it; and cannot admit of the keeping back of any good that is due. This is juſtice, this is what is right, which the Judge of all the earth cannot but do, in ſo far as he cannot but be juſt.

This anſwers the end of making the creature happy, upon due obedience to the great Lawgiver, during the courſe of ſuch obedience. And though there was grace in the firſt covenant, in ſo far as the obedience of innocent Adam was not proportionable to the great reward promiſed therein: yet as it was not comparable to goſpel grace, it might have ſtood upon this ſingle foot of juſtice. But ſuppoſing this foundation laid, it could not have ſupported a throne of grace in favours of ſinners; it could not have ſtood on this ſingle foot, unatoned guilt would have undermined it. Therefore there is a

2d, namely, Judgment, whereby vindictive juſtice is ſatisfied for ſin, for the breaking of the holy law; vengeance is taken upon it in proportion to the offence, which in a ſort is an infinite offence. Hereby,

(1.) Sin is condemned, Rom. viii. 3. Sentence is paſſed from the throne of revenging juſtice againſt it, whereby, according to the law, the curſe is pronounced againſt it, wrath ordained to purſue it in full meaſure, where it is found; and never to leave it, till full ſatisfaction be had of the party, who, by the appointment of God, ſtands anſwerable for it.

(2.) The ſentence is execute, revenging juſtice is let looſe upon it; floods of wrath overflow the party anſwerable for it; the fire kindled by the breath of an angry God preys upon him, till the vengeance is complete, and infinite juſtice has enough, that it can demand no more.

This anſwers the end of ſaving ſinners from the wrath of God, if this foundation can be laid without them.

THIRDLY, How theſe foundations were laid. The whole creation could not furniſh materials for them.

1. Man himſelf could not, for he was quite unable to obey the law perfectly; he had loſt all his ſtrength for obedience by the fall, Rom. v. 6. He could no more do it than he could reach the ſtars with his hand. Beſides, he was quite unable to ſatisfy the juſtice of God for his ſin, by ſuffering; for the puniſhment required, behoved either to be infinite in value, or in duration. The firſt he could not be capable of, being a mere creature; the laſt would leave him for ever ruined.

2. Angels could not neither; for though they were capable to obey the law perfectly, yet they owed that obedience for themſelves, and therefore could not perform it for a fellow creature. Neither could they, being but finite beings, bear infinite puniſhment, ſo as to ſatisfy infinite juſtice; and they were not of the ſame nature with thoſe who had ſinned, and for whom the throne of grace was to be erected.

Thus there being no help among the creatures, God laid help on his own Son, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. When the poor criminals ſtood hopeleſs and helpleſs before the juſtice of God, he undertakes for them, to provide for the laying of theſe foundations of juſtice and judgment, a throne of grace might ſtand firm on.

In order to this the Son of God was incarnate, he becomes man, John i. 14. For this he did ſtrike hands with the Father from eternity; and being it was impoſſible that covenant could be broken, upon the virtue of what he was to do and ſuffer in the fulneſs of time, the foundation was laid, and the throne of grace ſtood firm thereon in Old Teſtament times.

Behold now how he was fitted to make proviſion for theſe foundations of the throne of grace to ſtand on. (1) He was true man, fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bones; a ſon of Adam, Luke iii. made of a woman, a daughter of Adam, Gal. iv. 4. Having a true human ſoul, of which he ſays, 'My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto 'death.' Thus obedience was to be performed to the law; and juſtice ſatisfied with ſuffering, in the ſame nature that had ſinned, Heb. ii. 14.

(2.) He was true God too, 1 John v. 20. and ſo God and man in one perſon, which was neceſſary to make his obedience and death of infinite value, in order to the full ſatiſfaction of juſtice and the law. In this reſpect his precious blood was the blood of God, Acts xx. 28. And from thence did ariſe its virtue to ſupport the throne of grace, for all the gracious purpoſes God has deſigned it for. Hence is that of the apoſtle, 1 John i. 7. 'The blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.' And that, Heb. ix. 14. 'How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?' Thus he made proviſion,

1. For the firſt foundation of the throne of grace, namely, juſtice, by his obeying of the law completely in the ſinner's room, obſerving exactly and giving obedience to its commands. And this for laying the foundation of juſtice to the throne of grace, Matth. iii. 15. 'Thus it becometh us (ſaith Jeſus himſelf) to fulfill all righteouſneſs.' He was holy in his birth, life, and death, Heb. vii. 26. 'Holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners.' And his obedience was,

1ſt, Univerſal, 1 Pet. ii. 22. who did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth. He ſtuck at none of the law's commands. The hardeſt of them he complied with, he loved his enemies, denied himſelf. And all his enemies were bid defiance to convince him of the leaſt trip, 'Which of you convinceth me of ſin?' ſays he, John viii. 46. And he was juſtified from heaven, by his reſurrection from the dead.

2dly, It was perfect in degrees: John xv. 13. ſays Chriſt, 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.' He ſcrued up love, which is the fulfilling of the law, to its higheſt pitch. So that the law could not but ſay, It had enough of work.

3dly, It was conſtant, Phil. ii. 8. ſays the apoſtle, He became obedient unto death. The temptations of Satan, the reproaches of his enemies, the treachery of his friends, could not make him make the leaſt halt in his courſe, 1 Pet. ii. 23. 'When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he ſuffered, he threatened not.' The firſt Adam broke off fair, but quickly ſat up, the ſecond endured to the end.

4thly, It was voluntary, Pſal. xl. 8. 'I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart,' ſays he. The doing of God's will was his meat, John iv. 34. Though he was a man of ſorrows, yet he was never diſcouraged, Iſ. xlii. 4.

2. He made proviſion for the other foundation, namely, judgment, by ſuffering in the ſinners ſtead. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Gal. iii. 13. 'Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us.' He ſet himſelf up for the mark at which the law might ſhoot all the poiſoned arrows, which ſhould have ſtuck in the ſouls of the elect for ever. The fountains of the great deep, and the windows of heaven were opened againſt him; the flood of wrath purſuing the ſins of the elect finding him in the gap, diſburdened itſelf wholly into him. Juſtice put ſuch a load of wrath on him, as made him in the open air, in a cold night, ſweat great drops of blood. And his ſufferings were

(1.) Moſt exquiſite, judgment execute upon him to the utmoſt rigour, Rom. viii. 32. 'He ſpared not his own Son.' Juſtice purſued him from his birth to his burial, and never left him, till it brought him to the duſt of death. His cup was pure unmixed vengeance, it was filled unto the brim, and he drank out the bitter dregs of it. In his greateſt extremity, he could not have a cup of cold water to drink, but vinegar mingled with gall; nay not ſo much as the light of the ſun to ſhine on him, but it hid its head then, becauſe 'light is ſweet to the eyes, and a pleaſant thing it is to behold the ſun.'

(2.) Neverthelеſs they were voluntary, John xviii. 11. Iſa. liii. 7. without the leaſt murmuring, that ſo juſtice might have complete ſatisfaction. He ſtood and anſwered all the demands juſtice and judgment could have of the ſinner, in order to his finding grace in the ſight of the Lord.

Uſe. I would drop a word to two ſorts of perſons.

Firſt, To ſpectators of this ſolemn ordinance. And,

1. Unconcerned ſpectators who have no part in, but look lightly on this ſolemn approach here made to the throne of grace. (1.) Had ye no buſineſs at the throne of grace, that ye ſatisfied yourſelves with mere onlooking? Is not eternity at ſtake with you as well as others? Or is it poſſible for you to be ſaved, without application to the throne of grace in the Lord's own way? Acts iv. 12. ſays the apoſtle Peter, 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.' And if ye value God's grace and favour, is it poſſible for you to undervalue the ſeal of it? (2.) How deep muſt the guilt of ſlighting a throne of grace draw, which coſt ſo dear to ſet it up? Is it not a trampling the Father's love, and the Son's blood under foot? (3.) Ye will not get leave to be mere ſpectators too at the throne of judgment, but muſt come out of your graves with others, and receive your ſentence, which will be dreadful, if ye do not timely make your application for peace with God while on the throne of grace.

2. Spectators duly concerned, whatever has kept you back from this ordinance, do ye not prize the throne of grace? Are ye not reſolved to ply it, for the intereſt of your ſouls for eternity? If ye do not, ye are not concerned ſpectators. If ye do, I tell you, though the communion be over, the throne of grace ſtands, and there is acceſs to it for you; yet there is room. Therefore go away reſolved to ſettle your buſineſs there for eternity while it is day.

Secondly, Communicants, ye have been profeſſing to approach this throne, how went the matter? how managed ye your buſineſs there?

1. It is to be feared ſome have quite miſmanaged it. Theſe are they that have been careleſs, formal, and hypocritical in their management, who have retained ſome underhand management with ſome one luſt or other, whoſe hearts have not opened to receive Chriſt with his whole yoke, and have not given themſelves honeſtly to the Lord. (1.) Ye have loſt a fair occaſion of ſettling your matters for eternity, and God only knows if ever ye have ſuch another; repent, and with all ſpeed manage better, and do in ſecret what ye would have done at the table, as ye would prevent a curſe on your treachery. (2.) It is a ſtout heart that could trifle in ſuch a ſolemn approach to ſuch a throne, founded on juſtice and judgment: ſure ye have not looked to the bottom it ſtands on, elſe it would have commanded dread, reverence and utmoſt jealouſy, as it did in Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 17. 'How dreadful is this place! (ſaid he,) this is none other but the houſe of God, and this is the gate of heaven.'

2. Some have been ſincere in their management, whoſe conſciences cannot but witneſs for them, they have been upright in the main, whatever miſmanagements there have been. Yet,

1. Some ſuch may be drooping for that the king on the throne has hid his face from them, and that they have no token of acceptance from the throne; ſo they fear they have quite miſmanaged. Anſw. (1.) If ſincere in the main, whatever miſmanagements there have been, remember it is a throne of grace, where ſincerity is not marred by unallowable infirmities and miſcarriages, 2 Cor. viii. 12. 'For if there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted, according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.' (2.) If ſin has been made more hideous and frightful to thee by this ordinance, the glorious baſes the throne ſtands on, has not been quite hid. If thy deſire after a God in Chriſt be more enlarged, neither has he that ſits on the throne quite hid himſelf from thee. If thou haſt got a kindly melting of heart for ſin, mercy and truth hath darted their beams on thee. (3.) Be as it will, the throne ſtands, abide ye by it; and what ye have not got, ye ſhall get in God's time, as did the ſpouſe, Cant. iii. 4. 'It was but a little that I paſſed from them, but I found him whom

'my ſoul loveth.' And ye ſhall be made to ſay, Grace times its viſits well.

2. Others may have had ſenſible reviving and refreſhing from the throne. All I ſay is, remember that the leaſt kind glance from the throne is precious; it is not the price of your pains, preparations, tears; it is the price of blood, of the Son of God. Not a ſmile from heaven but comes through the wounds of a Redeemer, not a pardon but is written with his blood. Therefore walk ſoftly, and quench not the Spirit.

Laſtly, To all whoſe hope and expectation is all from this throne.

1. Look on ſin as the moſt frightful evil, and ſtand at a diſtance from it, Rom. xii. 9. 'Abhor that which is 'evil, cleave to that which is good.' Oppoſe to temptations to your former luſts the remembrance of juſtice and judgment the throne of grace ſtands on.

2. Never entertain cheap thoughts of pardon; leave it to them that know not God, his law, nor his goſpel, to think it is but to aſk mercy; and have it. There is no pardon of the leaſt ſin, without the good leave of juſtice.

3. Love the Lord Jeſus, and remember his love, to whoſe obedience and death we owe the throne of grace. Grieve not his Spirit by untender walking; but let his love conſtrain you to live henceforth not unto yourſelves, but unto him which died for you, and roſe again.

4. If at any time ye be obliged either to ſin or ſuffer, chuſe rather the greateſt ſuffering than the leaſt ſin. And to animate you thereto, conſider what Chriſt ſuffered, in order to lay a foundation for the throne of grace.

5. Having ſettled your matters at the throne by a ſincere embracing of the covenant from thence offered, ſtrengthen your faith, and confirm your confidence of grace and ſalvation, by looking to the firm foundations the throne ſtands on.

Laſtly, Be much at the throne by prayer and ſupplication, in the name of Chriſt.

PSAL. lxxxix. 14.

Juſtice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face.

The third ſermon on this text.

I Come more particularly to conſider, how theſe foundations of juſtice and judgment, were laid. When a throne of grace was to be erected for the behoof of poor criminal ſinners, juſtice and judgment ſtand up in the behalf of a holy, but broken law, and require to be ſatisfied of the ſinner, before there could be a throne of grace erected in his favours. And Chriſt anſwers for the ſinner.

FIRST, Juſtice requires of the ſinner, in behalf of the holy law, perfect obedience of its commands, pleading the truth of God, Iſa. xlii. 21. Otherwiſe there can be no throne of grace erected in his favours, ſince it cannot be ſet up on the ruins of the holy law. Therefore juſtice ſays to the ſinner, Matth. xix. 17. 'If thou wilt enter 'into life, keep the commandments.' But this ſinful man could not do; and if the throne of grace cannot ſtand but on this foundation, he muſt loſe the benefit of it for ever. Alas then, muſt all periſh? No, Chriſt anſwers for his own: what they could not, he did. He preſents himſelf, and whatever juſtice has to demand of them for laying this foundation of the throne of grace, he affords. Hear the demands.

1ſt, demand. Thy nature muſt be abſolutely pure and holy; for if the fountain be poiſoned with ſin, how can the ſtreams be otherwiſe? Hence ſays Job, chap. xiv. 4. 'Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not 'one.' And ſays the apoſtle John, Rev. xxi. ult. 'There 'ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth.' Without the law's being ſatisfied in this point, there is no grace nor mercy for thee. Alas, the ſinner can never anſwer this. He has a corrupt nature, he cannot purify it, Prov. xx. 9. He was born in ſin; can he enter again into his mother's belly, and be born again without ſin?

But Chriſt anſwers this demand for his people; the law ſhall have all its aſking. Therefore the Son of God takes to himſelf a true body and ſoul, both ſinleſs. The Ancient of days becomes an infant of days. He is conceived without ſpot by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, in the womb of the virgin Mary, and in due time born without ſin, Luke i. 35. Heb. vii. 26. His nature was not in the leaſt tainted, but abſolutely free from the leaſt ſeed of ſin. Here is now ſuch a birth, ſuch a nature, as the law exacted; ſo that demand is anſwered, that bar in the ſinner's way drawn.

2d demand. Thou muſt obey every command of the broad law. Thy obedience muſt be as broad as the law. If ſome, not all, a curſe ſhall come on thee, and not a bleſſing, according to that, Gal. iv. 10. 'Curſed is every 'one that continueth not in all the things which are 'written in the book of the law to do them.' Alas, what can the ſinner do with this! He has loſt much of the knowledge of the law; many of theſe commands he does not know, yet ignorance of the law excuſes no man, many quite againſt the grain with him, Love your enemies, many that, if his life were a thouſand times lying on them, and he would ſet himſelf to the utmoſt dilgence and watchfulneſs, he will break ſometimes, as by vain thoughts.

Chriſt anſwers this. He obeyed all; fulfilled all righteouſneſs, Matth. iii. 15. did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth, 1 Pet. ii. 22. He made the law, he could not but know it in every point. It was the tranſcript of his own holy nature, he fulfils it in every jot. Hence ſays he, Matth. v. 17. 'Think not that I am come to de'ſtroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to de'ſtroy, but to fulfil.' He gave it external and internal obedience, in heart and life. Its hardeſt commands he baulked not, loved his enemies, denied himſelf. Never an idle word dropt from the holy mouth, never a vain thought could run through his holy heart.

3d demand. Every part of thy obedience muſt be ſcrewed up to the higheſt pitch and degree the law requires: Matth. xxii. 37. 'Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God 'with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all 'thy mind.' If any thing of the due meaſure be wanting, there can be no favour. To be ſincere, to deſire to do better, and to be ſorry at the heart thou canſt not, will not be accepted here, Gal. iii. 10. forecited. Alas, the ſinner ſhall as ſoon reach the clouds with his hands, as this perfection of degrees the law requires. Let him do his beſt, corruption clogs him ſo as he can never mount to the top; let him be praying never ſo fervently, there is ſome coldrifeneſs about him, his faith is mixed with unbelief, his very ſincerity is not without mixture of hypocriſy.

Chriſt anſwers this.. His love to his Father was moſt ſeraphic, moſt ardent and intenſe, it flamed in his holy breaſt to the utmoſt point the law could require. His love to men was incomparable, John xv. 13. He went to the outmoſt boundaries of love with them. Every action of his was abſolutely ſpotleſs, perfectly refined, and without the leaſt mixture of imperfection.

Laſt demand. All this muſt be continued to the end, without the leaſt trip in one jot, Gal. iii. 10. Shouldſt thou live all thy days in a courſe of perfect obedience, but at the hour of death one vain thought run through thy heart, all is gone. Alas! the ſinner can never anſwer this. He cannot keep perfectly right one year, day, hour, minute, if a thouſand hells were upon it.

Chriſt ſatisfied this demand too, Philip. ii. 8. 'He be'came obedient unto death.' The firſt Adam broke fair off, but he tripped quickly; the ſecond continued to the end. The law could never in its greateſt rigour challenge him of the leaſt ſin from the womb to the grave, by day or night, alone or in company. His heart and life ſhone in holineſs, before his Father and the world, in its meridian brightneſs, without the leaſt cloud or ſpot to ſtain it. Thus the firſt foundation of the throne, namely, juſtice, was laid. But,

SECONDLY, Ere the throne can ſtand for all this, the judgment, in behalf of the broken law, requires of the ſinner ſatisfaction for the wrong done to the honour and law of God. Juſt judgment taking the ſinner by the throat, ſays, Pay what thou oweſt. Thou art in debt to the juſtice of God for ſins committed, thou muſt ſatisfy the juſt threats of the law, and bear the curſe: and without this ſatisfaction there can be no grace nor mercy ſhown.

O then, might the ſinner ſay, ‘Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil ? ſhall I give my firſt born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul ?’ Mic. vi. 7. No, theſe are too mean to ſatisfy here, Pſal. xl. 6. ‘Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire:—— burnt offering and ſin offering haſt thou not required.’ But, O ye crowned heads, mighty monarchs, may not ye be cautioners for this debt ? No, they cannot; if they would ſell their crowns, kingdoms, and dig up all the gold in the bowels of the earth, and lay it down, it will not pay their own debt; themſelves muſt have a cautioner, elſe they are ruined. O mighty angels, may not ye rather undertake for this debt, than your fellow-creatures ſhould be ruined ? Alas ! they cannot, they never were able, they would be broken with the payment of the thouſandth part of it, and it would never be paid for them. O high demands of juſt judgment, no creature in heaven nor in earth can anſwer ! Then ſaid the Mediator, Pſal. xl. 7. ‘Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me.’ What are juſt judgments demands of the ſinner ?

1ſt, demand. Sinner, thou muſt ſuffer for the breaking of the holy law, die the death, for the word is gone out of the Lord's mouth, Gen. ii. 17. ‘In the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.’ Alas, how ſhall this be anſwered ? If the ſinner's life go for it, what has he more ? and if death, armed with law vengeance, once get him down, it will hold him down for ever. O may not bearing croſſes do it ? No, juſt judgment requires bearing of curſes, not croſſes. May not tears for ſin do it ? No, it is ſhedding of blood, not pouring out of water, it requires, Heb. ix. 22. ‘Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion.’

But Chriſt ſatisfies the demand. He preſents himſelf to the ſword of juſtice, and judgment is execute on him, Zech. xiii. 7. ‘Awake, O ſword, againſt my Shepherd, and againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts.’ Death armed with its ſting, and all the force a broken law gave it, falls on him, ſheds his precious blood, wounds him to the heart, ſeparates ſoul and body, carries him priſoner to the grave, and lays him in the duſt of death. Death gave him the firſt fall, but becauſe he was God, he riſeth again; and death having got its due, he brings away the keys of hell and death with him.

2d demand, more particular. Sinner, thy ſufferings muſt be univerſal in the whole man: that is juſt judgment, for ſo has thy ſinning been. That body of thine, as the inſtrument of ſin, muſt ſuffer: that head that contrived the miſchief againſt the law, muſt be wounded: that heart, the ſpring of all, muſt be pierced; theſe feet, that have carried thee ſo many black gates; theſe hands, that have wrought ſo much iniquity, &c. And thy ſoul muſt ſuffer chiefly, as being the principal actor in all thou haſt done againſt a holy God. Ah, who can endure this ! it is a thouſand deaths in one.

Chriſt ſatisfies this demand too. He ſuffers in his body: his head is crowned with thorns, and his heart is like wax, it is melted in the midſt of his bowels, Pſal. xxii. 14. His feet, his hands are pierced, his tongue cleaves to his jaws, his bones are out of joint. His body has nothing but ſhame to cover it, his ſtrength is dried up. The wrath of God fell on his ſoul, it was troubled, in an agony: the arrows dipt in the curſe were ſhot into it, till the law had no more to require: Gal. iii. 13. ſays the apoſtle, ‘Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us.’

3d demand. Thy ſufferings, O ſinner, muſt be moſt exquiſite, thou ſhalt have no pity, no ſparing, but judgment without mercy. This is juſt judgment. Ah ! who is able to abide this ? ‘Who can dwell with everlaſting fire ? It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.’

But Chriſt ſatisfied this too. So God ſpared him not, Rom. viii. 32. Though his body was of a moſt refined temperature, and ſo his ſenſes moſt exquiſite, his death was a moſt tormenting death. And in his death he was denied what benefits are not refuſed to malefactors: his eyes were denied the light of the ſun, his ears were grated with mockers and cruel inſults. He got vinegar to drink, mingled with gall. He was in travailing pains, ſoul-travail; he had no help in it, and he died in it.

4th demand. Thy ſufferings, O ſinner, muſt be infinite. It is juſt judgment, for it is infinite juſtice thou haſt offended.’ Ah ! who is able to abide this ? This is killing, ſaddeſt of all a thouſand times. Univerſal, exquiſite, yet infinite ! ‘Who can dwell with everlaſting burnings ?’ It is the hell of hell, and muſt fill a finite being brim-full of deſpair.

But Chriſt anſwers this too. He was God, and therefore infinite; ſo his ſufferings, though not infinite in duration, yet were ſo in value. And what the creature could not have borne but by piece-meal without end, he bears all together.

Laſt demand. Thy ſufferings muſt be voluntary; God hates robbery for burnt offering, Lev. i. 3. If thou at all murmur under all thy ſufferings, it will be new ſin, and mar the acceptance of the ſacrifice, for which juſt judgment will repeat its demands. Ah ! what man can perform this ? The weight of wrath makes the devils and damned to roar. The man cannot bear a fit of the gout or gravel, nay, nor a ſtitch in the ſide, but he is in hazard of impatience.

Chriſt ſatisfies this too, Iſa. liii. 7. ‘He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before her ſhearers is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth.’ In all his ſufferings he never had the leaſt wrong or unbecoming thought of God, Pſal. xxii. 1, 2, 3. Never the leaſt murmuring. He willingly underwent what he was to ſuffer. When his hour came, though he was able to have reſcued himſelf, he would not. He meekly prays for the murderers of him, even when he was in his extremity, Luke xxiii. 34. Thus the demand of judgment is ſatisfied.

And thus were the foundations of juſtice and judgment laid, for the throne of grace to ſtand on. On theſe it was erected, and ſtands for the behoof of poor ſinners.

Uſe 1. O ſinners, come to God, through Jeſus Chriſt, and while God is on a throne of grace to ſettle you, ſettle your buſineſs for eternity at this throne.

Firſt, What is your buſineſs at the throne of grace ?

1ſt, More generally, your great and comprehenſive buſineſs at the throne, is to get God to be your God by a ſpecial covenant relation. Sinners, do not ye know ye have loſt God, that ye are without God in the world ? Eph. ii. 12. Sin has diſſolved all ſaving relation betwixt God and Adam's loſt poſterity; and his wrath abides on the rebels and traitors, while in that ſtate, John iii. ult. But hear good news from a throne of grace to you, who ſtand condemned at the bar of juſtice, Heb. viii. 10. ‘This is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord;——I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people.’ Iſa. lv. 3. ‘Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your ſoul ſhall live, and I will make an everlaſting covenant with you, even the ſure mercies of David.’ And if ye had that ſecured, your buſineſs for eternity is ſecured.

Queſt. How ſhall we manage that buſineſs at the throne ?

1. Believe with application to yourſelves, that this covenant is offered to you from the throne. You have the Lord's own word for it carrying the offer of it to all to whom the goſpel comes, Iſa. lv. 1. 2, 3. ‘Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price. Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread ? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not ? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good,

'and let your ſoul delight itſelf in fatneſs,' &c. If you had a voice from heaven calling, and offering it to you by name, would ye not believe it? Ye have a more ſure word of prophecy, which reaches you among whomſoever you rank yourſelves, Rev. iii. 20. 'Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me.' And chap. xxii. 17. 'Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.' If ye do not believe it thus, in greater or leſſer meaſure, ye cannot accept of the covenant, ſo ye periſh without remedy.

Object, But how can I believe that ever God will be my God, who am ſuch a monſtrous vile ſinner? Anſw. Look to the foundations of the throne, and you will ſee a perfect righteouſneſs, and a complete ſatisfaction for the ſins of all, that will take the benefit of the throne of grace erected thereon. This truth is written in characters of the precious blood of the Son of God, the which, to what purpoſe was it ſhed, if it could not ſecure the buſineſs of any poor ſinner at the throne: 1 John i. 7. 'The blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.'

2. Conſent ſincerely and honeſtly to the covenant, and your buſineſs is done, according to that, Iſ. xliv. 5. 'One ſhall ſay, I am the Lord's, and another ſhall call himſelf by the name of Jacob: and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand unto the Lord, and ſirname himſelf by the name of Iſrael.' Let your ſouls and hearts open this day to the offer, and conſent that from henceforth God ſhall be your God in Chriſt, and ye ſhall be his. And if ye be ſincere in taking him for your God, you will let other gods go; the devil, the world, any luſt and idol, whatever fondneſs ye have had for it, ſhall be no more your god; but caſt it to the bats and to the moles. You will conſent to be his, only, wholly, and for ever, to take part with him and his people, for better and worſe.

2dly, More particularly, it is to get ſupply to all your wants, in that God through Chriſt. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Heb. iv. 16. 'Let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.' Here is the place to ſupply: and think not ſtrange of that, for here is the price of all our mercies, the obedience and death of Chriſt. It is your buſineſs to get,

1. Pardon and peace with God, Rom. v. 1. Weighty buſineſs, that can do no where elſe. Every where elſe, but at the throne of grace, ye will meet the flaming ſword ſtaving you off from pardon and peace. Unpardoned ſin will be a ſinking weight to your ſoul; want of peace of God will hide peace from your eyes for ever, if once they were opened. Come then, and ply your buſineſs.

2. The ſanctifying Spirit, and his grace to make you holy, Luke xi. 13. Without holineſs no happineſs, Heb. xii. 14. without the Spirit no holineſs, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. And as the fire that burnt the incenſe, was fetched from the altar of burnt offering; ſo the Spirit comes to us from a crucified Chriſt.

3. Right to heaven and eternal life, that you may be happy in another world, 2 Cor. v. 1. This is buſineſs abſolutely neceſſary; leave it not till ye be a dying; do it now, and it will be a death bed comfort to you.

Laſtly, A ſettled communication betwixt the Lord and you, that ye may have recourſe to in all the exigencies of your life, Eph. ii. 18. 1 John iii. 3. Ye have an ill world to go through: ye will need both for life and godlineſs: and here ye are to make the ſettlement for both. Ye may come to ſee ſad days of publick calamity, wherein they that cannot draw comfort from heaven, muſt want it for altogether. Settle the communication for that.

Secondly, Motives to preſs this.

1. God is on a throne of grace to tranſact with you in this place; for there the throne is wherever goſpel-ordinances are ſet up, Jer. iii. 27. He has tryſted once more with you here. What ſhall be the iſſue; ſhall the buſineſs betwixt heaven and you now be brought to a period? If not, ye will give a new ſlight to the enthroned King; and what will be the end of that?

2. It coſt the Redeemer his precious blood to erect this throne. If he had not died, we ſhould have had no more throne of grace to come to than devils have. O ſlight not the glorious and coſtly erection.

3. Your buſineſs at the throne is moſt weighty, and neceſſary. It is ſoul-buſineſs; buſineſs for eternity; buſineſs that can be done no where elſe. If it be ſlighted or miſmanaged here, it is gone; and if ſo, nothing can make up the loſs, Matth. xvi. 26. 'For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?'

Laſtly, It is a moveable throne; ſee the text. It will not ſtand always for you. It has ſtood in ſome places, where now it is no more: but the ſometimes churches are unchurched. However, at death, ye will have no more acceſs to it, if ſlighted now. And how ſoon the Lord may remove it, ye know not.

Uſe 2. O Chriſtians, communicants, ye have heard your buſineſs, that is your buſineſs ſpecially at a communion table. Learn here your communion frame, and fetch it from a view of the throne.

1. Come believingly, and with expectation of good at the Lord's hand. Faith has here the moſt firm foundation; juſtice and judgment execute againſt ſin, in the perſon of Chriſt the Mediator. Has he anſwered all the demands; then are the children free; free from wrath, free to the benefits of his purchaſe.

2. Come with repenting, broken, bleeding hearts for ſin, and filled with hatred of it. See what Chriſt ſuffered for your ſins, and ſee the malignant nature of it.

3. Come with love, remembering his love more than wine. Behold how the Redeemer purchaſed the throne for you with his precious blood; and when none in heaven nor earth was to prevent your ruin, he ſtepped in.

Laſtly, Come with thankfulneſs for, and admiration of the glorious work of redemption. Behold juſtice ſatisfied, truth preſerved inviolate; yet mercy and free love magnified, by wiſdom finding out this way.

The Evidences and Cauſes of the Decay of Religion, in the Soul diſcovered, and the Method of its Cure preſcribed.

Two SERMONS preached at Morbottle, at the Celebration of the Lord's Supper there. The firſt upon Sabbath July 19, 1719.

REV. iii. 2.

Strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.

WHoſo looks on the face of the generation this day, in reſpect of religion, may behold a lamentable decay in ſpirituals therein. Great things has God done for us again and again, not only of old, but of late; but alas, amidſt all our repeated deliverances, we are like to pine away under ſpiritual plagues. O that on ſuch ſolemn occaſions we were ſtirred up to ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.

This is a direction given to the church of Sardis, which had a name to live, and yet was dead. A church which had as much as made thoſe about her to reckon her in a good condition; but God knew, and themſelves might know, they were far from it; death had got up into their windows, and was making havock of the ſpiritual caſe of all ſorts. The directions for a recovery in this verſe are two. (1.) Be watchful. Careleſſneſs had ruined all with them; they are called to beſtir themſelves to habitual watchfulneſs. (2.) Strengthen the things which remain that are ready to die. In which you may notice two things.

1. The decaying and declining condition of this church. The things which remain, that are ready to die. In which two things are to be obſerved,

(1.) Religion among them was brought to a very low ebb; they had ſome remains of it with them, but it was remains. Their former ſtock was much ſpent, the holy fire was become very weak. There is no neceſſity of reſtraining this to the really godly among them. It is ſpoken to the body of that church. Time was when there was another face upon them; ſome had life like ſtirrings by common operations of the Spirit, ſome by the ſaving ones: but alas! both ſorts had quenched the Spirit, and were not now what ſometimes they had been.

(2.) That which was among them was like to die out; they were every day growing worſe and worſe; their light was growing dimmer and dimmer; their lamp like to go out.

2. A ſeaſonable duty preſſed on them for their recovering, Strengthen the things which remain, &c. Hold hand to what is left, that it do not go too. Underprop the tottering building, that it fall not down altogether. Repair the breaches that are made in it. Add new fewel to the dying ſpunk, that it may not be extinguiſhed, but nouriſhed and cheriſhed, till it break out into a flame again.

Doct. When religion with a perſon or people is brought to dying remains, it is high time for them to beſtir themſelves, and ſtrengthen theſe remains, in order to a recovery.

In handling this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. When one's religion is decayed to dying remains.

II. What are the cauſes that brings one's religion to dying remains.

III. Wherein lies the ſtrengthening of things that remain, and are ready to die.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. When one's religion is decayed to dying remains. This is a weighty point; and in ſpeaking to it, I ſhall ſhew,

1. Some things, from whence one's religion may ſeem to be brought to dying remains, while really it is not ſo.

2. Some things that will evince one's religion to be brought to dying remains, whether they think it or not.

Firſt, I ſhall ſhew ſome things, from whence one's religion may ſeem to be brought to dying remains, while really it is not ſo.

1. The wearing away of violent affections and commotions of heart in religion, or the ſettling of flaſhes of affection. It is true, ſome never had more of religion; in that caſe indeed when theſe are gone, all is gone, Matth. xiii. 5, 8. But even the true convert may have more gliſtering affections, than are true ones, when religion is new to him: and when theſe ſettle, and he gets more ſolidity of religion, that is not dying remains. James and John could have fired whole towns for Chriſt, Luke ix. 54.; but when they had more of the Spirit, they were not ſo fiery. See that prayer of the apoſtle's, Philip. i. 9. ‘And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more ‘and more in knowledge, and in all judgment.’

Some think, O the love they had to Chriſt! ſometimes they could not have prayed with dry cheeks, &c. But how like ye Chriſt now; would ye not rather part with all than with him? are ye tender of grieving his Spirit? do ye pray weighted with a ſenſe of your ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs? Theſe are not dying remains, as you may learn from what the apoſtle ſays, Rom. viii. 20., ‘Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: for we know ‘not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings which ‘cannot be uttered.’ And 1 John v. 3. ‘This is the love ‘of God, that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous.’

2. One's not being able to go through with duties, with that eaſe that ſometimes they have done before. Hezekiah ſays, Iſa. xxxviii. 15. ‘I ſhall go ſoftly all my years ‘in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.’ Self confidence mixing itſelf with grace, may give more eaſe in the performance of duties than is leel come; the which when it is broken, ſo much of that eaſe is removed. One may have more temptations than formerly; the wind blowing harder in his face, travelling is not ſo eaſy; but the horſe may retain his metal, though he go not ſo cleverly, carrying double as when ſingle. But he who in the courſe of his way is ſtriving, wreſtling, and preſſing forward to perfection, whether with leſs or more eaſe than formerly, is not come down to dying remains.

3. The marks of the decay of natural vigour left on religious duties. Chriſt ſays for his diſciples, Matt. xxvi. 41. ‘The ſpirit indeed is willing, but the fleſh is weak.’ Though the being of religion does not depend on the caſe of the body, yet there is ſuch a cloſe union betwixt the ſoul and body, that the body may be ſometimes a clog to the ſoul in religious duties, which is yet going forward in the way of God, not backward. It is not dying remains with old profeſſors, who, in the way of believing and holy tenderneſs, are preſſing towards the mark; that ſometimes they could have remembered much of ſermons, continued long in prayers, and holy exerciſes, heard or prayed not with dry cheeks; but now it is not ſo. Why, natural vigour is gone, moiſture is dried up, memory is failed, &c. Was David's courage gone, when Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah having ſuccoured him, and ſmote the Philiſtine, and killed him, his men ſware unto him, ſaying, ‘Thou ſhalt go no more out with us to battle, that ‘thou quench not the light of Iſrael,’ 2 Sam. xxi. 17. The man may have as great love to God, hatred of ſin, deſire to remember the word as ever; and the impreſſions abide, though the expreſſions ſlipt from him, as ever. But he cannot make ſo good muſick as he did; not becauſe the ſkill is failed, but the inſtrument is cratcht.

Laſtly, More felt ſtirring of corruption than before. The apoſtle Paul ſays, Rom. vii. 21. ‘I find a law, that ‘when I do good, evil is preſent with me.’ And verſe 24. he cries, ‘O wretched man that I am, who ſhall de‘liver me from the body of this death?’ This did not ſpeak him under a decay, becauſe the ſtruggle was kept up. Corruption may ſtir more than it did, when it has leſs ſtrength than before; as when death ſtrikes to the heart of the patient, there are greater fightings than formerly, not becauſe he has more ſtrength, but that then what he has is put out to the utmoſt.

Secondly, I ſhall ſhew ſome things that will evince one's religion to be brought to dying remains, whether they think it or not.

1. When the conſcience boggles not but at groſs outbreakings. That ſpeaks very little tenderneſs left with the man, that conſcience has little of God's bonds on it; it has ſo little feeling, that it is very near to being paſt feeling, Jude verſe 23. It is not ſo with thriving Chriſtians; Pſal. cxix. 113. the Pſalmiſt ſays, ‘I hate vain ‘thoughts: but thy law do I love.’ The conſcience is the firſt thing that is awakened, and becomes lively, when the Lord is at work with the ſoul; and when it becomes untender, it is an evidence little is left.

The untender conſcience is an unfaithful watch in the ſoul, which may quickly involve it in ruin. (1.) It eaſily lets pieces of one's religion go one after another. (2.) It eaſily admits into one's practice, things that have not the king's ſtamp on them, one after another. And thus churches, and particular profeſſors, haſten to ruin, the ſpiritual building being taken down piece-meal, by growing untenderneſs, Prov. xxv. ult. ‘He that hath no rule ‘over his own ſpirit (ſays Solomon) is like a city that ‘is broken down, and without walls.’

2. When one's conſcience is ſtrait in the circumſtantials of religion, but lax and wide in the ſubſtantials of it, as in the caſe of the ſcribes and Phariſees, Matth. xxiii. 23, 24. where Chriſt ſays, ‘Wo unto you, ſcribes and ‘ Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye pay tithe of mint, and ‘ aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier ‘ matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith,’ &c. Theſe are come to dying remains: for alas! the main channel wherein tenderneſs ought to run is dry, or ſhamefully ſhallow. Where lies the main of religion? In holineſs of heart and life, that is, in moral duty to God and our neighbour, according to the ten commands. All the ordinances of church communion and ſociety, are but means to that end; and therefore they ſhall be laid by, when this is fully attained; and they avail nothing when they do not advance holineſs. Wherefore we ought to be tender of both, Matth. xxiii. 13. ‘ Theſe ought ye to ‘ have done, and not to leave the other undone.’ And whether one make bold with the one or the other, his religion is like the legs of the lame, not equal; and what he has of it is but dying remains.

3. When there is any one thing lacking to the perfection of one's religion in parts: ſee the text. That religion is in a ruinous condition, that is not entire, Jam. i. 4. like the houſe that ſtands wanting the cope-ſtone. The parts of religion are ſo neceſſarily to be joined together, that if one part be lacking, the reſt cannot but moulder away, Mark x. 21. So the whole of what the man has, is but dying remains in regard of what is wanting. And hence it comes to paſs, that as one may bleed to death at a neglected wound, while all the reſt are taken care of; ſo one allowed luſt will eat out the life of the ſoul, whatever execution ſeem to be made on the reſt.

4. When folks ſtrength againſt ſin and temptation is abated; that is a plain indication of a decay, for ‘ the ‘ path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, that ſhineth more ‘ and more unto the perfect day,’ Prov. iv. 18. This is a ſad caſe, for one the longer he lives, to grow the weaker; to be the eaſier enſnared by a ſubtile devil, and deceitful world: that ſays the communication betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul is much ſtopped, if there be any at all; that corruptions wax ſtronger, as the nails grow in decaying folk. May be ye think, ye can pray as well as ere ye did: but indeed ye are not ſo patient, humble, denied to the world, ſelf denied, ye are eaſier led aſide to ſin. Then thou art come to dying remains.

5. When the work of mortification is at a ſtand; the man's not watching his heart, and noticing the luſts riſing there, and ſetting himſelf to mortify them, Rom. viii. 13. A Chriſtian, if he be not going forward, is going backward; if not adding to his ſtock, he is loſing. The garden will quickly be overgrown with weeds, if one be not daily working at them to pluck them up. The leaking ſhip is drawing water, if one be not buſy at the pump, it may quickly be ſwallowed up. The thriving Chriſtian never wants work. Hence ſays the apoſtle, Philip. iii. 13, 14. ‘ Brethren, I count not myſelf to have apprehen‘ded: but this one thing I do, forgetting thoſe things ‘ which are behind, and reaching forth unto thoſe things ‘ which are before, I preſs toward the mark, for the prize ‘ of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.’

6. What though the duties of religion be kept up, yet ſpirituality in duties is gone. Then what is left but dying remains; for ſays our Lord, John iv. 24. ‘ God is a Spi‘rit, and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpi‘rit and in truth:’ and hence ſays the apoſtle, Philip. iii. 3. ‘ We are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in ‘ the ſpirit.’ The ſenſe of God's command does not ſtir up the man to duty; love to the Lord does not draw him to it; God's honour is not in his eye. He goes out in his duty in the power of his gifts, but no panting for the blowings of the Spirit. The ſpirit of the man goes not along with his body; his bodily worſhip, actions, and geſtures, are but naked, yea falſe ſigns; he cloſes his eyes, but his heart is not fixed on God; bows his knees, but his heart is not humbled; he aims not at the enjoyment of God; but all his duties run into the dead ſea of ſelf.

Laſtly, When one is become a ſtranger to the life of faith in Chriſt Jeſus, what is left is but dying remains. The ſoul, if it have any life in that caſe, is in a ſwoon; for ‘ the life which we now live in the fleſh, we live by ‘ the faith of the Son of God,’ Gal. ii. 20. The thriving ſoul is employing him daily, as a Prophet, a Prieſt, a King, growing into him, coming out of itſelf more and more, believing his word, prizing his imputed righteouſneſs as its only hope, and labouring to ſubject the whole ſoul unto him in his commands, and the diſpoſals of his providence. Where there is not, and the ſoul never grows more ſelf denied, more humble, reſigned to the will of the Lord, what is there but dying remains?

II. I ſhall ſhew, What are the cauſes that bring one's religion to dying remains.

1. Unwatchfulneſs, Rev. iii. 2. Careleſſneſs about one's body is oft times fatal to it; about one's ſubſtance, breeds a conſumption in their eſtate; and unwatchfulneſs over the heart, breeds a ſpiritual decay. How many this day have little or nothing left them in religion, which were once in a fair way of thriving, had they but watched their hearts? Alas there are too many enemies waiting to enſnare the ſoul, from without and within, for any to think, they will get their attainments kept, if they do not watch.

2. Spiritual ſloth, Eccleſ. x. 18. This is a bewitching ſin; and if once Satan get men aſleep on this enchanted ground, be ſure they ſhall be robbed and ſpoiled there. Thus the ſpouſe will rather let Chriſt go, than ſet her foot on the cold and wet ground, Cant. v. 3. Every one has a devil's agent within him, buzzing in his ear, Maſter, ſpare thyſelf; and when men ſleep, the enemy ſows his tares.

3. Quenching of the Spirit, 1 Theſſ. v. 19. When the Spirit goes, as he goes, ſo livelineſs goes. Some caſt water on this holy fire, by ſinning againſt light, which waſtes the conſcience, defiles the ſoul, fills it with darkneſs and deadneſs by neglecting of it. Some ſmother it, by taking part with ſome one luſt or other againſt it, and ſo reſiſt and rebel againſt the Spirit, to their own wreck.

Uſe. I ſhall drop a word to two ſorts of perſons.

Firſt, To thoſe with whom nothing remains, but all is died out. Time was ye had convictions and awakenings, at a ſermon, on a ſick-bed, or otherwiſe: but now of all that ever they got at all the communions, ſermons, afflictions, &c. nothing remains, but they are juſt where they were before that time, if not worſe. To ſtir you up to ſee to yourſelves in time, I ſhould poſe your conſciences with the following queries.

1. When ye had your awakening, would ye not have given all the world to have had that undone ye had done? Why then turn back to the ſame courſes?

2. Did ye not reſolve never to be ſo unconcerned about your ſouls as ye had been? what have ye done with theſe reſolutions? were ye fools to make them? or were ye fools to break them?

3. Did ye think God's wrath againſt ſin a mere ſcarecrow then? Why look ye ſo on it now? Could you ſleep ſound this night, if God ſhould ſend you home with his arrows again in your conſcience? They have need of ſtrong armour, that have God for their party.

4. Was not death very terrible then? and is the turning back to your old courſes the way to make it pleaſant now? Is there any more ſand in your glaſs now? It may be farther from your mind, but ſure it is nearer your heels than then.

Secondly, To thoſe with whom ſomething remains, though ready to die. This is the prevailing caſe of the generation, which is in a decaying dying condition, whereof there are ſeveral ſymptoms.

1. The ſtomach for our ſpiritual food is gone. Ordinances are not prized, but deſpiſed. We look as we had got a ſurfeit of the goſpel. Farms and merchandiſe go nearer the heart, than occaſions of communion with God. A ſign we may come to faſt till we find our ſtomach.

2. Zion's children have generally loſt their colour, their beauty gone. That heavenlineſs, ſpirituality, tenderneſs, ſavour of godlineſs, ſometimes about them, is much away. Add ſelf conceit, pride, formality, worldly mindedneſs, and untenderneſs, has made them the colour of the earth.

Laſtly, Death is working powerfully amongſt us by the moſt horrid ingratitude of the generation, for moſt ſignal repeated deliverances, under which the generation is nothing bettered; and by the many melancholy diviſions, whereby we are crumbled into many pieces; all foreboding ruin!

Stir up yourſelves to ſtrengthen what remains with you, and is ready to die. Improve this ordinance, communicants, for ſtrengthening the dying remains, and follow on with any little you have, in order to a recovery.

Mot. 1. The longer ye be a beginning, it will be the harder to recover.

2. If ye do not, ye may come to loſe more, yea, ſome may loſe all that they have, the remaining ſpunk die out.

Laſtly, You may and ſhall get a recovery, if ye will ply the means, Hoſ. vi. 3. ſays the prophet, 'Then ſhall 'we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: his going 'forth is prepared as the morning; and he ſhall come 'unto us as the rain; as the latter and former rain unto 'the earth.'

Object. I meet with many diſappointments, I think I will never recover. Anſw. Conſider the caſe of Job, Job xxiii. and the caſe of the ſpouſe, Cant. iii. Diſappointments ſharpen the appetite, teach honourable thoughts of ſovereignty, and make the enjoyment ſweeter when it comes.

Object. But I grow worſe and worſe. Anſw. The darkeſt time of the night may be before day-break. See Mark ix. 20.——26.

Rev. iii. 2.

Strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.

The ſecond ſermon on this text.

I Proceed to enquire into the cauſes that bring one's religion to dying remains.

4. Slacking in diligence about the duties of religion; Prov. xiv. 15. ſays the wiſe man, 'Slothfulneſs caſteth 'into a deep ſleep; and an idle ſoul ſhall ſuffer hunger.' The heart touched with the finger of God, is like to a watch, which will ſtand, if it be not duly rolled up. Thomas having miſſed one occaſion of communion with Chriſt, his heart was overgone with a power of unbelief. If one be not diligent in the means of ſouls thriving, how can he think his ſoul will proſper? It will be owned, that religion, among the profeſſors of it, is not this day, as it has been: but is it not as ſure, folks are not ſo diligent now, as they were in the thriving times of religion?

5. Doing any thing with a doubting conſcience, doubting whether the practice be lawful or not, Rom. xiv. ult. Venturing forward, though they are not perſuaded in their own minds but it is forbidden ground. This is ſuch a caſting of God behind one's back, as the phraſe is, Ezek. xxiii. 35. that it cannot miſs to give one's ſoul's caſe a fram'd caſt. It quenches the Spirit, gives the conſcience a throw, wounds faith and confidence in the Lord, caſts the ſoul into a kind of ſpiritual palſy, wherein the whole ſpiritual caſe is looſed, nothing firm, and the man decays daily, till recovered by repentance.

But here beware of confounding a doubting and a ſcrupling conſcience. The former hangs in ſuſpence betwixt the two parts of the queſtion, lawful, or not, aſſenting to neither of them. The latter aſſents to one part of it; but there is a certain uneaſineſs, ariſing from ſome difficulties in the matter, inclining the conſcience to the other ſide. In this laſt caſe, one ſhould endeavour to have his conſcience well informed from the word, that the ſcruples may evaniſh: but if after all they remain, in caſe one be ſure from the word, that there is no ſin on the ſide to which the ſcruples tend, they may forbear the action. But otherwiſe they ſhould throw them by, or act even againſt them; becauſe the conſcience has light on the other ſide, and they are but the weakneſſes of conſcience, and without ſolid foundation. If it were not ſo, folk might ſcruple themſelves out of all religion. For it is certain ſome have been ſo toſſed by the wiles of the tempter, ſtriking in with a weak conſcience, that they have ſcrupled, even to pray any more, or eat any more. Though God's expreſs command for praying, and the ſixth command, gave light for praying and eating; yet they had ſuch ſcruples againſt theſe things, that they could not anſwer, and made the light dim. Yet to have followed theſe would have been but to gratify the tempter, and diſhonour God, and foſter the weakneſs of the conſcience. The caſe is the ſame in other duties of reading, hearing, communicating, &c. all which might be ſhovelled away with ſcrupling. There is a caſe, Deut. xiii. 1.—4. 'If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of 'dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder, and the 'ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake un'to thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods, (which thou 'haſt not known,) and let us ſerve them; thou ſhalt not 'hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dream'er of dreams; for the Lord your God proveth you, to 'know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your 'heart, and with all your ſoul. Ye ſhall walk after the 'Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his command'ments, and obey his voice, and you ſhall ſerve him, and 'cleave unto him.' The ſign's coming to paſs could hardly miſs to raiſe ſcruples in favours of his doctrine, yet they were not to be regarded ſo as to be complied with.

6. Worldlineſs and carnality, Jam. i. ult. When one goes aſide from God to the world, he lies down among the lions dens, and the mountains of the leopards; and how can he come away without loſs? Therefore Chriſt ſays to the church, Cant. iv. 8. 'Come with me from 'Lebanon, my ſpouſe, with me from Lebanon: look 'from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and 'Hermon, from the lions dens, from the mountains of 'the leopards.' The world has given many up their foot in religion for altogether; witneſs Demas. And many a good ſtock of grace it has brought down to little thing. And,

1*ſt,* The cares of the world, Luke viii. 14. When the the heart is ſet on the tenter-pins for getting and keeping the world, good motions evaniſh. One cannot hold the gripe of religion, while he takes ſuch a greedy gripe of other things: more than one can graſp heaven and earth at once. They are Beelzebub's flies and waſps, that he ſends to buzz about the ſoul, and diſturb its reſt in the Lord. Hence many, while they are young, and without care of the world, how blooming and lively are they in religion! but when once they come to get a family, they enter into a cloud of cares, and their religion melts away like ſnow before the ſun.

2*dly,* The drenching of the heart in worldly eaſe, comforts, and pleaſures, Luke xxi. 34. Troublous times kept the people of God waking; but now, they find eaſe ſweet, put their hand in their boſom, and it grieveth them to bring it again to their mouth. The warm ſun of worldly eaſe has cauſed men to caſt the cloke from them, which they held faſt in ſpite of the boiſterous wind of perſecution. O deceitful world, that with ſilken cords draws ſouls into perdition! Even lawful things may prove ruining. A very gourd ſtole away the heart of Jonah, and caſt him into a decay; two graceleſs ſons the heart of good Eli.

Laſtly, The entertaining of any one luſt, or idol of jealouſy, Pſal. lxvi. 18. While Samſon lay in Delilah's lap, he loſt his locks and ſtrength; and God departed from him. How many have tampered with ſome boſom luſt, till it has given them a deadly wound? like the fly, flying about the candle till its wings are burnt, and it falls down. Gideon had ſeventy ſons by his wives, but one by his Shechemite concubine; but that one deſtroyed all the ſeventy but one. So one ſin indulged deſtroyeth much good.

III. Wherein lies the ſtrengthening of things that remain, that are ready to die? It lies in two things,

1. In blowing up the remaining ſpunk that is ready to die out, 2 Tim. i. 6. 'Wherefore I put thee in remem'brance, that thou ſtir up the gift of God, which is in thee 'by the putting on of my hands.' It is weak in itſelf, ſtir it up that it may act more vigorouſly. May be ye have nothing but a conviction of ſinfulneſs, and that very weak; hold hand to it, preſs it forward, till it be deeper, and more lively. If conſcience has got the firſt touch, the heart may get the next. If ſin is become uneaſy to the conſcience, it may become a burden to the heart next, and the ſweet morſel be vomited up. May be hearing, or joining in prayer, to purpoſe is gone; but praying alone remains, though ready to die; why, ſtir up that, when alone, pray more believingly, fervently, &c. ſo ſhall you ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.

2. In adding to the remains, 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7. 'And 'beſides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſs; and to godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs; 'and to brotherly kindneſs, charity.' Is there a remaining coal, put to another; that will ſtrengthen the dying remains. O decaying Chriſtians, look about you, and you will ſee ſeveral gaps in your religion; make up theſe gaps, fill up the void ſpaces, if ever ye would ſtrengthen the dying remains. Many one's religion this day is like a city wall, wherein there are many fearful ſlaps, and at theſe the enemy brings in, and carries out, to the ruin of the city, and ay the longer the gaps are not made up they grow the wider: and the enemy has the eaſier acceſs. If ye would ſtrengthen the dying remains, ye muſt repair the wall, and fill up what is the gap; and ſo what remains will ſtand firm. Make up what is wanting in external duties, in internal duties and graces.

Uſe. O decayed Chriſtians, profeſſors, all ye with whom it is come to dying remains, ſtir up yourſelves to ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die. And as for you with whom it is better, who are in a thriving caſe, what is ſaid to them, may be of uſe to you, to look to yourſelves, that ye come not to that paſs.

Mot. 1. Dying remains are not for the work a Chriſtian has to do in the world. Ye have much work, much oppoſition from the devil, the world, and the fleſh, and ye have little time to do it in; ye have need of ſtrength; they that have moſt grace will have enough ado with it.

1. Salvation work is on your hand; hence is that exhortation of the apoſtle, Philip. ii. 12. 'Wherefore my 'beloved, work out your own ſalvation with fear and 'trembling.' How will that be done with dying remains? Faint wiſhes, and languiſhing endeavours, will not work that work. The garden will grow over with weeds, if there be not plying in earneſt.

2. Generation work is on your hands, namely, to be uſeful for God in the world; and not to take up room there for no good purpoſe, according as it is ſaid of David, Acts xiii. 36. that after he had ſerved his own generation by the will of God, he fell on ſleep. But will ever your dying remains make you uſeful for God? Eccleſ. ix. 10. I will ſay two things.

1. Dying remains are very unfit for any time, the beſt of times, there is difficulties in the way to heaven, that will be enough to try the ſtrength of the moſt grown Chriſtian. There is holy violence to be uſed, Matth. xi. 12. There will be the ſtriving to enter in at the ſtrait gate, Luke xiii. 24.; wreſtling with principalities and powers; a race to be run; a good fight to be fought, and victory to be obtained. How will dying remains ſuit theſe?

2. They are eſpecially very unfit for our time we live in: the ſtream of profanity and wickedneſs runs violently among many of this generation; the ſtream of formality, deadneſs, and untenderneſs, among profeſſors, that it will be hard to keep what remains from dying out, if not ſtrengthened, Rev. iii. 4. And the Lord is threatning the generation, as a generation of his wrath, ſo that we are very like to ſee ſuffering times, which our dying remains make us very unfit for; hence is that, Jer. xii. 5. 'If thou haſt run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canſt thou contend with horſes? 'and in the land of peace, wherein thou truſtedſt, they 'wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the ſwelling 'of Jordan?'

Mot. 2. If ye do not ſtir up yourſelves to ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, and recover it, it will be bitterneſs in the end. Sleeping, decaying Chriſtians, if they awake not at the Lord's call, will readily get a ſad awakening. If ye hold on, take heed ye get not,

1. Jonah's awakening, being plunged into a deep ſea ere ye are aware, getting a whale's belly to ſeek ſtrengthening in, for the things that remain. Conſider the caſe of Joſeph's brethren. The Lord will not let a people he has a kindneſs for, ſo decay on, and on, till what remains die quite out. But a midnight cry they will get; and what the word does not, his heavy hand will perform, Rev. iii. 3. 'Remember therefore how thou haſt receiv'ed and heard, and hold faſt, and repent. If therefore 'thou ſhalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and 'thou ſhalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.'

2. David's awakening, over head and ears in a deep mire, ere ye are aware. A fall into ſome ſcandalous ſin, that will make you go halting to the grave. It is a fearful threatening againſt Laodicea, Rev. iii. 16. So then, becauſe thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth. Many keep up the carcaſe of religion, but the ſoul and life of it is gone; and God oven lets them fall, ſo as the world may ſee they were never found at the heart. 'Wherefore let him that ſtand'eth, take heed leſt he fall.'

Mot. ult. It is hard work, but muſt be done. The fire almoſt out is ill to kindle. Ye have all to undo ye have been doing ſince ye went back from God. Ye have been weaving a net to entangle your own feet; building a partition wall betwixt God and you; ſetting up idols of jealouſy in every corner of thy heart and life: ye muſt open out the net, demoliſh the wall, ſacrifice the idols to the jealouſy of an angry God. But it muſt be done, elſe ye will repent it bitterly in time, or in eternity, according as your ſtate is.

What ſhall we do to recover from a decay, to ſtrengthen the dying remains?

1. Labour to work on your hearts a deep ſenſe of the ill of this decaying caſe. Hear God ſaying to thee as to Adam, Where art thou? Conſider how ye are robbed and ſpoiled, and ſnared and taken. How it mars all ye do, your praying, hearing, communicating, &c. And try to bring meat out of the eater, and ſweet out of the ſtrong, when ye obſerve it. (1.) Humiliation of ſoul before the Lord, ſaying with Aſaph, Pſal. lxxiii. 22. 'So fooliſh was 'I, and ignorant: I was as a beaſt before thee.' (2.) Senſe of the need of grace, while ye ſee what ſad work ye make in your decaying condition, crying out with the apoſtle, Rom. viii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who 'ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!'

2. Be ſenſible of your inability to recover yourſelf, ſaying with Ephraim, Jer. xxxi. 18. 'Turn thou me, 'and I ſhall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God.' Sometimes grace prevents the decaying Chriſtian, and puts him in a fair way of recovery: but all is marred by ſelf confidence, and turning into ſtrength of reſolution, inſtead of going out of one's ſelf to Chriſt. And ſo the reſolution breaks and gives way, and he is where he was before.

3. Believe, accept, or renew your acceptance of Chriſt offered in the goſpel covenant, as if ye had never done it before. And look to him for quickening influences, depend on him for them; to him the Father ſends you for quickening, Rev. iii. 1. And believe the promiſe ſuited to your caſe, and that with application to yourſelf, Hoſ. xiv. 7. 'They that dwell under his ſhadow ſhall return, 'they ſhall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the 'ſcent thereof ſhall be as the wine of Lebanon.' Mal. iv. 2. 'But unto you that fear my name, ſhall the Sun 'of righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings; and ye 'ſhall grow forth as calves of the ſtall.'

4. Reflect on former experiences, muſe on the days when it was better with you, Hoſ. ii. 7. Recal to mind the particular times and places where ye had ſomething of God ye have not now. God ſays to Jacob, Gen. xxxi. 13. 'I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedſt the 'pillar, and where thou vowedſt a vow unto me.' Old experiences ſometimes give a freſh ſmell when handled anew, as in Jacob's caſe, Gen. xxxv. 3. 'Let us ariſe, '(ſays he,) and go up to Bethel; and I will make there an altar unto God, who anſwered me in the day of my diſtreſs, and was with me in the way which I went.' They help to fill the face with holy ſhame. Every one of them comes out with that inſcription, Jer. ii. 13. 'O generation ſee ye the word of the Lord: have I been a wilderneſs unto Iſrael? a land of darkneſs? wherefore ſay my people we are lords, we will come no more unto thee?' They ſtrengthen faith, according to that, Iſa. li. 9. 'Awake, awake, put on thy ſtrength, O arm of the Lord; awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon?'

5. Repent, or renew your repentance, Rev. iii. 3. Search your ways, take a review of your decay in the ſeveral ſteps of it, in the doleful effects of it on your heart and life. Trace it to the ſource thereof; and let your eye affect your heart with indignation againſt ſin, and ſelf-loathing. Humble yourſelves before the Lord, and lament your backſlidings, with ſincere purpoſe to return to your firſt love.

6. Begin forthwith, and watch, Rev. iii. 2. Satisfy not yourſelves to be affected with your decay on a ſabbath, or at a communion ſeaſon, and to ſtuff your prayers with dry unactive complaints of deadneſs and decay; but forthwith ſet your watch, and call in your heart from its wandering. Watch heart, life, the whole man; watch the beginnings of a revival, and blow the coal, Hoſ. vi. 3.

7. Conſider the ſigns of the times, as did Noah, Heb. xi. 7. who 'by faith being warned of God, of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe.' Behold how the harveſt ripens for the ſickle of wrath. Look over your bed, and ſee how the houſe is like to go up in a fire about your heads, that ye may bend your feet. Concern about the public, not improven for the behoof of one's ſoul, is little worth.

8. Make uſe of godly conference. It is ſaid, Luke xxiv. 15. 'While the two diſciples communed together, and reaſoned, Jeſus himſelf drew near, and went with them.' Converſe with lively Chriſtians is very upſtirring, Prov. xiii. 20. Theſe are rare, ye may ſay: but ye that ever had any experience of religion, tell your caſe one to another, and though you and your fellow be both alike, two cold flint ſtones ſtruck together may produce fire. See Prov. xxvii. 17. Eccleſ. iv. 9, 10, 11. Chriſt ſent out his diſciples by pairs.

9. Fix your eyes on the particular ills of your heart, and purſue them with the knife of mortification, Gal. v. 24. Theſe are the ſuckers that draw away the ſap from thy ſoul, and have made it wither. And be ſure, as any of them thrives, ye will decay. And beguile not yourſelf with what you call your weak ſide; for if ever ye ſee heaven, ye muſt get above it, Matth. v. 29. Remember what is written, Mark x. 21. 'Then Jeſus beholding him, loved him, and ſaid unto him, One thing thou lackeſt; go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor: and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven; and come, take up the croſs, and follow me.'

Laſtly, Be much in prayer, fervent in it, Rom. xii. 11. If your hearts be dead, yet violent them to livelineſs, if I may ſo ſay. One benumbed with cold, going becomes capable to run, and running gathers heat. Stint not yourſelves to morning and evening prayers; but take occaſions between hands, if ye would thrive, and can get them. Uſe ſecret faſting and prayer; a moſt proper remedy for the worſt of decays; for ſome devils are not caſt out but by prayer and faſting.
